A new horse disease has made its appearance in New York State and is baffling the veterinary surgeons. The horses are attacked with a cough, have a high fever, and in some instances go blind; their limbs get stiff and they sweat profusely, refuse food and their eyes grow dull and heavy. The disease is said to be contagious.

At the time of the January closing of the Coney Island Stakes it was announced that three purse races a day would be given, with $600, $750 and $1,000 added, respectively. The action of the Brooklyn Jockey Club in giving no purse of less than $1,000 has compelled the club to change this programme, however, and the purses and over-night handicaps have either $1,000 or $1,250 added in each case.

Albert Cooper, who started East last Monday from Sacramento, has received a commission to purchase a horse which in his opinion may be liable to win the first money in the big Fresno purse. He is not restricted as to price, and Albert says he will bring back a winner sure.

Matthew Woodland, of Patterson, N. J., who has imported a number of highly-bred English race horses, has just received one from England named Earl Clifden II. He is a handsome bay horse, 16 hands high, and is by the celebrated Blair Athol, out of Curiosity, by Lord Clifden, dam Doorah, by the great Hermit. The horse has never raced, but will be valuable for stud purposes.

The Hollister Free Lance says that during the few months that the Hollister Horse Market has been held under the auspices of the Board of Trade, horses valued at over $22,000 have been sold through the direct medium of the market, the buyers being almost entirely from outside the country.

Col Clarke, of the St. Louis Sporting News, is inclined to discredit the statement that J. B. Haggin has a ranch in Kern County of over 400,000 acres, in addition to one of nearly 45,000 in the Sacramento Valley. Of Tom Gallagher, who makes the above statement in the Chicago Tribune, Col Clarke says: If it were not that we know Tom as a conservative fellow we would pronounce this tale of Haggin's farm a fairy tale.

Most jockeys die poor, although a majority of them earn large sums of money. The late Fred Archer, however, was a notable exception in England, and of our own "knights of the pigskin" Hayward, Garrison, McLaughlin and Donahue are nicely provided for. But look back at the boys who are dead and gone—Bobby Swim, Dan Sparling, Johnny Spellman, Kilpatrick and hosts of others who made money by the hatful, but who died in absolute poverty.

Cutler and Whitney have had their hands full this week attending to commissions on the Suburban and American Derby. Several large amounts have been placed on Don Jose to win at Chicago, while Sorrento has also had some support, both East and West. Aurelia is picking up in favor as a candidate for the Suburban, on account of her late running. Badge and Prince Royal are still thought to have the best chance.

Phil Dwyer, Jr., son of President Dwyer, of the Brooklyn Jockey Club, who made his first mount at Gravesend, riding Bella B. of the Brooklyn Stable, was only beaten for first place by a head. Bella B. is a filly with considerable temper, and Phil Jr.'s riding was much applauded as he passed under the wire. Young Dwyer is said to have modelled his style of riding much after that of McLaughlin, who was connected with the Dwyers for so many years.

The down-town pool-rooms were closed at St. Louis last Saturday from 1 to 6 o'clock P. M., and they will not be open on any afternoon during the race meeting at the fair ground's track. This arrangement was brought about, it is said, by an understanding between Mr. Charles Green, President of the Jockey Club, and the proprietors of the rooms, most of whom are members of the Western Bookmakers' Association. The pool privileges at the track this year were sold to that organization, and all of the St. Louis bookmakers did business at the track Saturday.

Archie Stevenson, the owner of Susie S., who was killed at the Sacramento Race Track a few months ago, came down from the Capital city on Wednesday to see if he could arrange a compromise with Senator Hearst, instead of entering suit for the loss of the mare. It will be remembered that she had her back broken by being run into on the track by one of Senator Hearst's Australian colts, and at the same time Jockey Cooper was severely injured. Up to the time of going to press we had not heard what result was arrived at.

A short time prior to the last meeting of the Blood Horse Association, I purchased a pair of field glasses from Hirsch, Kahn & Co., 333 Kearney street, which are the very best I ever looked through. The firm informs me that they have secured a fine line of the same make, which will be offered extremely low for a few weeks. I can recommend intending purchasers to call and see these superb glasses before buying elsewhere.

Jockey Turner died last week at West Side Park, Chicago, from concussion of the brain. Enoch was superstitious. He always said he would die in the saddle, but not alone, and his prediction came true. Saratoga, his mount, broke a leg and was killed on the track. Enoch was upward of 45 years old. He was a good jock, and liked by all who knew him. He leaves a wife and two children in very comfortable circumstances. His home was in Southern Illinois.

On July 4th there will be a number of races given at Madera, Fresno Co. The opening event is said to be a half mile dash, free for all, with $200 added money. Then comes a 600 yard heat race, free for all, with $150 added. Then comes a half mile dash for saddle horses that have never won a race, to this the club adds $50. A 600 yard race will also be given for saddle horses that have won races, to this $75 will be added. Entrance ten per cent., entries close June 30th with R. V. Croskey, Secretary.

Mr. L. H. Titus has been at Latonia keeping his eye on Mr. Baldwin's interests. When a telegram was received from the stable last Saturday to play Mollie's Last for a place in the first race at St. Louis, how the money did rush in; everybody wanted a bit. By the way, speaking of telegrams, a friend of mine received a rather funny message from St. Louis anent the Derby, it read: "Pie, get a big slice, Longfish." The dispatch resulted in many of our local betters eating chicken and white sop, Saturday evening.

Detroit, Michigan, is contemplating a novelty at her meeting this year. President Campau, of the Detroit Driving Club, introduced a motion at a meeting of the directors that was adopted. It was the throwing open of the grounds on the first day of the races, inviting everybody to come in fr of charge. This is done, says Mr. Campau, to give t masses an idea of what the sport is. This was the pl a inaugurated by Col. W. S. King, at Minneapolis, Minn., some years ago, and worked well.

Mr. P. F. Malloy, secretary of the Utah Driving Park Association, writes to say that their annual meeting will probably be held about the 20th of July, thus giving the California contingent a chance to stop off at Salt Lake and try to earn expenses prior to continuing the journey to Montana. There will be in the neighborhood of $8000 offered in purses for trotters, pacers and runners. An advertisement of the meeting will probably appear soon, so that those contemplating stopping off at the Mormon City will understand the terms and conditions of the programme.

The great sale of yearlings from the Kennesaw and Peytonia breeding farms, and also a choice selection sent in for sale by Messrs. Franklin, Shafer, Wheeless, Carter and Malone, is attracting a good deal of attention. They are all finely bred, and there is a strong probability that purchasers will pick up many a rare good one. The sale takes place at Washington Park, Chicago, June 21st, the day before the American Derby is run, which of itself will insure a full attendance when P C. Kidd, the auctioneer, offers the consignment to the highest bidder.

One of the most useful and at the same time perfectly simple inventions of the age is the odometer, which registers with unerring accuracy the distance travelled by any class of vehicles. Messrs. Hirsch, Kahn & Co., 333 Kearney Street, S. F., have been appointed agents on this c ast for this valuable invention which every cyclist, driver, and, in short, every one who travels on wheels ought to have. It is perfectly reliable on all kinds of roads and in every class of weather. This well known firm also furnishes every description of optical glasses of the very highest class and best finish.

J. B. Haggin, Esq., returned from his European trip on Saturday, after staying over a few days in New York watching the cracks at Gravesend. His yearlings will be shipped next Saturday morning from the ranch and sent on to New York. There are quite a number of gentlemen who have made selections of those they would like to own, and commissions to the amount of almost a dozen have already been sent on to New York The colts will be shipped in seven cars, especially prepared for the purpose, the entire consignment being under the guardship of John Mackey. Mr. Haggin will return East in time to attend the sale.

If the story of a Glasgow correspondent can be believed, it pays sometimes to be illiterate, but it really looks too far fetched. He says that a fellow townsman on the eve of the Great Metropolitan Stakes, sent a note to a bookmaker of his acquaintance, asking him to lay starting price odds against Fallow Chat, and that the bookmaker read the horse's name as "Tissaphernes," and paid on it!!! There is no similarity in the names, and in fact it will hardly stand. I lost some few pounds through not writing Lonely plainly once when she was running at Ascot, as it turned out that Lovely was out the same day and was beaten, while Lonely won, but not for me.

At the spring meeting of the New York Driving Club, the following new records were made:

The Sacramento race track habitues have at last brought off a match. For months they have been match making, but none materialized until last week, when Laura Gardner and Welcome were pulled out for a bet of $2,500; distance, one mile. Cook, on Welcome, led by one length all the way, the first half being run in 57½ seconds and the last in 51, hardly good enough form for either of them; the time was given out as 1:46½, but 1:48½ is correct. The race was semi-private, and might as well have been wholly so, for no one had an inkling of it until the starter, judge, stake-holder, clerk of scales, etc., turned up; one personage filled every official position, being a man of many parts, in fact, like Pooh Bah in The Mikado—Lord High everything. How was the pot divided? The backer of Laura certainly got left.

Last Thursday Mr. Winters got back a little of his money invested in racing stock, and is partially recouped for the loss of the Czar. Don Jose won the Chicago Horseman's Grand Challenge Foal Stakes, worth about $4,500 net to the winner, and did it so readily as to show that his chance for the Derby is as good as any.

THE CHICAGO HORSEMAN'S GRAND CHALLENGE FOAL STAKES. ADDED MONEY, $3,010.

To be run for in 1889, by colts and fillies then three years old, the produce of mares covered in 1885, whose owners shall subscribe to the stake, with $1,500 in cash added by the Chicago Horseman Newspaper Co. and $1,510 by the St. Louis Jockey Club. A sweepstake for foals of 1886, by subscription of $10 each for mares covered in 1885, $15 for the nomination of the foal, the produce of such mares, on January 10, 1887, when the foal shall be named and full description given, also the name and pedigree of sire. Starters $100 additional. The second horse to receive $250 out of the added money and 15 per cent. of the stakes, and the third horse $100 of the added money and 10 per cent. of the stakes. Winners of a three-year-old stake of the value of $2,000 to carry 5 pounds extra, of two such stakes 7 pounds extra. The produce of mares or stallions which have never produced a winner prior to March 1, 1886, allowed 3 pounds, of both 5 pounds. Maidens allowed 7 pounds, which allowances and penalties shall not be culmulative. This stake closed on March 1, 1886, with the nomination of 136 mares. Of this number 16 mares were either barren or the produce was stillborn, leaving 120 mares in the forfeit list. On January 10, 1887, in accordance with the conditions of the stake, 71 nominations of foals were made:

One mile and a quarter.

Don Jose, Joe Hooker, Countess Zeika, 118	Winchell	1
Sportsman, Warwick, Clipsa, 115	I. Murphy	2
Laura Davidson, Warwick, Kilmeny, 110		3

Also run Zulu, 113, unplaced.

Betting: Don Jose, 3 to 5, Zulu 3 to 1, Laura Davidson 10 to 1, Sportsman 4 to 1.

Time—2:14¼.

Barnes on Julu jumped off in front, but was soon passed by Laura Davidson, who alternately led to the half mile when they all closed up and coming into the straight Don Jose was second with Davidson in front, when Winchell gave the Californian his head, and striding on he won cleverly from Sportsman, who was brought up with one of Murphy's rushes, Davidson getting the third place, just in front of Zulu.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Sales.

Mr. J. B. Martin, 1157 Folsom Street, San Francisco, Cal., has sold Regent Jock, white fox-terrier dog, whelped April 10, 1889, by Regent Vox (Tackler—Sandy Vic) out of Blemton Saffron (Belgrave Primrose—Flirt), to C. H. Kobicke, San Francisco, Cal.

Golden Gem, white, with half tan head, fox-terrier bitch, whelped August 25, 1888, by Dick (Potterdale—Champion Tassel) out of Norwich Belle (New Leeds Valour—Mischief 3d), to C. H. Kobicke, San Francisco, Cal.

Mr. J. W. Orear, Downieville, has sold to Mr. Henry Boyle, San Rafael, the Gordon setter bitch Dream IV., black and tan, whelped February 27, 1881, by Grouse—Dream II., bred by H. Malcolm, Baltimore, Md.

Names Claimed.

Mr. J. B. Martin, San Francisco, Cal., claims the names:

Golden Boy, for white, black and tan fox-terrier dog pup, whelped January 16, 1889, by Regent Jock out of Beatrice.

Golden Girl, for white, with black and tan spots on head, fox-terrier bitch pup, same litter.

Dr. A. C. Davenport claims the name Echo for his kennel of cocker spaniels, the name to be used both as a prefix and affix.

Dr. A. C. Davenport claims names for cocker spaniel puppies, whelped March 26, 1889, by Jet (Wildair—Bird)—Cherry (Capt. Stubbs—Flossy C.):

Echo D., for black and white ticked dog.
Kisco, for black and white dog.
Jet Echo, for black and white dog.
Misty, for black and white bitch.
Jettie Stubbs, for black and white bitch.
Trixy, for black and white bitch.

Dr. Davenport's Kute.

Dr. A. C. Davenport of Stockton, is going into cocker spaniels with the thoroughness which characterizes all of his operations. He recently sent his stud dog Kute to M. D. Walter at Galt to be trained, and has since received from Mr. Walter the following letter:

"Your dog Kute is getting on finely. Retrieves a ball splendidly, and is going to be a No. 1 retriever. Has got all over his stubbornness. Am sorry that we did not send him over to the San Francisco show. He might have taken first on the bench, for I did not see one that I thought was as good as him. Don't dock your puppies tails, it spoils them for show purposes, and spoils their tail action in field work. Mr. Filebrock's puppy is docked, and it spoils his looks. He is getting along very nice, but don't compare in looks to Kute. If I have time am going to teach Kute some tricks. He would make a fine trick dog."

Anthony; Virginia Trial Club, J. S. Wise. Minutes of last meeting read and approved.

Secretary Vredenburgh read his report as follows:

SECRETARY'S REPORT.

May 23, 1889.

Gentlemen:—Since the last meeting of this club, February 21, 1889, the following clubs have applied for admission as active members:

April 29th, the Pointer Club of America, New York.

April 30th, the German Mastiff, or Great Dane Club, Chicago, Ill.

May 2, the Southern California Kennel Club, Los Angeles, Cal.

May 3, the Long Island Live Stock Ass'n., Huntington, L. I.

The above applications, except the Southern California Kennel Club, being in regular and proper form under the rules of this club, they are eligible to membership, and will be submitted to you for action at this meeting.

By direction of the Advisory Committee, your Secretary drew on Mr. T. D. Wilkins, Treasurer of the Syracuse Kennel Club, for $33, this being the amount due the A. K. C. for registration fees, at its late show in September last, and begs to report that his draft was duly paid.

By direction of the Advisory Committee, your secretary under date of April 6, '89, notified Mr. Alba M. Ide, Secretary of the Rensselaer Kennel Club, of Troy, N. Y., that unless the remainder of its registration fees were paid, on or before the date of this meeting, that the committee would ask this club to take action in the matter. A previous letter, dated March 7, 1889, notified Mr. Ide that twenty-seven entries were due the A. K. C., but up to the present time, the Secretary of the Rensselaer Kennel Club, has not seen fit to reply to either of these communications.

In this connection your Secretary would respectfully request that some action may be taken by this club for the better protection of itself in the proper enforcement to Rule 2. The experience of the past show season has been, that names already registered have been duplicated; that on several occasions dogs of the same name have been shown in the same class, at the same show; that, as in most cases the registry forms are made out by the bench show committees, errors in breeds, names, dates of birth, and pedigrees, are very frequent. Your secretary believes that the present system adopted by a majority of the clubs, in agreeing to register all dogs sent to their shows, at their own expense, is wrong, and should be prohibited. It was intended by the rule that exhibitors should pay their own registration fees, and if such was done, errors could be traced and rectified more readily; and the correct number of registrations would be more liable to reach their proper destination, than is now the case. Failure to register should carry a penalty against the exhibitor, but under existing circumstances it is difficult to determine where the blame lies, with the show committee, or with the exhibitor.

Your Secretary begs to call your attention to unofficial charges, against three members of the A. K. C, that have failed to pay in full the money prizes won at their late shows. This is a matter that needs thorough investigation. In order to fully carry out the provisions of Rule No. 28, and for the better protection of exhibitors, such charges should be made in writing to this office, and then your officers would be in a position to properly enforce said rule. In conclusion, your Secretary would recommend, that the bench show managers in arranging for judges to officiate at their shows, should request said judges to furnish a written report for publication in the Kennel Gazette, and to make such report a part of the duty of each judge. Respectfully submitted,

A. P. VREDENBURGH, Secretary.

On motion report adopted and placed on file.

The Treasurer's report was read as follows:

TREASURER'S REPORT.

Receipts from all sources from Jan. 11th to date...	$4,538 43
Expenses for same period.....	3,578 38
Balance on hand.....	$ 960 05

Adopted and placed on file.

Mr. Vredenburgh, supplementing the above report, stated that no bills for advertising had been sent out yet, and that about $1,300 was due the club. Also no indebtedness and the rent paid up to August.

The report of the Advisory Committee was read and approved.

The report of the Special Committee which was appointed to investigate the charges made by the Michigan Kennel Club against the St. Paul and Minnesota Club was presented, and is as follows:

IN THE MATTER OF THE CHARGES OF THE MICHIGAN KENNEL CLUB AGAINST THE ST. PAUL AND MINNESOTA KENNEL CLUB. REPORT OF COMMITTE OF INVESTIGATION.

To AUGUST BELMONT, JR.,
President American Kennel Club.

As the committee, appointed at the last meeting of the A. K. C. to investigate the charges of the Michigan Kennel Club against the St. Paul and Minnesota Kennel Club, we herewith submit the following report:

1st. The charge made by the Michigan Kennel Club, that the St. Paul and Minnesota Kennel Club violated A. K. C. rules by employing one, Charles Weil as Superintendent of their show, held October, 1888, after having been notified by the Michigan Kennel Club of his expulsion from said club, does not appear to be substantiated by the rules and evidence. Your committee have failed to discover any A. K. C. rule which prohibits any club from employing any person who has been expelled by any club a member of the A. K. C., the clubs alone being the sole judge in such cases. Such being the case, your committee claim that the charge has not been sustained.

2d. The statement made by the President of the Michigan Kennel Club, in a letter to the President of the St. Paul and Minnesota Kennel Club, that the action of the Michigan Kennel Club in expelling Charles Weil, had been sustained by the American Kennel Club, does not appear to be correct, as your committee fail to discover any proof of such action by the American Kennel Club. We would call your attention to Secretary Vrendenburgh's letter which is attached, bearing upon the subject, informing the committee that no action was taken in the matter by the A. K. C. on account of its being an expulsion, and not a disqualification.

3d. The charge that the St. Paul and Minnesota Club violated Rule 2 of the A. K. C. we find in a measure to be true. The rules were correctly published in their prize list and catalogue, but were not strictly enforced, as in our opinion the A. K. C. intend that they should be. To illustrate, in the catalogue of their show, various entries appear which shows that they were registered in the A. K. R. but not the A. K. C. S. B. This in itself is a plain violation of A K. C. rules, and your committee would recommend the same action be taken by the A. K. C. against the St. Paul and Minnesota Kennel Club for not complying with the rules under which their show was held, as we think it the duty of the A. K. C. to insist that all their rules should be lived up to by its members.

All papers and correspondence is herewith attached, and the findings of the committee is respectfully submitted.

THOS. B. LEE.
C. M. MUNHALL.

On motion of Major Taylor the matter was referred to the Advisory Committee.

The following clubs were admitted as active members of the A. K. C.: The Pointer Club of America, New York; The German Mastiff or Great Dane Club of America, Chicago; The Long Island Live Stock Association, Huntington, L. I.

The Secretary stated that he had received the application of the Southern California Kennel Club for membership, which was irregular in form, in that it was not accompanied by dues, constitution or list of officers; that he wrote the club that its application would be accepted if the dues and constitution arrived before the date of this meeting. On the receipt of his letter, on May 15th, they wired him to make application, constitution and dues to follow by mail; that they were going to hold their inaugural show next month, and the recognition of the A. K. C. would be very desirable.

On motion of Major Taylor the Secretary was instructed to notify the Southern California Kennel Club that no action could be taken on their application on account of the non-arrival of the dues and constitution, but if presented in proper form it was the sense of this meeting that in due time the awards of their coming show will be recognized.

A communication was reported from the Canadian Kennel Club, stating in substance that they had been instructed to ask recognition of the wins at the show at London, Ontario, in 1888 by the American Kennel Club, adding that although they were not members of the A. K. C. at that time, steps were being taken to that end.

On motion of Mr. Anthony their request was granted.

The Secretary reported a communication from Mr. T. O. Hall, bookkeeper for Potts & Potts, Atlanta, Ga., denying the statement that he was treasurer of the National Pet Stock and Poultry Association, he did not attend the meeting or the shows, and requested that the disqualification imposed upon him should be removed.

On motion matter referred to Advisory Board.

A communication was read from J. E. Isgrigg alleging as false an advertisement published in the American Field by P. T. Madison, and asking that the matter be laid before the Advisory Board.

On motion, referred to Stud Book Committee.

To the Stud Book Committee was also referred the matter of the protest by T. Shelley Hudson as to the breeding of the English setter bitch M'liss C, and referred to the A. K. C., by the Mascoutah Kennel Club.

A communication was raad from W. E. Hagans of the German Mastiff or Great Dane Club, calling attention to the fact that certain dogs which had been eligible to registration heretofore by A. K. C., were now ineligible owing to certain revised rules, and asking for a modification of said rules.

On motion of Mr. Anthony the Secretary was directed to notify the German Mastiff or Great Dane Club that the American Kennel Club could not change its rules in favor of any other club.

A letter was also read from James Watson appealing from the decision of the Rochester Kennel Club in the matter of his protest against Metchly Surprise being entered in the challenge class in that show, she having been awarded two first prizes up to 12 o'clock on the day of the closing of the entries.

Mr. Watson stated that the date of closing of entries was announced as March 6th, but was further extended to March 13th; that although it was alleged the extension had been advertised he did not see it, and the point to be decided was whether a club was authorized to reopen its entries after the date of closing was passed. He had made the same protest at Boston under the same circumstances, and the dog was disqualified. Motions to refer to the Advisory committee and to sustain the Rochester Kennel Club were lost.

On motion of Mr. Wise the action of the Rochester Kennel Club was reversed and the protest sustained.

Mr. Anthony presented the matter of his appeal from the award rendered by the Judge of an equal one-third prize to Lad of Bow, and also from the award of the heat between Lad of Bow and Jean Valjean. He stated that after considerable correspondence he received a letter from Mr. Shattuc informing him that his protest as to Lad of Bow had been overruled; that Mr. Belmont was appointed a committee by the A. K. C. to hear the appeal; that although some correspondence passed between Mr. Shellhass, Secretary pro tem and Mr. Shattuc, no action was taken. In October, 1888, he withdrew the appeal as he did not wish it continued in his absence; that the withdrawal was duly reported to the American Kennel Club and that he had notified Mr. Shattuc also of the withdrawal, and called his attention to the fact that as the original award stood, he expected a check for the amount the dog won under the decision. No reply was received and he addressed another letter to Mr. Shattuc, calling attention to the fact that the money was still due, and informing him that if the money was not sent to him he would report the fact to the American Kennel Club, and ask that Messrs. Shattuc & Paris be disqualified.

Mr. Anthony further stated that the matter had not been attended to up to this time and he therefore asked that action be taken to disqualify Messrs. Shattuc & Paris.

Mr. Wise—I move that whereas complaint has been made by J. L. Anthony that the American Field Trial Club has not paid its prize of one-third division won by Lad of Bow at their meeting in 1887, said Shattuc & Paris be allowed 30 days in which to show cause why the prayer of the petitioner should not be granted, and that the matter be referred to the Advisory Board with power.

Seconded and carried.

The charges against Lorenzo Daniels made by R. F. Mayhew, agent of Wm. Graham, and presented by H. W. Huntington, associate delegate, in regard to the purchase of the St. Bernard dog Visp II, were referred to the Advisory Board.

A communication was read from Miss Whitney asking the definition of the term "recognized veterinary surgeon" as used in A. K. C. Rules; and calling attention to the disqualification of her dog Monta Rosa by the Worcester Kennel Club, and her appeal was presented by Dr. J. Frank Perry, associate delegate.

On motion, the rules of the A. K. C. not having been complied with by the Worcester Kennel Club, and in view of the examination of the dog at Boston, her appeal was sustained, and the disqualification by the Worcester club was reversed.

On motion of Mr. Anthony Rule 9 was amended by substituting the words "duly qualified" for the word "recognized."

After some discussion a "duly qualified" veterinary surgeon was defined to be "one who has been properly educated in some reputable college or University entitled to confer the degree of V. S,, and has received a diploma from the same," or "one who without ever having held a diploma, has had at least five years practical experience to fit him for the practice of his profession."

Proposed amendment to Rule 12 lost.

Rule 28 was amended by adding after the word "hold" on the 6th line the words, "the date of closing of entries shall not be changed or extended beyond the original date as advertised in the premium list. Any club receiving any entries after the original published date of closing shall be expelled."

The recommendation of the Advisory Committee referred to by the Secretary, to rescind that portion of Rule 3 which permits free registration in the A. K. C. S. B. of A. K. R. registrations prior to 1888, was, on motion, adopted.

On motion, the Secretary was directed to notify by registered letter the Rensselaer Kennel Club, which club, it was stated, had neglected to pay its registration fees, and ignored entirely any communications addressed to them, that if their fees are not paid within thirty days they will be dropped from the roll.

The Secretary called attention to certain letters he had received in regard to standards of committees of the American Kennel Club, and asking for action in the matter.

On motion, laid over until next meeting.

Mr. Winslow called attention to a protest entered by Mr. Watson against his own dog. He said the dog "Clipper" was entered at their meeting in Philadelphia, and won a special prize as the best collie bred in America. Mr. Watson, who owned the dam, took her to England and had her bred to "Eclipse," brought her back here, and she whelped in this country. The question to be decided is whether the progeny are American or English bred.

The protest was not allowed, and it was decided that a bitch owned in this country, sent to any foreign country to be bred and returned to this country to whelp, the progeny shall be considered as American bred.

Adjourned.

A. WREDENBURGH, Secy.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is receiving many most kindly notices of its reports of the recent dog show, and is grateful.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 2, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Your show must certainly have been a success in numbers and enthusiasm even if it fell behind financially. I met a San Francisco man who was at the P. K. C. show, last night, and he says that there was a great deal of dissatisfation with Graham's judging. It is just what I expected, for as near as I can learn from the remarks he, (Mr. Graham), prefers the short thick head in both pointers and setters. This is just what I expected, for I have felt satisfied for some time that the English were drifting that way very fast. I don't know but what they may be right, for as far as I can learn at this "long range" it is dogs of that style of head and close compact bodies that are doing the winning in the field. If this is so and we are breeding sporting dogs for field merit, why not reward that class of dogs on the bench which shows the best quality in the field? I admire the rangy dog myself, built after the pattern of the greyhound, with the long, square head of the Irish setter, ears low down and well set back falling in a roll close to the head. To me they are certainly the most beautiful, but if this is not the type for field work, bird sense and powerful nose, then it is right to set them back on the bench.

SILEX.

June 2, 1889.

[Silex has been misinformed. Mr. Graham did not judge by head alone, as some do who criticize him most loudly. His judgments will bear study and most men who study them closely will agree with him fully. He is a close, keen, wide awake, well posted judge, and has done much good by his visit. KEN. ED.]

Just how to introduce a note about poultry when there is no specific department set aside for it is a worriment, but perhaps it will fit here as well as anywhere. During the recent bench show Mr. Geo. W. Bassford had his Patent Brooder on exhibition, and the opinion of the judge was that "it was a success, except that its clucking apparatus needed oiling." When it is stated that the Patent Brooder was simply a pair of old capons, the judge may fairly be credited with facetiousness.

The excellence of the fox terrier puppies offered in another column by Mr. Thos. Slipper, of Eugene, Oregon, is accentuated by the winnings of Golden Gem, of his breeding, at the recent bench show. Gem was far and away the best fox terrier in the show, and if purchasers can secure one dog in ten as good they will be lucky.

Mr. J. C. Nattrass, delightful story teller, champion eccentric poet and thorough Irish red setter man, offers elsewhere in the paper some handsome Irish setter puppies, by Nat Glencho (Glencho-Maid), and out of Red Fanny; also puppies by Buck-Judith. The dogs are fine in breeding, and fanciers of the breed will do well to keep the advertisement in mind.

Says the Shooting Times (Eng.): "At the French trials M. Barreyre, fearing a sexual disturbance, produced his setter bitch in a combination garment. This, of course, caused a great deal of fun amongst the audience, and the judge increased the hilarity by ordering the "suit" to be removed for their inspection, and then said there was no cause for the bitch to wear it!!!

The London Shooting Times, a very brightly written kennel and shooting newspaper, in noticing receipt of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Rules and entry blank, adds: "We wish you plenty of entries; your club deserves them." The kindliness is appreciated, and an invitation is extended to readers of the Shooting Times who may be visiting California to make themselves known to the Secretary of the Field Trial Club and secure introductions to the club preserves and shooting, to which they will be very welcome.

The Southern California Kennel Club will give its first bench show about June 24th, at Los Angeles. The club is a lively and energetic one and its show will be well managed. It is a member of the American Kennel Club, so that wins will count toward championships. There are several dogs owned about San Francisco, which would be entitled to compete for championship prizes if they should win first at Los Angeles. Among them are in mastiffs, Mr. R. Scott's Dick and Mrs. Preston's Actress; in Great Danes, Mr. Perham W. Nahl's Cæsar; in greyhounds, Mr. Carroll's Jenny June; in pointers, Mr. Truman's Patti Croxteth T; in Irish setters, Mr. Truman's Lady Elcho T. and Mike T., in Irish water spaniels, Mr. T. J. Pinder's Nora P.; in beagles, Mr. G. W. Bassford's Bannerman Jr., and in Yorkshires, Mr. F. W. Sierp's Mash. The specials at Los Angeles are very good, and we hope a large number of dogs will be sent from the northern and central portions of the State. Those who wish premium lists can address H. T. Payne, Los Angeles, president of the club.

THE GUN.

California Wing Shooting Club.

A real San Bruno wind annoyed the ten gentlemen who went down for the June meeting of the club on Sunday last. The birds were not first rate but when they did take wing, they were teasers and took a lot of killing, which, luckily, the shooters were able to administer. But three of the ten failed to reach double figures, and five scored eleven each.

At 12 birds, Hurlingham for club trophies; on the shoot off Mr. C. Haas took first, Dr. Knowles second, and Mr. Will De Vaull third.

The Gun Club.

For several years past the San Francisco Gun Club has made it a rule to hold a picnic shoot on Decoration Day, and this particular shoot is always looked forward to as the event of the season. This year a beautiful little valley, known as Laurel Avenue in Ross Valley, was chosen as the scene of the picnic and pigeon shoot. Four other similar meetings have been held by the club at the same place.

The pigeons and four shooters left by the 7:30 boat for Sausalito, and no time was lost in getting the traps down and commencing the medal shoot, a handicap, under Hurlingham rules, at twelve birds.

Jellett faced the traps first, and started off well, but he missed two in succession and wound up with only nine.

Will Golcher was all off in his shooting, and though he killed ten, he only stopped one with his first barrel.

Butler did splendidly until he came to his last bird, when he let a nasty rising tailer get away, hit, but not badly hurt.

Orr killed his dozen straight in fine style.

To while away the time until the rest of the shooters came a $2 50 freeze-out was shot. Butler and Orr divided after Jellett and Golcher had dropped out on their fifth bird.

Then Jellett and Golcher shot a six-bird match, but each killing six, agreed to call it a draw. About 11 o'clock the tardy members, accompanied by a large contingent of ladies, made their appearance on the grounds, and the medal shoot was continued.

Will Wattles opened the ball for the late ones and made a most creditable ten, losing two birds, which were really hard ones to stop. Woodward did not do quite as well as Wattles, as he only scored seven. Hamilton did even worse, shooting very poorly, and only placing six to his credit. Levison shot better than he has done for some time and piled up nine good kills. Swett disgusted himself and surprised his friends by only killing seven. Chapin shot fairly well but had poor luck. Stone, a most promising young shot, missed his first bird and then killed eleven straight, only using his second barrel three times. Black, a good, reliable shot, killed ten. Sanborn, a new member of the club, dropped eleven and made some fine shots at difficult birds. Bourn was somewhat erratic in his shooting, stopping some good ones and letting easy ones go. The betting on each shot was lively with odds on the gun in most cases.

An adjournment was then made for lunch, and all did justice to the good things provided by the club.

Team shooting was then in order, and visitors from other clubs and States were invited to participate. The conditions were: Six birds each man and $2.50, the losing side to pay for the winner's birds, and also to hand over the pro rata per man.

Fred Butler and Bill Wattles were elected captains, and shot the following teams against each other, Butler's team winning by two birds after a most exciting fight:

Wattles and Black then chose sides under similar conditions, when Butler's side was so hopelessly beaten on the fourth round that it gave up and paid up.

Eureka Tournament.

A Blue Rock tournament was given by the Fortuna Gun Club at Eureka, Humboldt Co., on May 26th, that was entirely successful. The weather was perfect, and together with the beautiful green lawn on which the traps were placed for the occasion made it truly inviting to the sportsmen. Geo. F. Cloud, Esq., attended to all the details pertaining to the tournament, and did his duty in such a manner as to win him deserved credit from every sportsman. It was a matter of regret that the sportsmen didn't turn out as well as expected. Eureka presented two entries; Arcata and Rohnerville none; Ferndale turned out well and deserved much credit for the interest manifested by her representatives. They arrived in Fortuna with a six-in-hand coach loaded with ardent sportsmen, who proved themselves thoroughly expert and very agreeable gentleman. Fortuna in turn brought forward its home guards—Messrs. Legg, Parker and Davis, all of whom proved themselves lovers of the sport and took an active interest which tended to make the occasion a success. There was a large number of spectators present, among them many ladies, who looked on at the proceedings with decided interest.

The shooting was good, when it is considered that all of the participants were novices in the use of the sharp flying blue rock targets, which were thrown with more than ordinary quickness. The match was the precursor of a series of similar events which it is hoped will draw together and cement into a closely knit organization the many rare shots and thorough sportsmen who live in Humboldt County. The scores were:

Pacific Sportsmen's Club.

The Pacific Sportsmen's Club held its monthly medal shoot at the Gerber ranch near Sacramento on Sunday last. The shooting was very good, as the scores below will show. J. M. Morrison and George Wittenbrock tied on a full score of twelve birds each, and in shooting off the tie the latter won. The birds were an excellent lot, and it required the best of skill to grass them. A number of sweepstake matches were also shot. Following are the scores of the medal shoot:

Obsolete Arms.

I have read with much interest the various communications which have appeared from time to time in the columns of Shooting and Fishing, says M , on the subject of what becomes of those arms which have become old and out of fashion, and the result has been the bringing to light of some interesting history. Some years ago, before the advent of the low-priced double breech-loading guns, single guns were more in use by the more mature sportsmen than at present, and of the number of guns then in use, several have passed out of existence, and the names and places of manufacture have been forgotten by all save some of the veterans.

Among those which were popular a number of years ago was the Roper four-shot repeating gun, which was the predecessor of the present repeating shot-gun. This arm had a number of important improvements, which placed it far in advance of the guns of its day. Among the improvements thus introduced was the adjustable choke, which consisted of a ring which was screwed on the muzzle of the barrel, and as the ring was made with a taper, it caused the shot to shoot closer than the ordinary barrel. This same improvement was also used on the Ballard single-barrelled shot-gun, which was made by the Brown Manufacturing Co. of Newburyport. These two arms have not been in the market for some seventeen or eighteen years.

The Roper gun was a decided departure in the shot-gun line, and was made in Amherst, Mass. It was well thought of, but was not a commercial success, as it had a number of weak spots in its construction; these could have been remedied, however, had it met with a cordial welcome from the sperting public, which it did not, for several reasons.

Lord Dunraven's Valkyrie.

The performances of Lord Dunraven's British yacht Valkyrie, built to contest for the America cup in American waters with the swift-sailing Yankee yachts, such as the Volunteer and Puritan, have been so far too varied and uncertain for the formation of definite idea of her sailing qualities She has had three or four trials with the crack British yachts—the Irex, the Yarana, the Verda, the Amphitrite and the Mohawk, but in neither of those has her qualities been developed sufficiently to place her. With light wind she appears at less advantage than in a good breeze, but with a heavy wind again she seems at fault. A few days ago, in a contest against every one of the named yachts, with a fair breeze she won in handsome manner; but since then, with a fresh strong wind, the Irex and Yarana both beat her with comparative ease. She has not yet used her centre-board, reserving that probably for American waters with Yankee contestants. It seems that she is not adapted for heavy weather and a rough sea. The New York Yacht Club are apparently confident of the victory again, and of keeping the cup at home. There is a prospect, however, that the race will be better contested this year than ever before. The British yachts must copy closer from American models before they can reasonably expect to carry over the cup.

Development of the Horse.

The promise is out of a book on the development of the horse, by Hon. Leland Stanford and Mr. Charles Marvin, Superintendent of his famous Palo Alto breeding farm in San Mateo county, soon to be published, copiously and elaborately illustrated, of about 400 pages. This book will be sought and prized by breeders of fine horses throughout the country, as a most valuable contribution to turf literature, and as a vade mecum in the breeding and training of horses to the highest development for every use. Hon. Leland Stanford occupies the very foremost place in the ranks of great breeders, and Mr. Marvin holds high position as a superior judge of horses, and as trainer and manager of stock farms. He has by years of study, labor and earnest efforts directed to the mastery of the subject, attained distinction in the lustrous galaxy where lead and shine the names of Doble, Splan, Hickok, Golden, Goldsmith, and others now recognized as best authorities on training and perfecting the horse, especially the American trotter, now the most valuable of all species for the turf, for pleasure and for general usefulness.

At his great farm of Palo Alto, more than ten years ago, Governor Stanford wrought the revolution in the science and knowledge which are now conspicuous in developing the horse for the turf, by his invaluable experiments in clearly bringing out the information of the actual movements of the trotter and runner in utmost motion of speed. The photographer Muybridge, by his skill and study, enabled mankind to the knowledge of the exact attitude of the horse at every motion when at highest speed. As expert beholders of the marvels produced by the infallible battery of the photographic cameras, declared at the time, seeing was not believing. The senses were bewildered in the performance.

The revelations of the instantaneous negatives as they came from the hands of the artist astonished those present at the novel scene, and while their higher intelligence was compelled to accept the demonstration, the preconceived ideas of all past years could not be for the moment abandoned or overcome. They were confronted with the wonders of the test in the brief space of only about forty feet, across which the horse trotted to a sulky at less than a 2:40 gait, and the negative exhibited the minutiæ of the spokes, which were invisible to the eye, and as infallibly marked the precise position of every portion of the body of the horse at every fractional part of the thousandth of a second seized by the cameras and transferred to the faultless negative. Still they were confounded, and the understanding refused to comprehend that which the eye could not grasp. It was more bewildering in photographing the runner. He was rode the allotted inconsiderable space at a gate of 1:40, and at the instant of the finish in the negative was portrayed the parted girth, with frayed ends—indubitable testimony of the absolute fidelity of the picture. That marvel of the photograph demonstrated besides a fact which had up to that time been contended by some turfmen, but which none could establish or adduce testimony to convince the doubters—that in running the horse was for a minute fraction entirely from the ground, without the slightest touch of it.

It is still clearly remembered that even after Senator Stanford had had presented these discoveries as to the actual motion of the trotter and the running horse to the world by the absolute evidences of photography, many of intelligence failed to comprehend and stubbornly rejected the proofs, and there are now men who cannot bring themselves to believe that the photographs taken at Palo Alto ten years or more ago accurately give the changed positions of the horse in motion. But the testimonies are too thoroughly presented for question stay longer in the minds of the people, and they are established beyond reasonable doubt. In that work, it is reported, Governor Stanford caused a revolution in matters pertaining to equines, and it has been of incalculable instruction and usefulness to horsemen in every land. It has better taught trainers and men who handle horses.

In contemplation of this great development at Palo Alto, as to the attitudes and motions of the horse, comes the thought that the illustrated volume soon to appear will likewise be a work of great value and general interest to turfmen. It is foreshadowed that in it will be given the ideas and experience of Superintendent Marvin in training horses and the routine of breeding and handling them. Also, valuable instruction in the management of breeding farms, in the selection of horses, and in everything pertaining to the business. Superintendent Marvin has expressed his ideas of training. Comprehensively stated they are to the effect that the colt should be worked early, and this work should be fast, to the development of his speed; with good rest before and after—the work not to be continued too long, to weary or exhaust. It is speed that kills, if the colt goes too long and has not been worked up to it. He adopts a sort of kindergarten process—the only method, he thinks, to make a great horse. Wean them at five months; begin to work them at seven or eight months, in the small kindergarten track; put boots on them, no harness; turn them loose and exercise them; bit them at twelve or thirteen months, and then begins their handling with short, sharp brushes. The old style of waiting until the animal has nearly attained his growth, and driving him a long distance with speed, is not wise or good. To the many who have not adequate breeding farms and cannot afford to employ superior trainers, the plain instructions given by Mr. Marvin will be beneficial. There are many who like fine horses and own them, and are fond of turf sports, but have not the means or opportunities of careful and skilled attention to them, and these will derive useful information from his counsels. Especially will farmers and others who breed good horses, some day likely to become of high worth.

The forthcoming book will commend itself to horsemen and the general public, as it can be safely predicted that it will be very superior in every respect, in style and finish, as in matter and sound reading.

The English Derby.

The English Derby was won by the Duke of Portland's Donovan (Galopin—Mowerina) ridden by Barrett, Mr. J. Gretton's Miguel, (Fernandez—Cream Cheese) second, Mr. Douglas Baird's El Dorado by Sterling third.

Laureate, Pioneer, Morglay, Enthusiast, Turcophone, Royal Star, Fitzraven, Folengo, Clover, Gay Hampton and Gulliver also ran.

Donovan was given his head at Tattenham corner, and striding on, took the lead half way up the hill and won in a canter by two lengths from Miguel who was ridden hard for the last half mile beating El Dorado by six lengths for second place. Pioneer closed up fourth. The feature of the race was the poor show made by Enthusiast (the 2000 winner), and his stable companion El Dorado. The former showed fairly for a while, but the distance was too much for him. He is as we said weeks ago, only a miler like the rest of old Cherry Duchess' produce.

Donovan has won nearly every time he has started in this and last year. The two thousand is the only race he has lost this year, and it was generally conceded that George Dawson was too confident and let up on him after the exhibition he made of his field at Leicester.

He is now, with Melton, the only horse that has ever won the Middle Park Plate and the Derby. Several winners of the former have been considered certainties but always have failed, and when Melton pulled both off in 83 and 84, it was said it would not recur again for an age but Sic Vita only four years have elapsed and the trick is done again. The Duke has now won about $170,000 with his stable this year, and bids fair to double that before winter, for there are several by stakes to run for yet.

We give Donovans performances here; as a two-year-old he won The Brocklesby (Lincoln), the Portland Stakes (Leicester), Middle Park Plate, Dewhurst Plate, New Stake, Bibury Club, Homebred Foal, July, Ham, Buckingham and Hopeful Stakes. He was beaten by Chitabob at Manchester, he carrying 136 to the winners 123 pounds, and later on by El Dorado in the Prince of Wales Stakes at Goodwood, Donovan finished third seven lengths behind the winner.

This year he has won the Prince of Wales Stakes, Derby, and a minor race or two, as well as being second in the Two Thousand guineas.

Misty Morning, 2:21, is now nine years old. She was sold last year to go to France, and has since been beaten in a race of three miles and a furlong by a French mare called Capulin in 8:26, about a 2:42 gait.

CORRESPONDENCE.

OLEMA, June 4th, 1889.

I claim the name of Egovolo (I fly) for a brown colt, black points, no white; sire Antevolo, dam Pastime, by Rustic. Pastime is the dam of Dr. Proctor's fast four-year-old filly by Dawn, now in Orrin Hickock's hands at Bay District.

The Petaluma Track has just been covered thoroughly from the pole to the outside fence with a top dressing of clay and loam.

The fear from immediate contact with the adobe is taken of by the loam, while the clay gives the flying steeds a foothold. Lee Shaner, Misner, Sperry, Corcoran and the other trainers are delighted with the track. Lee smiles as he jogs along behind Dawn, Slocum or some colt. Dan Misner looks grim and confident behind Mattie P. as he thinks of his (Hollyday) at Napa on the 7th. Sperry rides behind his trotter with a far-away look towards Pleasanton, trying perhaps to see Nellie P. in the distance. Coceran has some youngsters that are knocking at the door. Under the clatter of flying feet the anxious voices of the drivers, "the spirit of the times shall track their speed."

An improved approach to the Park from Petaluma is about to be made. An inside winter track will no doubt be ready for the coming winter. Then, but not until then, will Petaluma develop her horse interests so that she will stand on equal footing with her rivals. As ever yours,

P. J. SHAFTON.

Colt Races at Sacramento.

There was not a very large attendance at the races Tuesday, says the Record Union, but most of those who went patronized the pools quite liberally. In the first race—two-year-old stake, one mile and repeat—the following were the starters; Clarence Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes; Lynett, by Lynwood; Duke Cameo by Jim Mulvenna; Silver King by Jim Mulvenna; Lottery Ticket, by Dexter Prince; Magister by Sterling.

Clarence Wilkes was the favorite, Lottery Ticket second choice, and the rest in the field. After scoring nearly a dozen times they were sent off on even footing, excepting Magister, who was several yards in the rear. Lynett passed to the front in a spurt and gained the inside. Along the backstretch several of the horses broke and Lynett increased her lead, making the half in 1:20. She was never headed, and won the race by about eight yards, Lottery Ticket second.

Lottery Ticket took the second heat after a pretty race. Time, 2:41½.

Lynett gained the third heat, winning the race and first money. Lottery Ticket was placed second and Silver King third.

The second race was for the three-year-old stakes, and the entries were: Laura Z., by Alex Button; Jaggers, by Dexter Prince; Kitty Vernon, by Mt. Vernon.

Jaggers won the race in straight heats, Lizzie Z. second and Kitty Vernon third. Best time, 2:46.

The St. Louis Derby.

Cassius was first to gallop out of the paddock, but this appearance did not evoke any enthusiasm, says the Republic. A moment later the St. Louis colt Longfish, with his head encased in blinkers, galloped past the stand, and he was given a rousing send-off. He looked all over the post. Teuton and Caliente and the others were ignored, but Glockner was given a faint cheer. There was very little delay at the post. At the first break Glockner was left facing around, but at the second all were in motion and started on their journey well together. Glockner showed in front at the first quarter and that was the only time in the race that he did face a clear track. Le Premier was second, a half length back; Cassius third and Teuton fourth; Longfish fifth, two lengths back, and Caliente last. As they thundered down toward the stand Blaylock sent Longfish to the front and he was leading by two lengths at the stand, Le Premier second, Cassius third, Teuton fourth, and the California colt and Glockner, last. At the first quarter after the stand Longfish had two lengths the best of it. Le Premier second, a head in front of Cassius, Caliente last. There was no change at the mile, except that Longfish was running easy, while the others seemed to be laboring. It was all over at the mile and a quarter. Longfish increased his lead to four lengths, with Teuton in second place, Le Premier third, Cassius fourth and Caliente coming up. Glockner was out of it. All used the whip except Blaylock, and he maintained his advantage, winning by four lengths from Caliente second, who came up fast and beat Cassius a half length for the place. Time, 2:39½.

The Baldwin Colts.

The Santa Anita Stable will send a reinforcement to the Eastern contingent. Dowd Williams will start out before the end of the month with four head including Aloha and Atalanta. The latter has furnished and thickened out wonderfully since she ran away with her race at the Blood Horse Spring Meeting, while Aloha has improved and both will bear watching a little later in the season. We hear that the yearlings on the ranch have all been broken and look well, while there are only two mares to foal. What a pity it is Mr. Baldwin does not breed his mares earlier. The first foal was dropped on March 5th. A full list up to date has been enclosed and we give it.

March 5th, bay filly by Gano, dam Experiment. Marks, large blaze both hind legs white, almost to hock.

March 15th, chestnut filly by Rutherford—Marie Stuart. Star, snip on nose, left hind leg white half way to hock.

At Petaluma.

Petaluma race track is gradually and surely proving itself a quiet and reliable place for trotting horses. There are now at the track upwards of seventy horses in active work for the circuit. Lot Slocum, with a record of 2:17¼, deserves first mention. The son of Electioneer is being steadily prepared for a lower record, and certainly, considering his age and condition, ought to readily obtain one this fall. Dawn, the chestnut son of Nutwood, after being gradually worked up with the ultimate object, of course, of beating his record (2:19½), and with ordinary luck in his preparation he will do it, for he is one of the gamest horses on the track. Ewing, 2:21¼, is in the same stable (Shaner's), as is Juno, both of whom look well. Corcoran has a large yet select string, the bay filly by Tilton Almont, out of a G. M. Patchen, Jr., mare, ought to trot if breeding and looks are any criterion. A two-year-old filly by Dawn, dam thoroughbred, by Hubbard, shows wonderful quality and style which ought to keep her trotting when the rest begin to stop. The filly by Billy Lyle, dam Helen by Benton, with a Norfolk cross to fall back on, ought to give stamnia to what looks like a racy trotter.

Mr. Sperry has a nice looking stable of horses, the most noticeable being a big, fine two-year-old filly by Anteeo, dam by Sultan, who has a beautiful gait, while the four-year-old Anteeo takes more after his grandsire, Joe Daniels, being built like a race-horse instead of a trotter. Maddox has a lot of green horses, the most promising being Frank Whippleton, who has already shown some very speedy trials. The yearling by Bonanza moves in nice style, and it is rumored that in the fall some of the crack yearlings will have to go down the line to keep out of the youngsters way.

Misner has a nice stable, the best probably being Mattie P., 2:31, who is moving in grand free style, just now showing every sign of going well inside thirty before next fall. There are any quantity more horses on the track, and when I have more leisure I shall be delighted to look them all over and make a complete tour of the stables and track.

A Cute Vermonter.

W. S. Hobart, the gentleman who paid $50,000 for Stamboul, was born in Waterbury, Washington county, Vt., 49 years ago, says Horse and Stable. He has been 30 years in California and Nevada, and has had several ups and downs, and is to-day considered the richest man of his age on the coast. In 1876 he was rated as broken. Now he is estimated to be worth $7,000,000. Forty years ago the stallion Flying Morgan stood for three seasons in the barn of the father of Mr. Hobart in Waterbury, and it was then that the present owner of Stamboul developed his first interest in horses. His father drove Flying Morgan to a record of 2:32, which at that time was considered a most wonderful performance, and as a matter of course the boy was enthusiastic over the achievement. As a young man, Mr. Hobart noticed that nearly every horse of quality which was produced in Vermont was picked up by buyers from Boston and New York.

In later years, since he became a resident of the Pacific Coast, when on visits to his old home, he noticed that all the good stock had been taken out of the State, and the horses left were generally a scrubby looking lot.

In 1875 Mr. Hobart was the owner of the then noted trotter Oakland Maid, record, 2:22. The same year he bought of Harry Robbins of Philadelphia, a team composed of a pair of full sisters, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, out of the dam of Maxey Cobb for $500. He now drives on the road a three-year-old granddaughter of one of those mares. He still owns the dam of this three-year-old, a mare by Whipple's Hambletonian, and eight other choice broodmares, which have been purchased at high prices, not given to the public.

Answer.—Nutwood Jr. is by Nutwood, dam by California Patchen, 2d dam by Banes' Littlejohn Jr. This California Patchen was said to be by Geo. M. Patchen Jr.; Littlejohn Jr. was by imp. Littlejohn. We do not know the mare Nellie you allude to.

Advertising Notes.

Moet & Chandon.

Good thought, generous, lively, pulsing words, and an all embracing humanity can hardly exist where sternly frugal diets and lifeless beverages are customary. The fitting accompaniment of brilliant sentences is more brilliant wine, and none more sparkling than Moet & Chandon. Those local bonsvivants whose highest pleasure it was to sit with Henry Rule before a dozen choice canvas backs, with a case of Moet on ice near by, a few years ago, were unanimous in the belief that the wine was, above all others, most suitable to accompany the royal birds, whether for its palate-vivifying pungency, its well ripened boquet, its lack of headiness, or its gently pervading quality. It is now offered in unexceptionable quality in two styles, "White Seal" deliciously dry, and "Imperial Brut," a little safer, by Messrs. Sherwood & Sherwood, at 212-214 Market street, San Francisco.

Connoiseurs need no intimation as to its excellence, but to those entering upon generous life it may be said that Moet & Chandon is most desirable.

Crystal Baths.

Poor old Burton anatomized Melancholy from the standpoint of a dirty philosopher. If he and his compeers had had hot sea water baths such as John Farnham of the Crystal Baths at the foot of Mason street, North Beach, furnishes, there would have been no Melancholy, and no consequent analysis of that product of disordered functional action of the licretories.

Sale of Short-Horns and Brood Mares.

Messrs. Killip & Co., auctioneers at 22 Montgomery street, San Francisco, through whose hands almost all heavy sales of live stock pass, advertise this week a sale for June 11th at the Bay District Track, at 12.30 P. M. The sale will embrace short-horn cattle, brood mares and draft horses, property of H. Van der Straten and Robert Ashburner. The stock may be seen at the track on and after to-day. Catalogues can be had at Mes rs. Killip & Co.'s, 22 Montgomery street.

The advertisement of the bench show of the Southern California Kennel Club and the Los Angeles County Poultry Association appears elsewhere. It is hoped that many local owners will respond. The show will be unexceptionable, and wins will count under American Kennel Club rules.

First, because of its using nothing but a steel shell of peculiar shape, the cost of which was an item against it; second, the gun required to be manipulated with great care, because if the fired shell was not extracted from the gun at a particular period of the revolution of the cylinder, it was carried by and could not be again brought in line until a complete revolution of the cylinder had taken place; thirdly, the firing mechanism was weak, and was frequently broken in action, even when handled with the greatest care. The inventor of this arm was afterwards closely connected with the invention of the type of fire-arms known to-day under the name of the reciprocating fore-arm type, of which the Spencer repeating shot-gun and the Elliot magazine rifles, which is made by the Colt Company, are examples, and several other inventions which have not as yet been placed on the market. The Ballard single shot gun disappeared from the market on account of the failure and consequent going out of business of the manufacturer. It embodied the same general features of the present well-known rifle bearing the same name. The bore of the gun was .64, or about 20-gauge.

Of the single guns of later date may be mentioned the Dexter Smith, an arm made in Springfield, Mass., and was, at the time, a well made arm. It had the side lever action of the present Hepburn-Remington rifle, with the difference that the breech block of the Dexter Smith moved the same as in the older Remington system. The breech block was locked in place by a brace, which was thrown in place by a spring and locked, until released by the fall of the hammer. The shell was extracted by a spring extractor. The gun was well made and finished and met with a large sale, but the maker branched out into other lines of arms and was swamped thereby.

Another single gun which met with a large sale at the time of its introduction was the Phœnix, made by the well-known Whitney Arms Co. of Whitneyville. This gun was made in 12 bore, and chiefly with plain steel barrels. The action of the Phœnix was somewhat similar to the now well-known Zulu gun, in that it was a block which was so hinged that it lifted up and turned from left to right, and was locked down by the nose of the hammer, and was well liked by shooters, but the same action was used in the manufacture of a rifle, and soon lost favor as a shot-gun, and it has been some years since the writer has seen one.

Then came the American gun with a concealed hammer, of which but few were made, but the same name is preserved in a much improved arm. Then there was the Henry gun, an arm made in Pennsylvania. It bore a general resemblance to the well-known Stevens arms, but was made for a cheap arm, and was so in more ways than one.

Another gun which has passed out of existence is the Prescott, of which two models were made, one with a side lever, the motion of which half cocked the other hammer and withdrew the locking bolt, and the model was made with the popular top lever, but was somewhat difficult of assembling, and both models soon disappeared from the market. There have been a number of other makers of single guns who have sprung up and made a small quantity of guns, and then have been obliged to bow to the inevitable, and both the makers and the guns have been forgotten by all save a few of the older sportsmen.

ROD.

To the Fish Commission.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—There are a great number of shad in Napa river. They are up here for spawning purposes, and it is cruel to see the ruthless slaughter of these fish. Every night there are parties dragging the river with nets, and they catch from four to eight hundred of them.

Now you write to some of the Fish Commissioners and send them this letter if you wish. This ought to be stopped. The State was at expense to bring these fish here, and to see them sacrificed in this way is cruel, and the fool Justices of the Peace, tell them there is no law against such murder. If you feel any interest send right along. ANGLER.

The Anglers' Tournament.

The seventh annual anglers' tournament of the National Rod and Reel Association was held at Harlem Mere in the Central Park, New York, on Thursday and Friday, May 22d and 23d, says Forest and Stream. On both days the sun was toiling away a long way to the south of southeast before the first fly raised bubbles upon the surface of the wind-rippled Mere.

Perhaps city life is not conducive to early rising, or the fisherman had to tramp in many a weary mile from the remote woodsy rivulets and sequestered lakes where the trout love to hide; but be that as it may, the only meeting which took place on the grounds at 9 o'clock was between your reporter and the secretary of the association, who until then had the field to himself and his henchman, who was assisting him in laying out the line of floats.

The position of the platform on the east shore of the Mere admitted of the line being laid out nearly due north and south, but with very little variation from that course, and if the wind had been blowing anywhere north or south or west, the line might have been so laid out as to insure a favorable wind for extending the casting lines, but the wind was due west, and was blowing pretty strong, too; still it came in puffs succeeded by momentary lulls, leaving each contestant to hope that if he did his best, fortune might favor him with a propitious wind eddy at the right moment.

About half past nine the contestants and officers of the association began to put in an appearance, and after the first cordial greetings had been exchanged, each in turn proceeded to anathematize the wind, but it was all done very genially and philosophically, as becomes the brotherhood of the angle. This word genial is very properly applicable to fishermen. One found evidences of it on all hands as one after the other reached the ground and saw the gladness of his own heart reflected in the beaming countenances of his friends. In the younger men the geniality of expression was sufficiently characteristic, although its more pronounced phases were evanescent; but with the older fellows the genial look had become stereotyped; with use it had become second nature; the countenances were but the reflection of the souls within, perfected by long culture of the angler's many virtues. Why, there were two or three old boys at the tournament, whom we delicately forbear to name, whose faces fairly beamed with geniality. Perhaps if we could penetrate the secret of this sublime content with themselves and with things as they are, we should find that not a little of it is due to the simple faith with which the chronicles of their wonderful fish stories has been received by all but a few constitutionally incredulous people. Nature has her compensations, and every man who reaches 60 years bears on his countenance the stamp of the emotions he has most indulged.

There was a goodly but not a numerous gathering—the kind and courteous president of the Association, Henry P. Wells, with a score or more of vice-presidents and members of committees, all decorated with ribbons of the Association, and Mr. Poey being the most noticeable. As the wind could not possibly be more unfavorable than it was for the direction in which the measured line was extended from the platform south, the only course open to the committee was to extend the line to the north. This was done, and although it made matters no better it left the officers of the Association in the enjoyment of the satisfaction that they had done all that mortal could do in and about the premises.

By 10 o'clock most of the competitors were on the ground, but it was 10.30 before the entries were closed for the first event, the single-handed fly-casting for amateurs.

The prizes were in each event: First, gold medal; second and third, silver medals; fourth and fifth, bronze medals; sixth, subscription to Forest and Stream or other journal.

SINGLE-HANDED FLY-CASTING—Class A (Amateur)—Judges: C. H. Mauri, Rev. H. L. Ziegenfuss; referee, Capt. William Dunning. Open to amateurs, under Rule 2. Rods not to exceed 11 feet 6 inches in length. Scale of points—Distance actually cast, and accuracy, 40 points. (If a contestant cast 60 feet and is awarded 15 for accuracy, his score will be 75:

	Length of rod Ft. in.	Weight of rod. Oz.	Distance cast Feet.	Accuracy.	Total.
P. C. Hewitt	10 05	8¼	73	27	100
Jas. L. Breese	10 10	10¼	71	20	94
G. Poey	11 00	8½	71	19	90
W. F. Blackford	11 01	10½	71	10	81
*R. B. Lawrence	11 00	10	54	..	54

*Lawrence withdrew before his time was up.

The wind was blowing strong and tolerably steady, but not without occasional variation of a few points. At one moment it would veer a little to the south and afford an opportunity to the contestant to extend his casting line, the next minute it would veer to the northward, and catching the half-extended line would cause it to fall in a great circle with the tail fly within perhaps thirty feet of the caster. The difficulty of recovering the line after such a cast, and extending it backward to secure proper vantage for the next cast is familiar to the initiated. It was a mishap that fell not once but frequently to each contestant in turn in this and subsequent contests, and in their several modes of meeting the difficulty they afforded fair tests of the measure of their experience. The least experienced, recognizing that time was short, made strenuous but vain efforts to recover their line, wasting both time and effort without effect, while the more experienced either recovered their lines by a dexterous twist, or, failing, drew in the slack, and crept upward again de novo. But on the whole the casting was very good. The style of most of the contestants was high for amateurs. P. C. Hewitt especially handled his rod with skill and address.

The casting for accuracy was little better than a farce, the wind occasionally catching a dropping tail fly and whirling it from 5 to 10 feet aside, even to the extent of baffling the eyes of the judges, who, losing sight of the fly, would excitedly ask each other, "Where's that?" But in spite of all this and the element of chance in casting due to variations of the wind, the results reached afforded a pretty fair test of their best work under favorable conditions.

SALMON FLY-CASTING.—Judges, John A. Roosevelt, A. N. Cheney; C. R. Miller, referee. Open to all. See Rule 14. No limit as to rods. Distance only to count:

	Length of rod. Ft In.	Weight of rod. Oz	Distance cast. Ft.
R. C. Leonard	18.00	37	112½
P. C. Hewitt	18.00	37	105
J. L. Breese	18.00	37	101
Archibald Mitchell	18.00	37	97
T. B. Mills	18.00	37	94
Ed. Eggert	15.00	32	86

In this event Leonard took the lead, distinguishing himself by the address with which he husbanded the strength of his sinewy arm for the critical point of the cast, instead of distributing it over the whole action. Eggert was outclassed. The other contestants all got in some very good work, in spite of baffling winds, but the average of the casts was very low. Hardly one of them came within 10 ft. of his maximum half a dozen times in the course of his allotted ten minutes.

MINNOW CASTING FOR BLACK BASS—Judges: A. N. Cheney, Jas. L. Vallotton; John A. Roosevelt, referee. Open to all. (See Rule 15.) Scores—Average distance cast in feet. Accuracy 40 points. Cast for accuracy to be made at a stake or mark, distance 60 ft. A stand 12 in high in front, 9 in. in rear, and of suitable size was provided to be used at the option of the caster. The sinker used weighed ½oz.

Leonard was the only one of the contestants who made any good show, whether for distance or direction. His best cast was 149 ft. Excepting Poey the others appeared all unpracticed.

SINGLE-HANDED FLY-CASTING—Expert.—Judges: Fred Mather, Dr. Geo. Trowbridge. Referee, Dr. S. M. Nash. Open to all. Distance only to count. Rods not to exceed 11½ ft. in length.

The wind was very strong and puffy during this contest, so that the performance offered no fair criterion of the relative merits of the contestants. This ended the programme for the first day.

The second day was all that the contestants could wish for as regards the weather. It was almost a dead calm at 9 o'clock, and throughout the day it never exceeded a light breath. The direction was still nearly from due west as on the preceding day. There was some delay in getting to work as on the previous day, a delay in this case partly due to time lost in the effort to draw out amateurs for the opening event. The jousts of the first day's event had disqualified most of the performers for further appearance as amateurs, and there being but one entry the worthy president, anxious to provide for the greatest enjoyment of the greatest number, took counsel with his officers and substituted an open-for-all contest, as in the following programme:

SINGLE-HANDED FLY-CASTING.—Open to all. Judges: E G. Blackford, Hon. H. P. McGown; referee, Hon. Danie G'Reilly. Rods not to exceed 11½ ft.:

Casting off tie: J. L. Breese 96, T. B. Mills 100. Eggert and Poey agreed to decide theirs in black bass fly class.

This event brought out ten competitors, six of whom made a very creditable exhibition of their skill. Of these Breese and Mills tied at 90ft., and in throwing off Breese reached 96ft. and Mills 100ft. A better test of skill would have been afforded by limiting the leaders to 9ft. With the light breeze on the quarter it was only rarely and by chance that the 18ft. leaders could be extended.

Early in this contest Judge Blackford's heart was warmed and his eye kindled by the very creditable performance of his son, who showed himself a worthy chip of the old block, standing forth in the order of casting. He laid down his rod with a very respectable lead, but there were strong casters to follow, and one by one the judge saw the five medals disappear, but the more practically valuable prize of a year's subscription to Forest and Stream was saved from the general wreck of his hopes.

SINGLE-HANDED FLY CASTING — Light Rod Contest—Judges: R. F. Mayhew, W. J. Cassard; C. H. Mauri, referee. Open to all. Rods not exceeding 5oz. in weight nor 11½ft. in length. All rods with solid reel seats allowed ½oz. Distance only to count:

FLY CASTING FOR BLACK BASS.—Judges: L. Dinwiddie Smith, A. P. Van Gleeon, D. D., Dr. James A. Henshall; Wm. C. Harris, referee. Open to amateurs under Rule 2. Single handed rod, not to exceed 11½ ft. in length. Only one fly required, to be furnished by the committee, and to be tied on a No. 2 sproat hook; distance only to count:

This ended the seventh tournament of the Association, which as a social gathering was eminently successful. The officers were untiring in their efforts to make the meeting a success, and the contestants were cordially appreciative of these efforts, and animated by a spirit of generous rivalry toward each other, such as is rarely exhibited other than by the angling fraternity when engaged in contests of skill.

The public evinced no unusual interest in the meet. Hundreds perhaps had seen the announcement and let memory fondly conjure up the features of some bygone outing, including a mental photograph of the reader in appropriate fishing costume with basket at back and rod in hand, but the business of life claimed them and they went on their several ways to the haunts of Mammon. But the Mere was not wholly deserted of all save the members of the Association; before the first day was well advanced a crowd of men and boys had assembled sufficient at any rate to block the

REMARKS.

The intention of the Directors of this Association is to make this place a central point for racing in California. They recognize the fact, that in order to do so, they have got to give large purses in order to get first-class horses. Knowing they have as well-appointed grounds and as good a track as there is in California, having first-class stabling and the best Club House on any track in California, and plenty of fine grass for horses the whole year, and by dealing justly and fairly with the horsemen, we hope to receive their patronage. We are situated about half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles, which makes it an accessible point for the patronage of the whole State.

Being aware that the responsibility, to a great extent, of the Association, is not known outside of our own State, we herewith attach a certificate, signed by the Banks of this City, as to the responsibility of the Association.

We, the undersigned, do certify that the Fresno Fair Grounds Association is perfectly responsible, and its statements are reliable:

LEWIS LEACH, President Farmer's Bank.
O. J. WOODWARD, President First National Bank.
LOUIS EINSTEIN, President Bank of Central California.
H. D. COLSON, President Fresno National Bank.
W. H. MCKENZIE, Cashier Fresno Loan & Savings Bank.

GUARANTEE PURSE - - - $2,000.

This 2:20 CLASS GUARANTEE PURSE gives the party making the entry the privilege of naming any horse he sees fit, the 1st day of September, having no better record than 2:20 the 1st day of June, irrespective of the record he may get after that date. It will be seen by this that the nominator has almost a sure thing of getting his money back.

Any nominator failing to make payments when due forfeits all money paid in, and is held responsible for whole amount of entrance money. First payment must accompany nomination, or will be considered no entry.

The 2:30 Class previously advertised will be trotted the first day of our Fair—Tuesday, October 1, 1889—thus giving nominators a chance to trot the same horse in both races.

water front, and in the afternoon a number of nurse maids with their charges endeavored to thread their way through the throng.

The crowd appeared very deeply interested in the proceedings, although by no means well informed as to the objects of the meeting. One thing appeared evident to them, that the men who severally went on the platform and commenced whipping the waters, were very much in earnest about the work in hand, whatever it was, and gradually it was whispered, and spread from mouth to mouth, that they were trying to hook the measuring floats with the highest numbers on them.

Perhaps the general public was not much benefited by the meeting—who knows? but for the contestants, at least, it was a period of unalloyed enjoyment. To the president and secretary, and other officers of the Association, although the proceedings may have been wearisome, they were followed by a comforting sense of duty done, and of the achievement of the desired ends without friction or shadow.

The Fresno Republican takes to task the Fish Commissioners for failure and neglect of duty in Southern waters. Stocking those with the clumsy cat-fish and coarse carp has worked much harm to trout and other fine species, and impaired the fishing. The Commissioners should heed the condition in the State.

Since the hydraulic mining has ceased the salmon are coming up this stream again, says the Oroville Register. Years ago Feather river contained immense numbers of salmon. Robert Moore says the last he remembers were after the big flood of 1851. From 1853 to 1856 there were so many that when he crossed the river they would often frighten his horse by rushing between his legs. J. V. Parks says that during the time when the river first began to be mined salmon were plentiful and that numbers of them would go up into the flumes where the water had a fall of ten feet. Wm. Greenleaf says from 1852 till the river was greatly discolored by mining the Feather was alive with salmon.

Grief Killed Him.

The emotional life of the horse is remarkable. There are instances on record where the death of the horse has been traced directly to grief. One instance is called to mind, which occurred more than 20 years ago. A circus had been performing in the little town of Unionville, Pa., when one of the trained horses sprained one of his legs so that he could not travel. He was taken to the hotel and put in a box stall. The leg was bandaged, and he was made as comfortable as possible. He ate his food and was apparently contented until about midnight, when the circus began moving out of town. Then he became restless, and tramped and whined. As the caravan moved past the hotel he seemed to realize that he was being deserted, and his anxiety and distress became pitiful. He would stand with his ears pricked in an attitude of intense listening, and then as his ear caught the sound of the retiring wagons he would rush, as best he could, with his injured leg from one side of the stall to the other, pushing at the door with his nose and making every effort to escape. The stableman, who was a stranger to him, tried to soothe him, but to no purpose. He would not be comforted. Long after all sounds of the circus had ceased his agitation continued. The sweat poured from him in streams, and he quivered in every part of his body. Finally the stableman went to the house, woke up the proprietor, and told him he believed the horse would die if some of the circus horses were not brought back to keep him company. At about daylight the proprietor mounted a horse and rode after the circus. He overtook it ten or twelve miles away, and the groom who had charge of the injured horse returned with him. When they reached the stable the horse was dead. The stableman said that he remained for nearly an hour perfectly still and with every sense apparently strained to the utmost tension, and then, without making a sign, fell and died with scarcely a struggle. The veterinary who was called remarked after the circumstances were told him, that unquestionably the horse died from grief. If it is possible for all the mental faculties of the horse to become abandoned to grief to such an extent as to cause death, how much more does he appeal to the sympathy and regard of mankind.

An Interesting Operation.

Last Saturday afternoon the stables at the Latonia track were the scene of a very interesting operation in veterinary surgery, says the Kentucky Stock Farm. Last Thursday morning Mildale, a very promising two-year-old colt, belonging to John Hannigan, the well known trainer and superintendent of the Latonia track, was injured while exercising. The horse was sired by Onondaga, and has never been entered for a race, but from the time he had made in exercising he was considered to be the most promising two-year-old of the lot. Mr. Hannigan was offered $6,000 for him early this week.

By a sudden start while exercising he fractured the bones of the right hind leg just below the hock. Saturday it was decided to put the horse in the sling. He had not slept for three days, and was getting worse and worn out of condition. The fractured bones were liable to separate at any time, and if that took place there would be very little chance of saving his life.

Saturday afternoon at two o'clock Dr. Anderson had everything ready. The sling was suspended from the roof of the stable by ropes run through pulleys. Dr. Anderson passed the heavy canvas piece, which forms the sling proper, under the belly of the horse, and fastened it on the other side. The ropes were slowly pulled up. The horse became alarmed at the feeling of relief from weight and began to struggle. But as soon as he found that no harm was intended he gradually yielded to the pleasure of the support, and sank into the sling.

The halter held his head, the sling held his body, and so exhausted was he that in a few minutes he fell sound asleep and snored like a man. He slept for about twenty minutes without waking—a length of time equal to two hours' sleep for a man. He soon became used to the sling, and fell asleep again.

The sling will be kept under him for thirty-five days. The fracture is bound in a plaster of paris cast, and, now that all weight is taken off of it, will heal rapidly. Without the sling the horse would so worry the injured part of the leg that inflammation would set in, and he would finally have to be shot. As it is, in about a month the injured leg will be as sound and well as ever, and the horse will be given a chance to fulfill the expectation of his owner.

GROVER CLAY,

Bay Stallion, bred by Hon. W. W. Traylor, San Francisco. Foaled 1883. By ELECTIONEER.

First dam MAGGIE NORFOLK by NORFOLK, son of Lexington.

Second dam by BILLY CHEATHAM.

Third dam by DORSEY'S GOLDDUST.

GROVER C. is a very handsome shade of bay, 15¾ hands high, and showing as much quality as a majority of thoroughbreds. He is as square-gaited a trotter as can be, and has shown a great deal of speed for the amount of handling. Has been worked very little, though he can show a thirty gait or better whenever called upon.

TERMS.

Fifty dollars the season, payable at time of service. Proper care will be taken, but no responsibility incurred for accidents or escapes. Mares will be pastured inside of the Oakland Trotting Park, which is especially safe, having two fences which give ample security against escape. There is a never-failing stream of water which runs through the field, and the food is good.

Season commencing first of January and ending the first of July.

This is the only son of Electioneer standing in Alameda County, and the high breeding on the side of his dam is a guarantee that his colts will inherit qualities already made famous through the mixture of Electioneer and Lexington blood. Ansel, 2:20, is from a Lexington mare, and Sunol's granddam, two-year-old record 2:18, was by Lexington, both Sunol and Ansel by Electioneer, Lexington the sire of Norfolk.

THREE CHEERS

Will make the Season of 1889 at Oakland Race Track, Oakland, Alameda County.

Pedigree.

Sired by imported Hurrah, first dam Young Fashion by imported Monarch; second dam Fashion by imported Trustee; third dam Bonnets o' Blue by Sir Charles; fourth dam Reality by Sir Archy; fifth dam by imported Medley; sixth dam by imported Centinel, etc. (See Bruce's American Stud Book, Vol. 1, page 432.)

Newminster by Touchstone (winner St. Leger 1831), dam Beeswing (winner of 54 races out of 64 starts) by Dr Syntax (winner Doncaster Cup 1837, 40, 41, 42, the only horse that ever accomplished that feat.)

THREE CHEERS is bred in the speediest and stoutest lines. His dam, Young Fashion was the dam of surprise, Scotland (the only horse that ever beat Asteroid a heat), Liverpool, Columbia and Bonnie Kate, the dam of Little Buttercup and the flying Bonnie Lizzie. His grandam, Fashion, was the greatest race mare of her era, defeating Boston in that historical match at four-mile heats, that is recorded as one of the greatest events in the annals of the turf. He is thoroughly sound in wind and limb, his family on both sides being noted for their exemption from curbs, spavins, roaring, or any other hereditary unsoundness. Horsemen, who can appreciate the highest type of the thoroughbred, are specially invited to inspect Three Cheers.

THREE CHEERS is the sire of Almont, Applause and Why Not, the only three of his get ever trained, and all are stake winners.

TERMS: $75 for the season. Mares not proving with foal can be returned the next season free of charge. Good pasturage at $5 per month. Mares cared for in any manner owners may desire, and fed on hay and grain, either or both, at reasonable rates. None but competent grooms employed, but no responsibility assumed for accidents or escapes.

N. B.—Mares sent from a distance in care of J. W. Morshead City Front Stables, San Francisco, will be forwarded without delay.

WILKES PASHA.

STANDARD 2618.

Dark bay with white hind feet, 16¼ hands high, bred by R. P. Pepper, of South Elk Horn Farm, Frankfort, Kentucky. Sired by Onward, 1411, record 2:25¾, trial 2:17. He by George Wilkes, 2:22, sire of sixty-five horses in the 2:30 list, ten of them with records below 2:20. First dam Fisher (dam of Clara Wilkes, 2:20¾, trial 2:25) by American Clay, 34, sire of Granville, 2:26; Maggie Briggs, 2:27; Ella Clay, 2:27¾; and the dams of Executor, 2:24½, Ranchero, 2:28¾; Judge Hawser, 2:21¾; Ambassador, 2:25, and nine others in 2:30; second dam by Wilson's Snow Storm, sire of Jim Irving, 2:23; third dam by Paddie Burns, thoroughbred.

Onward, 1411, is one of the noted sires of to-day. In 1887 he placed seven performers in the 2:30 list, including Hourl, three-year-old record 2:19¾; while in 1888 he still further sustains his reputation by adding nine of his sons and daughters to the list. Onward combines the blood of the two great trotting families, Hambletonian 10 and Mambrino Chief 11, and derives his speed inheritance direct through the greatest son of the one family, and the greatest daughter of the other.

Onward's dam was Dolly the dam of Director, 2:17, and Thorndale, 2:22¾, by Mambrino Chief. Dolly was one of the greatest speed-producing brood mares that ever lived. George Wilkes stands at the head of the list of sires of fast trotters with 65 performers with records of 2:30 or better, and the combination of these two great producers will breed on with absolute certainty.

WILKES PASHA will make the season of 1889 at the stables of the undersigned, at the Trancas Bridge, two miles north of Napa, on the Soda Spring Road.

TERMS,

For the season ending July 1, 1889, $35 in U. S. gold coin.

Alfalfa pasturage $1 per month; natural grass $2.50 per month.

Every attention and care will be given to mares, but no liabilities assumed for accidents or escapes.

LONGWORTH.

High Bred Trotting Stallion.

WILL BE FOUR YEARS OLD IN MARCH.

Dark Bay, Black Points, by Sidney.

OWNED BY A. C. DIETZ, OAKLAND.

Also the owner of Bay Stallion Ringwood, four years old, by Sidney, half brother to Longworth, which has showed trials over the Oakland Track, 2:30; quarters, in 34 seconds—2:16 gait —as a three-year old.

LONGWORTH, for finish, style and form cannot be excelled by any four-year-old horse in the State. His gait is perfect; going low to the ground, with smooth, easy motion, and has shown wonderful speed with but two month's work. As a two-year-old, he showed a 2:40 gait; as a three-year-old showed—trial—full mile over the Oakland track, 2:26; half mile, 1:10; quarters, 34 seconds; eighths, 16 seconds—a 2:08 gait.

Longworth is the result of a long line of distinguished ancestors, endowed with speed on the sire and dams' side that follows back for generations—consequently he cannot help but produce great speed.

He is half brother to the great three-year-old Adonis, record 2 14¾.

Gold Leaf, three-year-old record, 2:15.
Memo, three-year-old trial, 2:20¾.
Sister V., two-year-old trial, 2:32.
St. Nicholas, three year-old trial, 2:27¼.
Ringwood, three-year-old trial, 2:30.
Miss Sidney, one-year-old trial, half mile, 1:38.
Brown colt, three-year-old trial, 2:40.
Black colt, three-year-old trial, 2:39.
Linda, one-year-old trial, one quarter, 40 seconds.
Sorrel colt, two-year-old trial, quarter, 34 seconds, and a number more that have shown remarkable speed. One yearling that has shown one-eighth of a mile in 16 15 seconds—a 2:40 gait.

Sidney, the sire of Longworth, has a record of 2:19¾; Santa Claus, the grand sire, has a record of 2:17½; Sweetness, the grandam, record 2:21¾; Strathmore, the sire of Santa Claus, has twenty-two that have trotted below 2:30; Volunteer, the sire of Sweetness, has twenty-six that have trotted below 2:30. Volunteer is the sire of St. Julian, record 2:11¾.

Longworth's first dam Grey Dale, the dam of Daisy C., Silver Threads, and grandam of Phaceola; Grey Dale by American Boy, Jr.; he by American Boy, the sire of Belmont. Second dam Grey Poll by Winfield Scott, by Edward Everett; third dam Sorrel Poll by Sir Henry; fourth dam Daughter of Printer.

Grey Dale, the dam of Longworth, has shown herself a great producer of speed through Daisy C. and Silver Threads, the sire of Phaceola.

All letters pertaining to the service of this horse should be addressed to R. H. FARMER, Oakland, Alameda County, Cal.

TERMS: $40 dollars, payable at the end of the season or sooner if the mares are taken away. Season will close June 15th, 1889. The number of mares limited to twenty-five. ELECTIONEER STALLION

EROS,

Standard No. 5326.

Electioneer, his sire, has more 2:20 trotters than any living horse, and more 2:30 trotters than any stallion LIVING OR DEAD.

Eros has a record of 2:29¾, made in the fifth and deciding heat against a field of eight horses in his maiden race, and with only four weeks preparation after coming out of the stud.

Dam Sontag Mohawk, dam of Sallie Benton (four-year-old record 2:17¾). Sontag Mohawk by Mohawk Chief, by Rysdyk's Hambletonian.

Progeny.

Eros had last fall but three colts trained; the oldest a three-year-old trotter, an exhibition mile during the San Jose Fair in 2:34, last quarter in 36½ seconds. A two-year-old (timed by the judges) made a mile in 2:46½, and the other two-year-old in 2:47. All of these trials being made without a single skip, and none of these colts had then been handled three months from the hitting harness.

TERMS: $50 for the season, from February 1st to July 1, 1889. Due at time of service.

MEMO.

The Fast Trotting Stallion, the Best Son of Sidney.

Will make the Season of 1889 at the Oakland Trotting Park.

He was bred by G. Valensin at the Arno Stock Farm, Sacramento County, California; foaled spring of 1885.

PEDIGREE.

By Sidney.
First dam Flirt by Buccaneer.
Second dam Mohaska Belle by Flaxtail.
Third dam by John the Baptist.

Sidney by Santa Claus, 2:17½, his dam Sweetness, 2:21¾. Strathmore, the son of Santa Claus, has 22 of his get which have trotted in 2:30 or better, up to close of 1887, several having entered since, and Volunteer, the sire of Sweetness, has 26 in the same list. Buccaneer is the sire of Shamrock, two-year-old record 2:25, and of Flight, 2:29, and in him are combined the strains of Long Island Blackhawk, Vermont Blackhawk, and the dam of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Flaxtail figures prominently in both pacing and trotting descendants, and is the sire of the dam of Apex, 2:26, Flight, 2:29, J. H. McCormack, 2:29, and Shamrock, 2:25.

PERFORMANCES.

Memo only trotted in public in his two-year-old form, obtaining a record of 2:49, though he was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District Track, the second heat of which was made in 2:31½, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, and had it not been for a slight strain of his fore fetlock there is little question that he would have shown in public very close to the best record. On the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20½, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32½ to 34 seconds.

DESCRIPTION.

He is nearly if not quite sixteen hands high, and of powerful build throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both fore-feet white and a touch of white on his off hind quarters. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his action superb.

TERMS: One hundred dollars the season.

BOOK FULL FOR THE SEASON OF 1889.

JOHN ROWEN,
Oakland Trotting Park.

SIRE OF YOLO MAID, 2:14.

Alexander Button.

Alexander's Record, 2:31 1-4:

DESCRIPTION.

Alexander Button is a dark bay with fine flowing mane and tail; stands 15⅝ hands high; weight 1,200 pounds, and is of excellent disposition. When three years old he made a record of 2:28½, and when four years old, in his first race, he obtained a record of 2:26¾. Has been driven a mile in 2:16 in his four-year-old form, and has been driven a last half in 1:0-. Alexander Button is a natural trotter, inherited through the speed-lines of his ancestors, and imparts his speed to his offspring with uniform certainty. Yolo Maid, as a three-year-old, paced 18 heats, never leaving her feet—carrying the world's record of 2:14. Rosie Mc, as a five-year-old, rarely ever breaks; has a record of 2:20¾. R. H. Newton's colt, with very little handling, paced a 2:16 gait, and there are several other colts that show gaits from 2:16 to 2:20. Considering that Alexander Button has never been mated with a standard-bred mare—his colts show him to be a wonderful producer—and with his breeding, and terms of service, he is the cheapest and most wonderful horse in the State.

PEDIGREE.

Alex. Button was sired by Alexander, he by Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., his dam Lady Button by Napa Rattler by Bigger's Rattler, he by Sir Henry, and he by imported Henry, dam of Bigger's Rattler by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, dam of Napa Rattler, thoroughbred.

TERMS: $75, payable at end of season. Mares not proving with foal may be returned next season free of charge. Good pasturage will be furnished at $2 per month, and due care taken to prevent accidents or escapes, but no liability whatever assumed.

Will stand at City Stable, Woodland, on Thursday, Friday and Saturday of each week. The remainder of the time he will stand at my ranch, which is situated about 1½ miles west of Yolo station.

All mares sent to Fashion Stable, Woodland, Yolo County, will be forwarded free of charge.

MAMBRINO WILKES is a black horse, 16 hands high, and considerably longer than his height; has immense muscular development and weighs 1,200 pounds. He has the utmost symmetry of proportion and elegance of finish. No competent judge who has seen this horse has failed to pronounce him a perfect individual, and his breeding is certainly fashionable enough to satisfy the most fastidious. His colts are large, stylish and handsome, and Balkan has been pronounced by many the most stylish trotter on the turf.

PEDIGREE.

Sired by George Wilkes, dam Lady Chrisman by Todhunter's Mambrino; second dam by Pilot Jr.

For the purpose of placing the service of a Wilkes within reach of breeders, the same rate will be maintained as last year, to wit, $75 for the season. The Thoroughbred Stallion

Judge McKinstry,

Will make the Season of 1889, from March 1 to July 1, at San Felipe Rancho, near Gilroy.

PEDIGREE.

Foaled 1879, by Grinstead or Thad Stevens, dam Katy Pease; second dam Minnie Mansfield by imp. Glencoe; third dam Allegrante by imp. Young Truffle.

DESCRIPTION.

JUDGE McKINSTRY is a bright bay with black points, 15¾ hands in height, of a conformation combining power and speed. His breeding is one that cannot be excelled. The families on both sides being noted for their gameness and fleetness. Speakin of JUDGE McKINSTRY, Matt Storm, the well-known trainer, says: "He is the fastest race-horse I ever saw on the Sacramento track. He has shown me trials that were marvelous, one especially of a mile and a quarter that was ahead of the present record." He was started in several races when not in condition to run, and even then developed an amount of speed that is characteristic of the noted families from which he descends. His performances are too well known to need repetition here. Good judges of horses state positively that there can be no doubt of his sire, as he is a perfect picture of Grinstead, but rule compels us to name both sires.

TERMS: $75 payable when the mare is moved from ranch, or, $100, with the usual privilege. Good pasturage, $3 per month. Mares at owners risk. All communications must be addressed to

OSSIDINE

Results obtained at the well-known Kalamazoo Farm.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Price $3.00 per Large Bottle,

Owner of Eole, St Saviour, Eolist, etc, says; I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

FIVE DOLLARS A YEAR.

GERALDINE,

By Grinstead, Dam Cousin Peggy.

The Property of R. PORTER ASHE.

We this week present to our readers an excellent likeness of the celebrated race mare that made Al Farrow a world-wide reputation, forcing him out a mile in 1:40 being beaten only by a nose. She has ever been a consistant performer, and is considered by good judges to be the fastest mile horse in America to-day. It may seem rather strange to many that although she is now five years old, it was not until this season that the public had any confidence in her at a distance, but she has always rated very high as a sprinter and competent authorities have generally conceded that at a half or five-eighths she was invincible. Geraldine is a bright chestnut, 15.1 hands high, and although thought a small mare, is a perfect type of a race horse. She is magnificently proportioned and could not be improved upon "Gerry" as she is familiarly called by her owner and men around the stable, made her first appearance on Saturday, April 16, 1887, as a candidate for honors in the California Stakes, in which she was beaten only a short head by Walter Gratz's Pocatello, the half mile being negotiated in 49 seconds. Her first bracket was earned at the same meeting, where she beat a field of nine for the Eureka Stakes, running the five-eighths in 1:01½ which is extraordinarily fast for a two-year-old in the spring of the year. During that season she started altogether in fifteen races placing eight of them to her credit, her most prominent victory being that of the Prospect Stakes at the Brooklyn Fall Meeting where she defeated such cracks as Emperor of Norfolk, Sir Dixon, Satisfaction, Gallifet, and her old opponent Pocatello, the three quarters being run in 1:15½.

Even thus early in her career she began to demonstrate the greatest trait in her character; viz., ability to get away at the post. She seems to fully understand that the start can be made to play a very important part in a race, for she gets away with a marvelous burst of speed and it is rarely that she is not in the lead after a half a dozen strides have been made. In 1888 as a three year old she only started five times, never being at herself during the season. Her first credit mark for the year was a match race made between Mr. Ashe and Mr. Gebhard, the latter wagering $1,000 that his horse imp. Rosarium, could beat Geraldine a dash of half a mile. The result is told as follows in the official Turf Guide: "Betting 5 to 2 on Geraldine, who took an exercise gallop coming in twenty or thirty lengths ahead." She only won once after that in the year, beating Al Farrow and J. M. R. for the Record Stakes at the Fall meeting of the Blood Horse Association, they being second and third, while White Cloud, Applause, Sleepy Dick, Susie S, and Grisette ran unplaced. Very early this year she gave indications of having regained her old form, and was entered in several races at the San Jose Spring meeting, the five-eighths dash on the opening day falling to her, she winning easily in 1:02. In this race she beat a good field of horses, among others White Cloud and Al Farrow. On the second day she started in a three-quarter dash, taking first money handily in 1:15½. On the last day of the meeting she was sent to the post to contend against Al Farrow, Jack Brady, Nerva and Hello, in the owners handicap, the mare carrying 95 pounds and Al Farrow 95. The race was a hot one from start to finish, Geraldine leading to the last furlong where Al Farrow beat her out by a nose in 1:40. On the first day of the Blood Horse meeting at the Bay District track, she was started against White Cloud, Jackson, Jou Jou, Kildare, Rosebug and Ito in the 4½ furlong, heats, race.

To show what a favorite she was, the bookies posted her at 5 to 1 on, and she won each heat by two lengths in 0:55½ and 0:55¼. On the second day of the meeting she met her old opponent White Cloud, Emotion, Nancy, Little Phil, Glen Ellen and Longshot, in a three-quarter dash. As the flag fell one of the other horses knocked against her and she was thrown from her stride, causing her to lose many lengths. White Cloud, who had got a trifle the best of the send off, winning in 1:14, Geraldine not being able to come in better than fourth.

On the last day she was entered in the Owner's Handicap of a mile and carried 93 pounds, again meeting White Cloud and Al Farrow, also Ed McGinnis and Alaho. She had no trouble in beating her field, making the mile in 1:40¼, proving conclusively that the San Jose race was no fluke, but that she is possessed of extraordinary speed.

Mr. Ashe's stable has been sent East under the charge of Mike Kelly, who telegraphs that they arrived at Chicago last Saturday morning all safe and sound. Geraldine has a bright future before her, and our readers need not be surprised if she creates a sensation on the Eastern tracks this season. Geraldine was bred by her owner, and raised at the Maltese Villa Farm, situated about four miles from Merced, in this State, where there are at present some twenty-two brood mares, and the thoroughbred stallions Ed Corrigan, by Joe Hooker, dam Countess Zeika by Norfolk; Alta, by Norfolk, dam Ballinette by Monday or Young Eclipse; the third and last of the stallions being Jocko, by Cariboo, dam Reply by Enquirer. Mr. Ashe, with his 1,880 acres, has the foundation for a first-class breeding farm, there being plenty of land to spare for grain, orchards, etc. The brood mares are all of a high order, and first-class in every respect, but owner and employes always give the pride of place to the subject of our sketch, Geraldine.

Trotting at Bay District Track.

Last Saturday Mr. Hinchman had two trotting races at the Bay District Track. There were scarcely enough spectators to pay the men at the gate, let alone anything else. Mr. Killip was out in person to sell pools, but ten dollars was all he could elicit as first bid, and very few pools were sold at that limited rate.

Race for named horses; mile heats; three in five. Purse ——.

J. Garrity's Maggie A	1	1	1
P. Brandow's Haggin	2	2	2
Clausen's Mikado	4	4	4
Pearson's Swe. two	3	3	3

Time 2:50, 2:52 2:47.

The heats were all a repetition of one another, Garrity's pacer holding the trotters easy all the way, while Haggin was just as far in front of the other two, who only just saved their distance several times.

Match $150 a side; mile heats; three in five.

McManus' Perihelion	1	1	2	1
Havey's Bonanza	2	2	1	2

Time—2:32, 2:32, 2:37, 2:30¾.

They went off level round the first time, when Perihelion gradually drew away, and at the half was ten lengths in front and sticking to his work led by fifteen into the stretch, and won, pulling up with Bonanza at the draw gate. Perihelion now sold for 10 against 7 for Bonanza.

The non favorite broke at the eighth pole and lost six lengths and breaking in the rear when he settled down and closing up was only four lengths behind when Perihelion reached the wire.

No pool selling this heat.

Bonanza at once took the lead, and at the quarter was a good at the three-quarters. Perihelion closed up but was eventually beaten a length and a half, having lost a shoe in the heat.

A few pools sold at 10 Perihelion, 6 Bonanza.

Perihelion broke at the first turn and Bonanza was soon two lengths in front, but going up before the quarter was passed by the favorite who trotted squarely while Bonanza broke half way up the backstretch losing four or five lengths by it and was eventually beaten out by five lengths.

Directors of the P. C. T. H. B. Association Meeting.

The Board of Directors of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeders Association met at the Palace Hotel, S. F., last Saturday, J. H. White of Sonoma, presided. Messrs. M. Salisbury, W. Corbitt, R. T. Carrol, D. J. Murphy, Irvin Ayres, Ariel Lathrop, A. L. Hinds, F. Coombs and Wilfred Page were also present. The Secretary (W. Page) read the list of entries and after some discussion the National Stallion, Two-Year-Old, Three-Year-Old, and Four-Year-Old Stakes were declared filled. The 2:30 class and the free for all were re-opened to close on August the first, with five per cent. as first payment. The free-for-all will probably have less entries next time, as Favonia, 2:15, was entered by Marcus Daly and will scare all the opposition away. Mr. Corbitt offered to start conditional on Stamboul starting, but the latter will only start if it is a single handed race, and so that will probably fall through. The 2:30 ought to have a large increase of entries by the time they close.

The National Stallion has ten entries, and one from J. N. Ayres which arrived late. After some discussion it was agreed to write to the owners who have entries in the race, and if they are agreeable allow Mr. Ayres to start Bay Rose. Of course a single objection will invalidate his entrance.

A communication was received from I. H. De Turk, representing the trotting associations of Napa, Santa Rosa, Petaluma, Oakland, Stockton, Sacramento and San Jose, asking the association to co-operate with them in the formation of one association that would take the place of the National Association. The troubles consequent on affiliation with the National Association were set forth at length, and the document ended with a plea for an association that would embrace all tracks west of the Rocky mountains.

After considerable discussion, in which the directors were unanimously in favor of the proposed plan, it was decided that the Secretary of the association should communicate with all tracks and associations, wholly or in part, west of the Rockies and receive their vote on the question, the result to be reported at the next meeting.

Mr. Page then brought up the question of appointing a Secretary, and after a lengthy discussion in which every one was in favor of his keeping the position if he possibly could make it convenient. It was decided that Mr. Page be empowered to employ an assistant until some definite arrangement was concluded later on.

A full list of the entries in the closed stakes are given below.

Santa Rosa Park.

Preparations for the annual meeting at the Santa Rosa Fair Ground track, Monday, August 20th, are going on in an encouraging manner in every way, under the management of Mr. Sanborn, and the gentlemen selected to arrange the order of the regular circuit—Napa, Santa Rosa, Petaluma, Oakland, Sacramento State Fair, Stockton and San Jose—have provided a programme for each, to similarize and make uniform, for the convenience to the owners of horses, which will give full satisfaction to turfmen and visitors.

Bruce Cockrell, of Salinas, has at the track stables a string of flyers—among them his great mare Daisy D., and Mr. Sanborn has two very fine colts by McFadyan's Ironclad, by Anteeo. There is lively work going on at the track in training.

Katy Pease and Her Owner.

J.—"Do you see that gentleman on the other side of the street? I mean the one with the paper in his hand."

On glancing over, the writer noticed a gentleman of medium height, plainly dressed, rather full face, smiling features, neatly trimmed beard and moustache, dark complexion, and sharp, bright eye.

"Yes, I see him. Who is he?" the scribe asks.

"That is the owner of Katy Pease, one of the best mares ever brought to this coast. J. B. Chase bought her from Judge Mee some few years ago, and he considers her worth her weight in bullion."

Mr. Chase has been in the breeding business for at least fifteen years, and has been very successful, having raised such good ones as Hidalgo, Marian, Winifred, Glorianna, Warwick, Kildare, Glen Ellen, Marigold, and many others that have made names for themselves on the turf. He is a plain unassuming man of kindly ways, and always has a pleasant word for everyone he meets. He is noted for his charity, and is constantly giving to those in need. His breeding farm is situated in the Sonoma Valley almost within the confines of the town of that name, and although not as large as many of the more pretentious farms is fully their equal in the quality of stock raised. There is in all between forty and fifty acres of beautiful land, mostly devoted to hay and pasture. A small stream meanders through the place giving ample opportunity for the horses to get all the water they may require. The farm is well fenced and divided into paddocks for the use of the brood mares, many of whom are to be seen later in the season, although at present most of them are away, being bred to the fashionable sires of the day. It is at this time that alterations and improvements are made, so as not to interfere with the matrons and their foals, for Mr. Chase is very careful of his fine stock. He is the owner now of Katy Pease, well known for her great racing qualities, and also for being the winner of one of the four mile heat races formerly run in this city.

One of the peculiarities of Katy Pease was that she could sprint as well as go a distance, for she won many a three-quarter dash when in her prime, and no distance was too long for her to go. She has foaled many fast colts among the number being Judge McKinstry, Mistake and Marigold, the latter being one of the most speedy horses in the State. This may seem a little far fetched to those who do not study such matters, but the burst of speed she developed at the Bay District Track during the last meeting of the Blood Horse Association was enough to convince the most sceptical that she has a turn of speed that will be hard to beat. When the flag fell, King Hooker run against her, bringing the filly to her knees and it was all that jockey Pierce could do to get her on her feet again. By the time she was ready to make her race the balance of the field were fully twenty-five lengths to the good, and it seemed that the little chestnut was out of it. But her spirit was up and she began a run that has seldom been equaled on this coast. Length after length was disposed of, until at the entrance to the homestretch she was well up to the field, but the extraordinary speed told on the game daughter of Katy Pease, for she could not finish better than third, the last quarter being run in 23½ seconds. Katy Pease is at present at the Guenoc Stud Farm to be bred to imp. Greenback.

Mistake, a splendid specimen of the brood mare, is a daughter of Katy Pease, by Wildidle, and has already foaled Kildare and Glen Ellen, both of whom are well known to turf frequenters. She has this season a very fine filly by Three Cheers, which gives great promise, as the filly is a little beauty. Mistake is at the Langtry Farms, being bred to imp. Friar Tuck, a celebrated son of the immortal Hermit.

Mischief is another daughter of Katy Pease, by Thad Stevens. Her races were few, but she won a good contest at Sacramento as a two-year-old. She is the dam of Crofter, at present in the Matt Storn stable, of whom the trainer speaks very highly. She was also the dam of the filly that dropped dead on the Sacramento track last March. She is beinghberd to imp. Mariner (Oatcake) this season, and should prove a good nick for that horse.

Priscilla is an eight year-old by Thad Stevens, dam Eliza by Norfolk, one of the most highly prized mares on the Haggin ranch. Priscilla is the dam of Arathusa, a high class animal, also owned by Mr. Chase, who has been bred this year to Friar Tuck. Priscilla is now at Col. H. I. Thornton's breeding establishment to receive the embraces of imp. Mariner.

Rosedale is a chestnut mare by Joe Hooker, dam Lady Clare by Joe Daniels, and is now four years old. She was a very fair two-year-o'd, and will never again receive maiden allowances, having beat a field of good horses at Los Angeles. She also has been sent to imp. Mariner, Mr. Chase being partial to the great Australian sire.

The genial owner also has several fine appearing yearlings which will be heard from next year, if all goes well with them. He has in training, Glen Ellen, Kildare, Lurline, Marigold and Crofter, all of which are highly thought of by those who know the horses. A visit to Mr. Chase's place is always a source of pleasure, as the proprietor takes especial care to make the sojourner as much at home as possible.

Encino Rancho.

Thirteen miles from San Jose on the Monterey road, Thos. M. Fisher has 750 acres of as good land as ever laid out of doors. The rancho consists of orchards, green fields, large paddocks for horses, and an immense dairy, the latter being one of the best in Santa Clara county. Mr. Fisher has an ardent love for the equine race, and in this garden spot has quite a number of very fine thoroughbreds. A representative of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN was invited to call and take a look at the fine specimens of horseflesh now owned at the Encino Rancho, and a few days ago, received a cheery welcome as he drove up to the gate of the hospitable proprietor. After an introduction to Mrs. Fisher and the family an old fashioned country dinner was disposed of, the morning ride causing the scribe to have an appetite that any dyspeptic would have been proud of. Prior to visiting the stables a ride was taken around the broad acres, heavy and rich with the summer coloring. A small army of harvesters were hard at work attending to the hay crop which will be very large at the rancho this year, while preparations were being made in another field to begin heading within a few days.

The forty acres laid out in orchards have been attended to with great care, and although the trees are only of two years' growth, present a magnificent appearance, and it will not be long before the owner will receive a large return for the time and money expended. The dairy was looked over and found to contain all the latest improvements in addition to being kept in a high state of cleanliness. A large number of cows are milked daily, milk, butter and cheese being sent to San Jose and San Francisco; and such is the reputation of the Encino Dairy that ten times the amount now produced could be disposed of readily.

The stables are situated only a short distance from the residence, and at present are large enough for immediate use, although Mr. Fisher contemplates building an extensive stable and barn this fall, which will equal anything in the State. Notwithstanding the proposed changes, there are few breeding farms in California to-day which have as comfortable stalls and surroundings as are on this ranch at present. Brood mares always have an attraction for the lover of the horse, and it is to them that we first pay attention.

A beautiful chestnut mare was seen standing under the shade of a large oak tree, with a magnificent filly by her side, and to her we first paid our respects. She is Sally Hart, by Montana, dam Cricket, by Rifleman, second dam Lady Bell, by Belmont, third dam Lilly Hitchcock, by Lexington. The filly at her side will be a clear chestnut, and is by Judge McKinstry, who at one time gave promise of being a very fast race horse, and was given three preparations, but each time, an accident happening, he had to be thrown out of training. Judge McKinstry is by Grinstead, and out of that grand old race mare, Katy Pease, who made a reputation for herself almost two decades ago. The filly is a fine, shapely youngster, and, combining as she does the best blood of the New World, should make a name when brought to the post We did want to name the filly, but found that Matt Stone had been requested to do so by Miss Fisher, and that old-time horseman had called her Centella (Lightning.)

Another fine matron was close at hand, the ch m May D. Jr., who also has a foal by Judge McKinstry. May D. Jr is by Wildidle, dam Sally Hart, whose pedigree is given above. Her filly looks strong and hardy, will be very heavy muscled, and gives great promise of being a race horse of rare quality.

Viola Rea is a brown mare of magnificent proportions by Lodi, dam Mamie Hall by Norfolk, her dam Miami. Viola Rea has also a grand appearing horse colt, bay in color, by Judge McKinstry, and it is the equal of the other two; in fact the three foals would be hard to beat anywhere, and should add greatly to the name of McKinstry as a sire.

Quite a number of others were seen all in splendid order, and many about to foal. Mr. Fisher also has two in training for the fall meeting which give exceedingly great promise, one being an unnamed Wildidle colt, dam Viola Rea, He is almost the exact counterpart of E. J. Baldwin's Volante, and will be able to carry every pound of weight that that old crack was ever burdened with. He is much larger than Volante, being about 15.3 in height, gives every indication of the race horse, with plenty of bone, great speed, and an excellent constitution. If he does not prove a thorne in the side of many before the racing season closes we will be much mistaken.

The stable companion of the Wildidle colt is Fanny F., named after Mr. Fisher's only daughter, a young lady well posted in horse love, and an excellent judge of the racing qualities of a thoroughbred. Fannie F. is by Wildidle, dam Sally Hart, and has already appeared in public, having as a two-year-old got a place in the Golden Gate Stakes, beating Surinam for the position. She also defeated Elwood in a match race at the Bay District track, although not in condition to run, but Mr. Fisher has great confidence that she will make a mark for herself this year.

W. Lakeland is the popular owner just now. His horses have as strong a following as those who carried Col. McDaniel's or P. Lorillard's colors in days of old:

Henry Clay Blood.

"Erasmus," who is manifestly an admirer of Henry Clay blood and favors judicious mingling of it with that of Hambletonian, writes from New York to the Kentucky Stock Farm, with reference to the fact which he alleges—that daughters of Henry Clay are sought more than his sons, and asks the reason for this. He knows of no failures of the sons of Clay as sires, and they have produced trotters of high speed. He believes in the cross of the thoroughbred mare, and cites two instances to illustrate the efficacy of this: One, a horse by Henry Clay, out of a pure thoroughbred mare, which has no other gait than a trot; and that of a horse, sired by Electioneer out of thoroughbred mare, which was likewise a pure trotter. He reasons from these instances that while the influence of the dam is demonstrated in the speed, it is the trotting instinct in gait which comes from the sire that predominates. And if the daughters of Clay are desirable in breeding trotters, why should not also be his sons as sires to like purpose? "Erasmus" does not know of any of the sons of Clay which have not proved successful as sires, and unless they are to have apportunity, how are the daughters of his line to be perpetuated? Henry Clay produced Green Mountain Maid, and his Flora and Hattie Wood were by no means ordinary mares, besides many others still to be heard from. At the sale at General Tracy's farm, Mr. Shultz bought Hildegarde and paid the highest price except one bid for a brood mare, and at the Palo Alto sale the two-year-old daughter of Frolic by Henry Clay, brought the highest price, $3,000. He thinks that it is the cross of Electioneer on Henry Clay blood, and not the Hambletonian blood in Electioneer that causes the result; and he further thinks that the more of the Clay blood in amalgamation with that of Hambletonian there is, the better the result will be.

McLaughlin Talks.

Jimmy McLaughlin who is rightfully entitled to the title of King of American jockeys, for he has won more races than any other man, is a very modest young man, and his recent troubles have made him rather delicate about getting into print. So, after a great deal of persuasion, he consented to tell a Parish's Referee reporter about some of his races.

"I think about the best race I ever rode was one of my best wins. It was at Jerome Park way back in 1877.

"Col McDaniel put me up on his filly Lady Salyers, that, by the way did not amount to a thundering lot. We all got away pretty well, and I tried to get my mount a moving. It was like rowing a canal boat against the tide. Still I managed to hang on pretty well, and when a quarter of a mile away from home the lady commenced to make the dust fly. I was the last horse of nine in that race, and the way I cut them down going up the stretch. I just tickled her sides a little bit with my gaffs, and she fairly flew. On the way I overhawled the leader and then I drew my whip. I managed by hard riding to squeeze home a winner by a head. I think I felt more genuine pleasure at that win than I have at any time since.

"I had another good race early in my career.

"That was an old Rhadamanthus. It was in 1878, I think, when I was with Father Bill Daly, Mr. J. R. Gibney, who was at Saratoga, sent for me to ride hurdle races for him. I was doing nothing one day, and the Dwyer Bros. had old Rhadamanthus entered for a jumping race.

"They were hunting for a rider, and finally Mr. Wheatley, the secretary of the course, pointed me out. They accepted me, and told me to ride a waiting race.

"I did so. I guess I was number six in the race when we were entering the home stretch. I just let old 'Rad' out then, and with a little tickling landed him under the wire a winner by a good length.

"That was how I came to be with the Dwyers. They rather fancied me rnd engaged me.

"Another hard race and a close one was one I had at Sheepshead Bay. It was at the fall meeting, and I was up on Woodford in the Farewell Stakes.

"We got off well and Thackeray immediately joined me. It was only a seven furlong race, and I had made up my mind to go right out, make the running, and win the race. I didn't have a doubt about the winning part of it.

"Well, Thackeray got his head in front of the queen, and to save my life I could not get her past him. He stuck there like a barnacle to a ship's bottom, and although I tried my best we finished that way, Thackeray just winning by a head.

"Another hard race was when I rode Hanover in the Brooklyn Handicap last year. The Bard beat me. There was a pile of money staked on the black's success, and as I had a few pennies on myself you can depend on it that if winning was possible I was going to win. The Bard went out and rated along ahead of me a couple of lengths, and I dusted along behind with the black going very easy.

"Going around the far turn I eneeavored to move up. I did get up a little piece, but was never able to head the veteran. I worked very hard for it, and was badly disappointed at the result.

"Luke Blackburn was the greatest horse I ever rode. I made the record for a mile and a half with him, but it was in a weight for age race.

"He only carried 102 pounds in the Champion Stakes at Monmouth on August 17, 1880, so you see he was very light weighted, and as it was my ambition to beat the record with him, I just went out when the flag dropped and made the whole of the running. There were a number of good horses pitted against me, but they never got anywhere near me. I set a very fast pace, and coming into the stretch I let him go. After the race I looked at the time, and found that I had made the mile and a half in just 2:34.

"Tom Bowling had previous to that held the record at that distance, his time being 2:34¾.

"I have had several falls in my time, but none very serious. No, I don't feel any fear while riding. In fact there is hardly time to get scared, when you come to think of it. The fall I got at Gravesend two years ago was the worst one I ever got. I was on Tampa. That little dare-devil, Palmer, who was riding Subaltern, cut across me on the far turn. I tried to pull up and the reins broke. That was all I knew for some hours. They told me afterwards that Garrison and his horse were piled on top of me, and then I began to wonder that I wasn't killed.

"This last race of mine, the Handicap, was a disappointment to me, as it was to many others.

"I fully expected to win with Terra Cotta, but I am afraid the long journey was a set back to him. I rode for all I was worth, however. Indeed, I always do."

This season Jimmy rides for the Chicago Stable, and a few days ago he left for the West with the stable.

A. C. Dietz.

The present methodical movement against the business interests of Mr. A. C. Dietz on the part of the municipal authorities of Oakland, impresses the looker on as absolute persecution. It is an unfortunate condition of affairs if the governmental machinery can be used for the purpose of emphasizing the dislike one citizen may bear another. Mr. Dietz has been long identified with the City of Oaks, and in point of enterprise, public spirit and those other qualities that go to make good citizens, has ranked second to no one among his fellows. As a promoter of personal efforts and his private purse of the Golden Gate Fair Association he did much for the turf interests of the State, and his services in that direction are appreciated by horsemen. Among this class the general expression is of regret that such a man should have been singled out as the victim of personal and political malcolence. If there is any truth in the theory of the leveling effects of time, then this graceless assault on a worthy citizen will be a boomrang that shall some day return to plague the throwers.

Veterinary Meeting.

The California State Veterinary Medical Association held its quarterly meeting last Wednesday evening at the Baldwin Hotel, Dr. Maclay of Petaluma presiding, and Dr. McCollum of Sacramento officiating as secretary. Also present, Drs. Spencer (San Jose), Wadham (Santa Clara), Kiench (Santa Rosa), Orvis (Stockton), Massoero, Egan, Neef, Bowhill, Woodruff and Burns (San Francisco). After the minutes of the last meeting had been read a long discussion took place as to the form of certificate to be given to members of the Association. It was ultimately decided that Drs. Maclay and McCollum be appointed a committee to draw up a certificate in accordance with the form suggested by Dr. Bowhill, and that the certificate be signed by the President, Vice-President and the Examination Committee. A letter was then read from Dr. Morrison of Los Angeles, proposing Dr. Rowles of Pasadena as a member and at the same time expressing regret at his inability to be present. Dr. Spencer then read a very concise, interesting and instructive article on "Ergotism," giving several cases which had come under his personal supervision. A long discussion followed as to the effect produced by ergot, and also whether smut or some other fungus could not produce some of the symptoms. Dr. Bowhill then read his paper on "The Examination of Horses as to Soundness." It was a very careful, voluminous pamphlet, evidently the result of long and deep research into all the best authorities on that subject, and was productive, of course, of long and keen argument, finally winding up with the President's address, in which, after complimenting both the essayists, he critically reviewed both lectures, and wound up his remarks by saying that on the subject of soundness and unsoundness veterinarians differed just as much as anyone else. Senator Dixon was made an honorary member for his services in the Senate in favor of the bill promoted by the Association, high compliments being paid him for his assiduity and attention to their interests. After fixing the 25th of September as their next meeting the members adjourned to that date, when they will again meet in San Francisco.

Bay District Horses.

Most of the large stables have been already mentioned in this and previous editions with the exception of Brandow's. The above mentioned well known driver courteously conducted a representative of the Breeder and Sportsman through his stable the other morning. He has a large string of horses belonging to various owners. Under his care is Sol Wilkes, 2:47. He is a four-year-old, the property of Capt. Johnson. He is a stylish looking bay who can go easily in 30 now, and will surely lower his record about 27 seconds.

Charlie Havens has his black pacer Racquet, who has a record of 2:28½, and looks like bettering it with Brandow's careful handling. Col. J. E. English has two, bred by J. B. Haggin, one a very pretty brown mare called Haggie, and the other a slashing bay gelding by Albert W. out of a Hubbard mare, who is sure to trot, and even if he belies his looks he is worth a minature fortune as a buggy horse.

Mr. Smith has two very handsome ones, a five-year-old chestnut mare by Abbotsford, dam by Whipple's Hambletonian, who has already shown a mile in 2:25, and going easy, too. The other, a pacer, is a good, big, fine looking road horse. Ned Fay has one of the best looking buggy mares on the coast whom he wants to give a record, and Judge Levy has a bay gelding by Crown Point who looks a wear and tear customer.

The next two are Brandow's own property. One is a black mare by Orange County, dam by Bellfounder, who has been bred to Ansel, and a big, fine, handsome bay road horse by Alexander out of a seven-eighths thoroughbred mare, who looks as though he could stay for a week, and has pace, too.

Capt. Griffin has the black four-year-old Altamont mare that he purchased at the Malone sale. Driven round the track every day, her action being generally admired. The old timers Wells Fargo, Bonanza, Haverly and several others are plodding along steadily every day, and Griffin has one or two handy looking trotters and a chestnut pacer that shows great promise. Jack Garritty has a nice pacer in Maggie A., who is a very rapid mover, and with luck should lower the record made at the track last Saturday.

Death of Hubbard.

Meeting Mr. Richardson, of Fresno County, on Thursday, he informed us that the old stallion Hubbard dropped dead from heart disease on Wednesday. Hubbard was a great race-horse in his day, as the following record of his victories will show:

1871.—Long Branch, N. J., July 7.—July stakes for two-year-olds, $50 each, p. p., $500 added, three-quarters of a mile; won by Hubbard, beating Experience Oaks, Maliata and Sanford's King Lear filly. Time, 1:22. Value of stakes, $700.

1872.—Baltimore, Md., October 22.—Dixie Stakes, for three-year-olds, ninety nominations; dash of two miles, 110 pounds on colts, 107 on fillies; won by Hubbard, beating Joe Daniels, True Blue, Woodbine, Mate, Silent Friend, Wheatly, Experience Oaks and Brookland; won by six lengths. Time, 3:36½. Value of stakes, $13,800.

Saratoga, New York, August 22.—Sweepstakes for three-year-olds, two miles; won by Hubbard, beating Buckden, Nevada and Golitza. Value of stakes, $2,150.

1873.—Long Branch, N. J., July 10.—Grand Sweepstakes, $3,000, added to a sweepstake of $150 each, p. p., the second to receive $500, the third $250; four mile heats; won by Hubbard, distancing Wheatly and Bessie Lee in the first heat. Time, 7:37½. Value, $4,500.

Saratoga, N. Y., August 2.—Purse, $1,000, for all ages, dash of three miles; won by Hubbard, beating Wanderer, Harry Bassett and King Harry. Time, 5:34. Value, $1,000.

Saratoga, N. Y., August 9.—Purse $800, for all ages, dash of two and three-quarter miles; won by Hubbard, beating Boss Tweed and Katie Pease. Time, 4:58¾.

To this day his two miles and three-quarter record stands unequalled. He was a full sister to Katy Pease, being by Planet out of Minnie Mansfield by imp. Glencoe. He was foaled in 1869, but up to his death was full of life and vigor.

The Napa Turf Club.

The wide awake citizens of Napa have a turf club and gave a meeting on last Friday and Saturday, rain having caused a postponement from May 17th and 18th. A representative of the Breeder and Sportsman visited the beautiful valley city and was agreeably surprised by the spirit displayed, the members being very enthusiastic, and all of them worked like Trojans to make the meeting a success. The adjoining towns were well represented familiar faces being present from Vallejo, Santa Rosa, Petaluma, Healdsburg, not forgetting San Francisco and Sacramento. The track was in splendid condition, and as usual very fast. The attendance was not as large as the sport merited, but the farmers are all so busy in the harvest fields at present, that a large attendance could hardly have been anticipated. The weather was of the best, and the racing enjoyable. While sitting watching the crowd from the timers stand, the attention of the writer was called to several barns nestling among a forest of oaks, but a short distance from the track. The vision presented to the eye, recalled many old reminiscences of racing in the early days of California, for those stables that we are watching were once the homes of Lodi, Ashland, Billy Cheatham, Strideaway, Shannon and a host of other cracks that made the name of Nathan Coombs celebrated from the Atlantic to the Pacific. And there also was the old race track over which many a hotly contested heat has taken place, and to which objective point many a horseman has gone to witness the equine battles. But we are here to record things of the present and not to ruminate over what is past and gone. The pool selling was in the hands of Whitehead & Co., of San Francisco, but the betting was rather slack, the only race of the meeting in which any amount was placed in the box being the 2:30 free for all.

The officers on the first day were D. Brown, C. Scott and J. A. Canfield. Timers, Messrs. Gardner, Sperry and Zane, and A. H. Conkling as clerk of the course. The first race on the card was the St. Helena Citizens' purse for buggy horses, and four responded to the bell, J. W. William's Redwin; Orrin Jones' Gasmeter, T. Mooney's Dixie, and D. Smith's Flora S. The three heats necessary to decide the race were all of a sameness, Redwin proving too much for the balance, Gasmeter being the only one that could make the winner show any speed.

In the pools prior to the first heat Redwin sold for $20; field $10.

The second race of the day had three entries, B. C. Holly's Vesolia, D. R. Mizner's Mattie P., and H. B. Starr's Cora C. It was a generally conceded fact that Holly had the race at his mercy, for Vesolia seemed in splendid fettle, while the others were short of work. But then, one can never tell until it is all over what the result will be. Vesolia sold in the pools for $20, Mattie P. for $6, and Cora C. for $4.

The word was given to a splendid start, and away the trio went, all making a gallant fight for the lead, but at the half Vesolia took a commanding position, and won an easy heat, trotting beautifully, in 2:31¼. Cora C. broke twice, or she would have stood a better chance for the heat.

The second heat was but a repetition of the first, Vesolia never making skip or break, although hard pressed by Cora C., Holly, however, had the daughter of Stamboul well in hand, and won as he pleased in 2:32½.

When the horses were called out for the third heat, it was plainly apparent that Vesolia had not cooled out properly. When the word was given Cora C. had the best of the send off, and quickly placed two lengths between herself and Mattie P. On the backstretch it looked as though Vesolia was a distance to the bad, she having broke badly, and would not settle until she was brought almost to a standstill. The heat was won easily by Cora C., Harry Starr handling the Whippleton mare in a masterly manner. Time, 2:32. Mattie P. second and Vesolia a bad third.

The fourth heat showed conclusively that Vesolia was now out of the race, for she tired wonderfully, but to show that the heart was there, after the field was a dozen lengths to the good, the little descendant of the Moor plucked up a lot of energy and made a bid for the heat but she could not quite accomplish it, Mattie P. beating her for second place, by a full half length although Mr. Holly tried to argue with the judges that he beat Misner's entry by the length of his whip, but he was mistaken for Mattie P. beat him a full half length.

Cora C. now had the race well in hand and captured the next two heats in hollow style in 2:42¾ and 2:33½, the Holly youngster not showing up nearly as well as she will later in the season.

SUMMARY.

Cora C., br m by Whippleton, dam by Naubuc	Stan	2	2	1	1
Vesolia, b m by Stamboul, dam by The Moor	Holly	1	1	3	3
Mattie P., b m by Jackson Temple	Mizner	3	3	2	2

Time, 2:31½, 2:32½, 2:32, 2:42½, 2:33½.

A special named race was next on the programme, Frank Denio naming Gus D.; T. Smith, Tanner Boy; W. McGill, Fanny, and H. B. Starr, Black Prince.

In the pools Gus D. was the favorite, selling for even money against the field, but he was not in the race except in the first heat, where he managed to finish second. Black Prince won with plenty to spare, his able driver having him in much better form, although he had had only slow work, while the others showed up to poor advantage.

SUMMARY.

Time—2:47½, 2:42½, 2:45.

SECOND DAY.

The first race of the second day brought out, Black Prince, Lela and Anti-Coolie. In the pools Anti-Coolie was a pronounced favorite, but lost the two first heats to Black Prince, the black gelding not showing up much the worse for the racing of the day before. However, he captured the last three heats, trotting steadily and without a break.

SUMMARY.

Anti-Coolie br s by Anteeo	Mizner	3	3	1	1	1
Black Prince blk g Whippleton	Starr	1	1	3	3	3

Time, 2:36½, 2:37, 2:45, 2:39½, 2:39¼.

The open race for 2:30 horses had as contestants Palo Alto's Marion, Holly's San Diego, and Starr's Flora Belle. It was generally understood that Marion was only out for a record, but it would have taken a very fast trotter to have beaten her that day, she proving herself a first class mare. Mr. Holly's entry has a pacing record of 2:21, but he gives every indication of proving a remarkably fast trotter, for although he still wears the hobbles, the signs of speed are not lacking. Marion won in three straight heats, with little or no trouble, and has been sent to the cover of Electioneer, Senator Stanford being desirous that she should have a record before she was sent to the stud.

SUMMARY.

Marion, b m, Piedmont—Lady Morgan	Laird	1	1	1
San Diego, b g, Victor—	Holly	2	2	2
Flora Belle, blk m, Alcona—Fontana	Starr	3	3	3

Time, 2:26¾, 2:27, 2:28¾.

In the pools Marion sold at almost even money against the field.

The third and last race of the meeting was the Napa Citizens purse for buggy horses, which was prolific of much fun, but was very one sided, as Mr. Inman's White Stocking was much faster than any of the other entries.

SUMMARY.

White Stockings, b m, Cal. Dexter, dam by Gladiator	Inman	1	1	1
Wilkes Pasha, br s	Scott	3	2	2
Tobe, b g	Sampson	2	3	3
Yellow Boy, buckskin g	Madred	4	4	4

The best time was 2:47½, the winner showing that she could have gone much faster if required. Lack of space prevents a description of the horses at the track now in training, but a full report will be given next week.

Solano and Napa Fair.

In the proper column appears the announcement of the Solano and Napa Fair Association, which begins the circuit this year on August 13th. The speed programme is an exceedingly attractive one and the purses offered are most liberal in amount, aggregating over $11,000. The directors are the right men in the right place, and have gone about the business in the right way. Residents of the District are seemingly of but one opinion and that is that the 1889 fair will be a grander success than any that have preceeded it. The grounds will be much improved and accommodations provided, far in excess of what there was last year. The track is one of the fastest in the State and by many trainers considered the very best to train on, as is evinced by the fact that over forty horses are quartered there now, receiving preparatory work. The entries close on August 1st, which give owners ample time to find out what their horses are capable of doing and in what classes to enter them.

Prohibition as to Quail.

The Santa Cruz Surf chronicles an instance of a new thing in capturing quail. A farmer soaked grain in whisky, strewed the ground with it, and awaited the consequence. He had been less successful in shooting quail than he had hoped for, and his eagerness for a nice mess of the delicious bird stirred alike his maw and his gall. There was no ingenuity in it. Possibly he had learned, by practical experience, the effect of whisky upon men—himself included—and therefore essayed that process of comin' thro' the rye or of testing the strength of corn juice upon the innocent and unsuspecting quail. They ate of the soaked grain and fell by the wayside, in fact all over the field, stupified, prone and helpless. All he had to do was to gather them in, gather them in. A couple of dozen brace would have sufficed him of the birds, sober and sensible; but he easily picked up a hundred or more. He had a dead thing—dead drunk quail. What a performance for a man who doubtless boasts his sportsmanlike qualities? It is somewhat as a rounder's boast of rolling a victim overcome by drink. Bagging a hundred quail without discharge of gun or use of powder and shot! If not marvellous, it is malicious. The thoughtless and vicious who scatter coculus indicus to scoop ten times the quantity of game fish they require are of the same base metal, cast in a mould simply scaly and not feathered. It is noble sport, is this new way of bagging quail.

It lacks only the head of the sportsman in the bag. Capturing a drunken man involves small risk to the hoodlum—he has to fear only the police. But suppose that this order of quail hunters should likewise have before them the fear of the officers of the law? Will not the officers of the game law see that hereafter this peril shall be to deter offenders? Putting salt on the tails of birds to catch them is a fool's fancy. But he is not to be rated as a fool in law who soaks grain in whiskey to overcome game birds. The tangle-foot which prostrates the man must inevitably cause the quail to tumble to it. Who wants drunken quail on toast? Only the man in Santa Cruz, it is to be hoped. Prohibition is lost upon him. Yet he should be made to observe it toward quail, toward all game birds. What an outfit for a sportsman! No gun, no powder, no shot, no dog—except the hunter. Instead, a bag of grain, a demijohn of pisen whiskey, and a scavenger's big gunny sack in which to stow away the sodden birds—nature's feathered bipeds fallen in the trick of imitating Plato's featherless bipeds! The embalmer of such sportsmen, when dead, should be a taxidermist.

The McMahon stable is having unusually hard luck this season. All of the horses are just about good enough to get beaten. They win when least expected and when not backed. Garrison promises to prove a useful youngster, as he ran a good race yesterday.

The imbecile who pretends to keep the readers of the Chronicle posted on racing matters, has discovered that Porter Ashe has returned from the East.

The dividend on the Enquiress filly was the twenty-second largest on record, straight, and the second largest for a place. At Jerome the straight dividend has only once been beaten, and that was in 1872, when Nickajacket paid $1,178.

In Wallace's Monthly, Martin Halfpenny, in a strong article, urges that pacers with a record of 2:25 should be allowed to come in the registered list, and if not, then it is high time that the pacing-horse breeders should organize a national pacing-horse breeders' association and commence a pacing register.

A great number of Eastern sporting papers, whenever the name of Stamboul is used, state that Mr. Rose has wagered $10,000 that Stamboul will equal or lower 2:12 this year. Mr. Rose has not bet $10,000 on the result of any trial or race, but has made a wager of $5,000 with Counsellor Crawford that Stamboul will trot in 2:12 or better during 1889.

Messrs. Miller & Sibley, of the Prospect Hill Farm, Franklin, Pa., have offered Senator Leland Stanford $7,500 for each foal that Beautiful Bells may produce in the future, if sired by Electioneer, the money to be due and the foal to become the property of Miller & Sibley as soon as it is able to stand. The proposition, if accepted, is to begin with the filly foaled this spring.

A case of horse resurrection has occurred in Newburg, N. Y. The horse died, apparently, Thursday, and was buried beneath a pile of rubbish until an "equine undertaker" could be summoned to remove it to the bone factory. Saturday removal was attempted. A rope was fastened to the animal, and on the first pull it arose to its feet and frisked its tail. Now the equine is seen drawing garbage on the streets.

Scott with $9,230, The Morriss $7,655 and W. C. Daly $7,655.

D. J. McCarty has denied to a Chicago reporter that Albert Cooper will train Sorrento for the American Derby. As the story was copied from my gossip page, it may be as well to state that the information was received from Dan's brother who is supposed to be the San Francisco end of the combination. At the same time he also said that Hamilton had been secured to ride the sorrel for the Derby.

Wood Wattles sent young Miami to Director. He could not have made a better selection. By the way, I hear that he has had a good profit already offered for two of his purchases, particularly the Anteeo suckling, but as he did not buy them for that purpose he refused to put a price on them, and wisely, too, for in a couple of years the colt ought to be worth as much as he gave for the lot.

Jimmy Dustin, of Oakland, is trying to fool the boys at the track by not driving the mile from wire to wire, but he has a little post that he starts from and finishes at, and finishes the balance at an easy gait. I timed Maggie E. one day lately when Mr. Dustin did not know I had "caught on," and saw her go Jimmy's mile in 2:18¼, and even then the mile was made, wire to wire, in 2:20½.

Andy McDowell is seemingly determined that the Pleasanton Stock Farm shall produce the speediest trotters of the year, for he is sending his charges along in a manner to frighten the ordinary trainer. He has under his care the well known trotting mare Lillie Stanley 2:17½, and she gives every indication that her present record is no measure of her speed, for only a few days ago Andy drove her a full mile in 2:20, the last half being trotted at a gait that would surprise the firmest believer in her great speed.

Charles H. Kingsley no more, but Jockey Kingsley now. I saw the redoubtable bookmaker at the Bay District during the early part of the week, driving his trotting horse, Allie Whipple, and holding the watch with the skill of a professional. I only timed one mile, 2:42, the last half being done in 1:20. This horse should be able to do much better than his record, 2:33¼, and probably will before winter sets in, and Charley has promised to set up the wine if he can lower the record, driving himself.

While I have not seen the yearling horse colt by Sidney, that Dick Havey is driving at the Bay District, I have heard from twenty that have, and they are unanimous in the opinion that Norlaine's yearling record will be beaten beyond the peradventure of a doubt. While many are of this same opinion, yet Mr. Marvin at Palo Alto, is laughing in his sleeve, still, wondering how many seconds the stallion can beat it by, for he has two that are being prepared to knock several seconds off Norlaine's time, and he naturally feels a little anxious for the result.

Gold Leaf, 2:15, within a few days has shown a half mile in 1:05, and there is every reason to believe the chestnut mare will be able to reduce her pacing record considerably. Margaret S. is also doing good servicable work, halves in 1:08 and full miles in 2:20 being placed to her credit lately. Mr. Saulsbury is highly elated over the work shown by the latter, for if she keeps on as she is doing, the three-year-old record will surely be broken.

By late Australian files we note that Antaeus by Sir Modred, won the First Nursery Handicap at five furlongs, beating a field of seventeen, and that little Bernie by Cheviot won the Nursery at Warwick Farm from a field of eleven, and ran second in a field of twenty-two at six furlongs, only Sinecure, the crack two-year-old of Australia, being able to lower his colors. The great Carbine has beaten all records by winning the Sydney Cup, carrying 126 pounds, as a three-year-old, in a handicap against all ages, and running the two miles in 3:31.

President Gregory and Secretary Lagrave have their names attached to the announcement of the third annual meeting of the Amador and Sacramento Agricultural Society, comprising the 26th district. Mr. Gregory is an old-time horseman, and it goes without saying that the meeting will be a grand success. In contradistinction to the majority of the meetings, the one to be held at Ione gives more purses for the runners than they do for the trotters, so that it is likely all the bang tails in the State will meet there August 6, 7, 8, and 9. The entries close July 20th, and should be well filled.

James Stinson, of Chicago, has purchased from Dan McCarty, the black four-year-old Linda (full sister to the great Fleet, yearling record 2:36), by Sidney, dam Flirt, by Buccaneer. Linda trotted a quarter in 40 seconds when a yearling. Price $5,000. Also the gray mare Maud Medium 4782, son of Happy Medium, for $2000; the bay mare Mabel, by Alexander 490, son of George M. Patchen, Jr., 31, dam by Whipple's Hambletonian, for $1,000; and a yearling bay colt by Sidney, dam Miss Gift, by the thoroughbred stallion Wildidle, for $2,400. This youngster is in California, and will probably be sent to Mr. Stinson's ranch in Washington Territory.

It is many a long day since I visited the Willows, in Colusa County, but the racing programme issued by the Willows Agricultural Association this week recalls to my mind many an happy hour spent with the genial sportsmen, who all seem to thrive and do well in that city of the plains. It seems but yesterday that the antelope were as plenty in Colusa as jack-rabbits are now in Kern, and yet here is a full programme offered to the horsemen of the State that would be a credit to many a larger city. The entries close on August 1st, and it would be well for all owners of trotters, pacers and runners to examine the announcement and then make entries for the Willows meeting.

The winner of the French Derby, Clover, is by Wellingtonia, a half brother to W. L. Scott's imported Rayon d' Or, the sire of the famous French mare, Plaisanterie. He ran once as a two-year-old and then was third for the Prix de Villiers at the Paris autumn meeting. He did not run in any of the spring three-year-old fixtures at the Paris spring meeting, but was well backed for the Prix du Jockey Club in all the early betting. He is not entered, however, for the Grand Prix de Paris, to be run to-morrow (Sunday), for which, however, his owner will probably start a full brother to Plaisanterie.

From the most reliable authority comes the statement that John E. Turner of Philadelphia, known on the trotting turf as the "General," intends to give up driving and will devote himself to the running turf. Some recent purchases of thoroughbred yearlings were for him, and are now at Ambler Park in his stable. Turner has for many years ranked among the first of drivers, and there is no one living who can claim superiority over him either in the preparation of a horse or in the tactics of the race. He has, however, been notoriously averse to obtaining records, and in the meeting at Fleetwood he displayed this peculiarity strongly. His withdrawal from the trotting turf is of much import.—New York Herald.

Darbin, who was imported in 1885, was a great and consistent horse, though he is never given credit for one of his greatest performances. He ran in mud during a pouring rainstorm with 135 pounds up fourth to the Assyrian with 111. This was done over the Melbourne cup course of two miles, but although he ran a good fourth he is never given credit for it, and he is always recorded as unplaced in a field of twenty-two. In the judgment of many this performance was only beaten by his Sidney gold cup win, when he carried 134 pounds to victory over 2¼ miles, giving the second and third horses 30 and 20 pounds respectively, and the minimum weight 47 pounds.

Mr. Geo. Leigh, of Buenos Ayres, Argentine Republic, shipped last week to his distant Southern home, the following thoroughbreds from Lexington, Ky.:

Cossack, chestnut colt, 2 years old, by Casino, dam Cameo by Camargo; bought of S. H. Boughman, Stanford, Ky.

Miss Bowler, bay mare, 5 years old, by Little Ruffin, dam Hazel Eye by imp. Phaeton; bought of the J. B. Wilgus estate.

Falls City, bay horse, 6 years old, by King Alfonso, dam Grecian Bend by Lexington; bought of Mr. Tripp of Madison, Wis.

Rhadama, bay mare, 6 years olds, by Rhadamanthus, dam Volante by Vandal; bought of the J. B. Wilgus estate.

Harlanton, bay colt, 2 years old, by Harry O'Fallon, dam Credora by Strathmore; bought of W. R. Letcher, Richmond, Ky.

Iacamore, chestnut colt, 3 years old, by Ten Broeck, dam Slipper by Planet; bought of W. R. Letcher.

Loraine, bay filly, 2 years old, by Lisbon, dam Glenmary by Glenelg; bought of W. R. Letcher. The Live Stock Record also says that Mr. Leigh shipped with them four coach mares that he bought from parties in Illinois, and the trotting stallion Billy C, 7 years old, by Flying Cloud; bought of W. H. Jacobs, Madison, Wis.

The twelve head cost $12,000. If no accidents occur these horses should reach their destination in five weeks.

The famous three-year-old Galen is reported broken down. Judging from the account we had of the accident he will never be seen again on a track. As a two-year-old he was something of a sensational animal, his most notable performance, perhaps, being when he ran a close third in the Coney Island Futurity. Last fall at Nashville the Chicago stable purchased him from Jim Gray for $10,000 cash, and the investment proved a costly and disastrous one. Galen started three times this spring, twice at Nashville and once at Latonia, but he did not show to advantage, exhibiting very decided quiting qualities, especially at Latonia. His best performance was at Chicago last season, when he ran a half mile in 48 seconds.

The latest quotations received from Cutler and Whitney show but slight variation from last week. They are as follows: 4 to 1 against Spokane, 5 to 1 Proctor Knott, 7 to 1 Sorrento, 8 to 1 Don Jose, 15 to 1 each Sam Wood, Flood Tide and Once Again, 15 to 1 each Salvator, Come to Taw and French Park, 25 to 1 each Galen, Kasson, Heron, Bootmaker Retrieve, Blue Rock and Sportsman, 30 to 1 each Ganymede, Fresno, The Lioness and Philip D., and 35 to 100 to 1 the others. For the Suburban Handicap the same firm offers 5 to 1 against Prince Royal, 4 to 1 Terra Cotta, 7 to 1 each Badge and Raceland, 12 to 1 Inspector B., 15 to 1 each Hanover, Gorgo, Montrose, Gallifet and Belvidere, 20 to 1 each Eurus, Elkwood and Fitz James, and from 25 to 150 to 1 the others.

One week from to-day the entries will close for the July meeting at Eureka, and from present prospects there will be a large congregation of horsemen from all over the State. Already several stables have been shipped up, including Kelly & Samuels, Hazlitt & Davis, Stover, and on Wednesday last Dan Dennison took up Dave Douglas, G. W., Rettie B. and others. The officers of the new association are working like beavers, and it will be no fault of theirs if the affair is not a success in every respect. A glance at the programme will show that there has never been such liberal purses offered in the State outside of San Francisco, and this will have great weight with owners, for they will go where large inducements are offered. Eureka will be in holiday attire for the meeting, and as the only Fourth of July exercises held in the country are to be at Eureka, the outside population are likely to make the county seat their headquarters for that week at least, and this will insure large attendance at races. Now remember, all entries close next Saturday, so send in your entries at once, or you may forget to do so until it is too late.

Messrs. Killip & Co. held a very fair sale of shorthorn cattle at the Bay District Track last Tuesday. The prices were not big, but considering the class of cattle and their general appearance they brought as much as they were worth, for had it not been for their pedigrees quite a number of them would never have been suspected of being near a shorthorn. The bulls sold well, especially the youngsters. The old bull, Grand Prince of Baden, would have sold much better had he not seemed very rheumatic and stiff behind. Messrs. Hill and Newhall bought nearly all the cattle, and after the sale Mr. Hill arranged with Mr. Newhall so that the latter took both lots, and they were consequently shipped to the Santa Marguerita Ranch, there not being enough to ship to the lower country alone, and Dan Murphy, Jr., for whom Mr. Hill was buying, was not very sweet on the bargain. The geldings were a mixed lot, and were returned unsold. The mares sold well, Mr. Hill taking three. It seemed rather singular, though, to breed two daughters of Suffolk Prince back to him. Possibly the owner being associated with shorthorns so long may account for the seeming eccentricity.

The "Tallyrand of the trotting turf," Orrin a Hickok, has twenty head of horses in his string at the Bay District track, and it is not only Stamboul that he is preparing, but many others whom it is to be hoped will make low marks before long. Early in the week Mr. Hickok sent Alfred S a full mile in 2:20, and this son of Elmo has not got to his lowest mark yet, for he trotted the last quarter in 33 seconds. His favorite two-year-old, Peep O'Day, which he owns in partnership with Wilfred Page of Sonoma County, is an improving colt, and even this early in the season is completing full miles in 2:40. Peep O'Day is by Dawn, 2:19½, dam Emma Stites, a mare of great individual merit, but whose pedigree is unknown. If the young chestnut colt can enter the charmed circle, it will entitle his dam to registry, and at the same time make standard two others of her progeny. Dr. Proctor, of Petaluma, has had a four-year-old chestnut mare in training, but acting on the advice of Mr. Hickok, has taken her home, as the front feet are slightly contracted; expanders have been placed in the hoof, and the mare will be turned out, in hopes that next season her feet will be in better shape. Mr. Hickok also informs me that under no consideration will he start Stamboul in a field of horses, but he is willing to trot him against any other one horse that may be pitted against him. Mr. Hobert, the owner of Stamboul, left explicit orders to this effect prior to starting for Europe two weeks ago, and of course Mr. Hickok feels that he cannot act otherwise.

One of the most important thoroughbred sales of the season will take place at Washington Park, Chicago, Ill., on Friday, June 21st. The sale is under the management of B. G. Bruce and P. C. Kidd, and thirty-one yearlings will be sold. The first on the list is a chestnut colt by George Kinney, dam Arizona, by Lexington. By all the laws of breeding, this colt should be a racehorse. George Kinney was a grand performer, and one of the best colts that ever appeared on the turf. Arizona was the dam of Aranza, Glenarm, Amerique and other good ones. A bay colt by Aretino, dam Kennebec, by imp Glengarry, should attract attention. Aretino is by Aramis, out of Sprightly, by Lexington. Sprightly was the dam of Volturno, Elias Lawrence and other winners. The third on the list is a colt by imp. Glengary, dam Pearlash, by Pat Malloy, etc. Glengarry has shown his ability to sire such fast ones as Stuyvesant, Greenland, Kirkman and Fletch Taylor. A bay colt by Forester, dam Azelea, by King Alfonso, has a very strong pedigree. Forrester is by The Ill-Used, while the dam of Azelea was by Lexington, and her dam was by imp. Glencoe. A filly by Forester, out of Albatross, by imp. Glengary, has superb winning blood in her veins. Albatross is a sister to Amerique, and her dam is Arizona, by Lexington. The admirers of Luke Blackburn will be in attendance to bid on a filly by that sire, out of Amerique, by imp. Glengarry; second dam Arizona, by Lexington. These are fair samples of the class of youngsters which will be offered, and it need not be stated that they are first-class. A glance at the catalogue shows in addition to the above foals by imp. Mr. Pickwick, Bramble, Glengarry, Luke Blackburn, Blazes, Bertram, Bocaccio and Vanguard. Send for a catalogue.

THE GUN.

An invitation in the following form was received on Monday last:

GRASS VALLEY SPORTSMAN'S CLUB.
GRASS VALLEY, June 7, 1889.

Dear Sir: Your presence is cordially requested at the annual Dove Hunt and Camp Stew of the Grass Valley Sportsman's Club, that will take place on Saturday, June 15, 1889, at the camp ground on the ranch of Theo. F. Van Slyke, near Indian Springs.

Come and partake of our hospitality.

GEORGE FLETCHER, President.

The casual reader would see nothing incendiary or nihilistic in the invitation, but to the initiated the seemingly hospitable invite is as deadly as can be. It means a smooth outward seeming of politeness, but inwardly a mess of campstew, cocktails, Fletcher's bad jokes, boiled owl, and other horrible things too numerous to mention. The meetings of the Grass Valley Club have become famous, and the one to come will probably mount to heights unknown heretofore.

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Mr. F. A. Mann, of this city, offers for sale a fine imported Gordon setter which won second in the open class at the San Francisco show of 1888. The dog is at Mr. De Mott's kennel, near San Rafael. Is in good condition, and a bargain at the price asked.

Mr. Vredenburgh, Secretary of the American Kennel Club and a most efficient officer, would never suspect that he had furnished us with an advance report of the last meeting of the A. K. C. if he relied upon the name appended to the report as it appeared last week. Kennel readers, of course, knew that a bit of careless proof-reading had been done, and an apology is now offered to the popular Secretary. The A. K. C. is moving on grandly, and the credit is due, in large measure, to Mr. Vredenburgh.

Our contemporary, the San Francisco Sporting Life, is sadly astray in its kennel notes. They appear to be done by some one who desires to placate men rather than to furnish news about dogs. The paper is excellent in other respects, but would do well to let alone, fields in which it is likely to be absurd, as in its kennel matter of the issue of June 8th.

The noted greyhound Misterton is dead. He won the Waterloo Cup in 1879, and has since been a fashionable sire, having earned over $4,000 for his owner.

Entries to the Los Angeles Bench Show are announced to June 17th. Some seven or eight dogs owned in San Francisco have already been entered, and the number should be largely increased. Mr. H. H. Briggs, of this city, will judge all classes.

One day last week was spent in visiting Mr. DeMott's training and boarding kennels near San Rafael. Some thirty-five dogs are now there, and they all seemed clean, lively and well. The place is well cared for, all dirt removed several times daily, and whitewash and disinfectants freely used.

Mr. Frank Clark writes from Fort Bragg to learn where he can secure an Irish setter puppy. Either Mr. J. C. Nattrass of Seattle, who advertises elsewhere in this paper, or Mr. A. B. Truman of 1425 Steiner Street, City, whose card usually appears in this paper, can supply well-bred Irish reds.

Mr. M. P. McKoon, of El Cajon, San Diego County, advertises cocker Spaniel puppies of pure breeding. He has supplied many local fanciers, and the dogs have given satisfaction in most instances. Intending purchasers will do well to secure his terms and deacriptions of his dogs.

If those who won either regular or special prizes would call and get them, or if they so desire send word to the Secretary to place the amount won to the credit of the Kennel Club they would oblige Secretary Watson. Some of those who won money have refused to receive it and have requested that it be applied to reducing the indebtedness left after the show.

With reference to a recent note of ours about the pointer Old Black Joe, the London Shooting Times remarks: "Now we personally know Mr. Pape, and will answer for it that he is incapable of a dirty action. He is an enthusiastic man, and a fiery controversialist, but, withal, as straight as a dart. He, however, we understand, has not been in very good health of late. Howbeit, we will draw his attention to the matter, and doubtless he will set it right."

The pointer and setter fanciers of the city have been taken by storm this week, the conqueror being Mr. C. M. Munhall, of Cleveland, Ohio, who has been making a flying visit to California. Mr. Munhall is known everywhere as the mainstay of kennel interests at his home, and also as the breeder of many very fine pointers, notably champion Patti M., the bitch which was burned to death at Columbus not long ago. Mr. Munhall is the beau ideal of the bright, keen, well posted dog fancier, and has entertained his new friends with an endless lot of good stories about many noted Eastern fanciers. He is now in Los Angeles, where he will remain for a week or more. While here he visited the Echo Kennels, and examined Patti Croxteth T., the result being an offer of a round sum for her, which was refused by Mr. Truman.

The success of the Carl R.—Bessie dogs at the recent show should incite owners to utilize the services of that dog at every available opportunity. For five years we have urged his use, and at great personal inconvenience and considerable outlay have established colonies of dogs sired by him at different places, because we have felt that some day local fanciers would awake to the need of the Leicester—Dart cross. If every owner of a really good grade Laverack or Llewellin bitch would stint her to Carl R., there might from the the lot result a few superior dogs which for stud purposes would soon become invaluable. The Carl R.—Bessie dogs, beside showing the highest finish and richest colors and markings, are thoroughly good in the field, and it is unfortunate that some of them have not been put into the field trials.

The Executive Committee of the Pacific Kennel Club has not yet reached an ultimate conclusion about the loss incident to the last show. President Wilson has been out of the city and until he returns there will not be a formal meeting of the committee.

Names Claimed.

The Echo Cocker Spaniel Kennels, Stockton (Dr. A. C. Davenport proprietor), claims names for cocker Spaniel puppies by Capt. Stubbs, 5964, A. K. S. B.—Vixie, 13,193, A. K. S. B., whelped March 22d, 1889:

TASSO, for black dog.
TIP, " " "
RITA, " " bitch.

Mr. Graham's Comments on California Dogs.

By permission of Mr. Graham we present in his own words his ideas about the dogs presented to him for judgment at the P. K. C. show. The comments attest the close observations made by the judge, and are so moderate as to give them much weight. He writes:

The pavilion is one of the best buildings for holding a bench show I have seen, with ample room to accommodate 2,000 dogs. The arrangements are everything that could be wished for, and all the members of the club seemed to work with an interest for the success of the undertaking. It was one of the cleanest dog shows I have ever seen. With reference to the dogs, speaking generally, the sporting dogs were good, while the non-sporting dogs were not up to what we see at English shows. Dandie Dinmonts, Scotch terriers, bloodhounds and bulldogs were conspicuous by their absence.

The first class brought into the ring was mastiff dogs. The winner, Dick, is a good upstanding dog with good feet and legs, but is plain in head. Noble, second prize, is small, has a short face, yellow eye and badly carried ears. Third prize went to another dog called Noble, a large dog, but with no mastiff character. There was only one entry in bitches, Actress, a good sized animal with good feet, legs and body. This bitch, if possessed of more wrinkle, would be difficult to beat in any company. In dog puppies, first prize, Tim, is a good, promising young dog—short in face, of good size, good feet and legs, wants wrinkle and character; his color of head was deficient. Bitch puppies were a poor lot. Gypsy arrived too late for competition. She is too large in ears, but she is good in head, good in wrinkle and body, and a very typical young bitch. She would certainly have won had she been in time to be shown.

St. Bernards were a very indifferent lot. I only awarded second prize in the open dog class to a very nice coated and colored animal, but of small size. He was a long way the best of anything in the class.

Newfoundlands had only two entries and the prizes were withheld. Second prize was awarded to a moderate young black Newfoundland puppy, Mr. Schule's Nero.

In Great Danes first went to Cæsar, a good blue dog, not so large as some I have seen. Second to Dora, a good medium-sized brindle bitch. Lea, third prize, good in size, body, feet and legs, but too weak in muzzle.

Only one deerhound was brought into the ring. I understand one turned up afterward too late to be shown. Ossean was given second prize, he is a very moderate animal, shown in bad condition and walking very stiff. The first prize puppy Vaughn is a nice puppy wanting in size and bone.

Greyhounds were a good collection and competition was keen. The winner, a black and white perhaps not so good in neck as the second, but much the best in quarters with grand well bent stifles. Second went to white not so good in stifles but a dog possessing a great deal of quality. Monarch, third, is of the same type and color as the second, but not so fine in neck and shoulders. Benelon II., another white, is a good dog more loaded in shoulders than those placed over him. In bitches Jennie June, a black, is a very level made animal showing quality all through, she would be better if possessed of more bone. Brunette, second, is another black, she pressed the winner very closely. In dog puppies Chronicle, first, is a level, true, well-proportioned young dog, perhaps too light in bone. Examiner, second, is the same stamp as the winner, but moved with his elbows turned in. Rake, placed third, is a stronger dog than the winner, but not so fine in shoulders. In bitch puppies Menlo Maid first, is a brindle in good condition. Second went to a black and white very much out of condition.

No English foxhounds were shown. In American foxhounds first went to Roy. He possesses good feet and legs, good long folding ears with good wrinkle; he is a trifle short in face. Nip, second, is a strong, powerful dog, broader in head than the winner, with no wrinkle and ears not so long. In bitches, Echo, a very handsome black and tan with long, lean head, good peak, plenty of leather in her ears, good feet and legs, with the best of long, sloping shoulders, possessing at the same time bone and substance. Kate, second prize, is the same stamp as the winner only not so good in feet and legs. Fleet, third prize, has bad feet and legs, is of small size and out at elbows. Puppies had only one entry, Elsie, a good specimen of the same stamp as the first and second bitches.

Pointers were a very good collection. Pat P., lemon and white, has good feet and legs, beautiful neck and shoulders, with good body well ribbed up, but was shown a little out of condition. Professor, second, a liver and white, is a good mover, with good bone and quarters, and is typical, but not quite so good in neck and shoulders as the winner. Dick II. and Rush T. are larger than those placed over them, and do not possess the general quality of the winners. In bitches over 50 lbs. first went to Blossom, a lemon and white of good character, with good head and ears, neck, shoulders, feet and legs; in fact, a very handsome animal, perhaps the best pointer in the show. Donna Sensation, second, is another of the same type, not quite so good in head as Blossom, but yet an animal of more than usual quality. Manzanita is a good bitch, but considerably behind the winners. In small dogs, first went to a liver and white, Wade Hampton. He has a good head, is full of character, and is good in feet and legs. He might be better ribbed up, and is rather leggy. Matchless and Climax, both small liver and white dogs, are good in body, but short in head, the latter being rather dark in color of nose for a lemon and white. Patti Croxteth T., the winner in the next class, a very typical liver and white, with good head, feet and legs, and with plenty of bone, might be better in shoulders Cora and Wanda, both liver and white, are not so good in bone as the winner. Ponto, the winning dog puppy, is a level-made, well-matured puppy. Rob T. and Tennis are good liver and whites, and both likely to furnish into dogs of considerable merit, and will no doubt render a good account of themselves next year. In bitch puppies, Manzanita, first, won third in open bitches. She wants character in head, but possesses good feet, legs and body. Donna Blanca is leggy, rather light in bone, and carries her tail too high.

In English setter dogs the winner, Rover H., is a grand, level-made dog with good feet and legs, well ribbed up, and his head is good and typical; he might be better in tail. Bruiser and Rector are both good typical dogs; shown thin, owing to which they appeared flat-sided and deficient in body beside the winner. In bitches Florine, the winner, is a very handsome animal; I would prefer her a size larger. She is a very truly formed animal and possesses quality and moves well. Beezy is a long way behind the winner. Ophelia is a strong, typical animal with a bad carriage of tail. The winning puppies, Peerless and Gypsy Queen, possessed considerable quality, but are rather light in bone and short of feather.

In Irish setter dogs first went to Mike T., a good, strong-bodied dog, good in coat, full dark enough in color and plain in head. Sport and Grouse are fine upstanding dogs, but leggy and light in bone compared with the winner. In bitches Lady Elcho T., the winner, is a large fine bitch, possessing quality all through, good color and coat. Taken altogether she is an animal fit for any company. She won the special for the best setter in the show, being closely pressed by the English setter bitch Florine. Lena I, second prize winner, is a fair animal, a long way behind the winner. In dog puppies Dash T, the winner, is a good dog, but coarse. There was nothing striking in bitch puppies.

Black and tan setters were poor. Second prize went to Dorr, the remains of a good type of Gordon setter. The Irish water spaniel bitch Nora P. won first with no opposition. A good specimen not in the best of coat.

In cocker dogs first went to Giffie, a nice little black with a wavy coat and tail too high. Woodstock Belle is a nice typical cocker bitch, better in coat and tail than the winner in the dog class. In cocker puppies the winner Budge is a moderate liver, and likely to be oversized and leggy.

Retrievers and collies were very indifferent.

In beagles Bannerman, Jr., looks old and worn. He is hollow behind the shoulder, and a bad mover. Daisy II. is a nice little bitch of correct type; perhaps, just leggy enough.

No bulldogs were shown, and the bull-terriers were a very poor collection; none possessed any merit for the show bench.

The fox-terrier dog Tromp, placed first, is a very good specimen; good feet and legs, good style and good colt, a little full in eye. Second prize, Regent Jock, is a wonderfully compact, well made dog, too long and soft in coat. Schneider, third prize, is also a good stamp, full in eye, dropped below eye and light in bone. Golden Gem, first in bitches, is above ordinary merit and fit for keen competition.

Black and tan terriers were a very indifferent lot. Only one Airedale was shown, Mr. Kingsley's Nip, a very good specimen fit to be shown successfully in any company. Skyes were poor, and the same remark applies to pugs, Yorkshires, poodles and the remaining classes.

The Airedale Terrier.

The Airedale terrier shown recently by Mr. C. H. Kingsley was pronounced a good specimen by Mr. Graham, and students may be interested in reading what a correspondent of the London Stock Keeper has to say of the breed. He writes:—

But for the exertions of a few enthusiasts this grand breed of terriers would have still been in comparative obscurity in the Yorkshire dales to which he is indigenous. The origin of the breed is somewhat obscure; it is, however, certain that the old English black-and-tan and wire-haired terrier and the otterhound have both had a share in his composition; in some strains, too, no doubt, there exists some trace of bull, probably through the bull and terrier or fighting dog of olden times. It was but a few years ago that nearly every Airedale shown exhibited a considerable dash of "hound" in his ear, topknot, or coat, and even now, when bred from the best show specimens, the pendulous round-tipped ear crops up. The efforts of several fanciers, at the head of which the names of Messrs. W. Tatham, A. Walker, C. Hopwood, T. Kirby, P. Horn, Jas. Taylor, L. P. C. Astley, and one or two others who by dint of skillful breeding operations, judicious purchases, and by the aid of the pen, have brought this breed into prominence, and, let it be added, a most deserved notoriety, for no one-dog-man can find the Airedale's equal for "all-round" properties. An efficient and powerful guard to person or property, this Yorkshire-bred dog recommends himself strongly as a companion. With a nose second to none, with great dash and courage, and a thorough aptitude for the work of the sportsman, he is also a fit and proper companion for the gun. As a house dog he is not too large, is clean, and fit to follow any lady or gentleman, nor is his temperament quarrelsome.

As far as symmetry goes, it would be difficult to find a handsomer dog. His color, hard crisp coat, grand expression, and style when either walking or galloping, makes him an agreeable outdoor companion, either afoot, or when driving or riding, and his general utility is by no means lessened by the fact of his being able to pick up a stray rabbit occasionally when he accompanies his master on a country ramble. It is a decided step in the right direction that the fancy has lately taken to breeding a smaller-sized dog in this breed. There is no donbt but that, the larger the dog is, the more frequent are the signs he shows of "hound." We have heard it argued by some people that, as the dog is meant for hard, rough work, size is an advantage when once the limits of a terrier's size are passed. On this point, however, we entirely disagree. The Airedale's vocation is, perhaps, altered since he became a show bench favorite. Originally bred for water side hunting, and such kindred sports as the weavers of the valleys of the Aire, the Whane, and the Calder and the banks of these rivers and their tributaries, could afford and easily reach, it really did not matter about the "looks" of a dog able to do his owner's behest in these particulars; and the specimens of the breed some years ago, even at such shows as Otley and Bingley, were very different to what we find representing it nowadays, even at places far remote from the native worlds and valleys of the Shire of Broadacres. Even at the last Bingley Show one of these old-fashioned "sort" turned up, the old fancier to whom he belonged being quite indignant at his dog's early dismissal, and left the ring ejaculating, "He's the best 'un here."

To all lovers of the beautiful and symmetrical, the change from the thick headed and soft-coated big-eared un-terrier like dog of former days to the neat and trimly built, close and hard coated, small, thin-eared specimen of to-day must be a matter of congratulation. We have heard it argued that it is ridiculous to call these dogs terriers, and perhaps it is, but at the same time the terrier character, eye, and expression, which is such a distinguishing characteristic of the whole race, entitles them to the term, and as it would be the greatest possible misfortune that could happen to this beautiful breed of dogs if that particular character were to be lost, we hope the name will always remain the same.

Inside Views of Field Trials.

Not every man who attends a field trial has had sufficient experience to enable him to see all the good that results from their maintenance, and some of the most persistent attendants are most at sea when they attempt either to describe what they have seen or to analize the merits of the various competing dogs. Of those who can and do see clearly through field trial work one of the sharpest is an English writer who attended the National trials run-off at Shrewsbury.

Field trials are indeed "a sport" in themselves, and a right royal sport, too, to the true lover of sporting dogs, he says, and adds: I can imagine nothing in its line more interesting; but it is far more than that, for, to anyone who has studied the gradual changes that have been creeping over shooting in the open during the last twenty-five years, it is most lucidly apparent that it is to field trials alone that we owe the perpetuation and the breaking of the pointer and setter breed.

Some, I know, think and say that trials have done harm instead of good, simply because the winners have not been in their eyes the dogs they would care to shoot over. This view is, in my opinion, a very mistaken as well as a narrow-minded one.

The use of trials to each individual sportsman is to give him an opportunity, which otherwise he could not have, of seeing and judging for himself of the merits and demerits of every strain worth thinking about at all. I should entirely repudiate the childish idea of forming your own opinion by that of the judges, however good these may be. To do this would be to lead oneself into all sorts of incongruities and absurdities, and my reasons for this assertion are: First, there are probably, at this epoch of the world, not half a dozen men in England who possess an eye quick and correct enough to spot unfailingly the best all round animal that performs before them. Such an eye, in my opinion, to begin with, nascitur non fit; at least it must be, first of all, a gift, and then it must be a faculty constantly and unfailingly educated and improved by daily experience and practice. Then, again, supposing a good judge does spot what is undoubtedly, in his opinion, the best animal in nose and style, etc., perchance the breaking or working is deficient, and then he is positively obliged to disregard the more important things, and to allow one dog to beat another that he knows is worth a hundred of him.

Again, the best dog may have real genuine bad, and the inferior one really good, luck. What can you do then? You cannot go on trying forever; you must give the prize to the lucky duffer.

Again, the very best dog may be an ugly, low-bred brute, that you would not have in your kennel. I know the idea occurred to me more than once at Newport, "Suppose I were to bring a thoroughbred colley and enter him as a setter, and he were to beat all the field, would he win?" I do not see why not.

Now, the spectator is in no difficulty of this sort. He takes the fiat of the judges for what it is worth to his experience, knowing full well the insurmountable difficulties that beset them, and therefore not cavilling at or blaming their decisions, but taking a totally different line, for good and sufficient reasons of his own.

In this manner he has an opportunity of discovering animals that may prove of great value to him, and, more than this, he has also the chance (and every man needs it) of comparing his own dogs with what he sees in public, and thereby forming a reliable opinion as to their improvement or decadence.

The first thing that struck one at Newport was the tremendous deterioration of the breed of setters.

Little, weedy, prick-eared, rough, and even curly-coated brutes! What have people been doing during the last ten years to get down to that?

Are these the sort of dogs that now-a-days win prizes at shows? or are the bench winners too valuable to come out of a hothouse to exhibit their instincts (i. e., if they have any left at all)?

It is not really difficult to account for this falling off; at least, not to any one who is at all conversant with the mysteries of breeding. The setter world in general has been breeding utterly careless of the principle of selection. Laveracks, as they called them, were the sine qua non. If a dog was called a Liverack, that was enough; they did not look at his shape or make, or such minor things as that, but they would put a bitch to it at once, that bitch, perhaps, being even more faulty than himself. Hinc illae lachrymae.

The only dogs on the field anyway at all up to the quondam setter were the beautiful brace of bitches which won the Brace Stakes.

Of course it is not altogether fair to come to so sweeping an opinion with only the evidence of the Newport entries before one; but most surely, if there are no setters better looking than those said entries, then must Mr. Purcell Llewellin be the only possessor at present in England of the true setter type. If this is so, it is very serious, for everyone knows that the use of his dogs cannot be obtained; and, without some cross, the present breed must get worse and worse as time goes on.

The secret of Mr. Llewellin's success is, of course, an open one. There was the wonderful luck of the first cross between the best selected Laveracks, bought at fabulous prices, and the famous Duke blood; and then, and since, it has simply been a matter of the most careful and scientific breeding, every animal the least faulty being drafted, and nothing but positive perfection, both in sire and dam, being even tolerated. Still, I must say, I do not think that even this kennel is up to what it was say ten years since.

The pointers, to my eye, looked far and away above the setters in appearance. I do not profess to be a good judge of them, and I have, therefore, some hesitation in pronouncing a good many to be heavy, houndy brutes, and the class altogether not by any means up to the old form, though still far better than the setters.

The next thing I remarked was the judges; and these were a subject of most unqualified admiration to me, from beginning to end. The way in which they laid themselves out with all their hearts to do their work conscientiously, and that amid great difficulties, was simply beyond praise. The almost total absence of method in beating the ground, the quality of a great part of that ground, which, though swarming with game, was miserably bare grass without a particle of lying, and every field crossed by the lines of hares innumerable, and last, but not least, the miserably inferior animals that they had to watch all day long, must have been a mighty trial of patience and temper, and would have pretty well made excusable some distraction of attention, and some curtailment of divers trials. There was nothing of either; and the patience and care sometimes bestowed on curs that should never have been entered, in order to see whether they could not discover some faint shade of tolerability in them, was simply marvellous. Their decisions, on the whole, were, in my opinion, beyond dispute, though in several cases, for some such reasons as given above, they could not possibly put the best animal first. As an instance, I do not suppose anyone who knows anything could for a moment doubt the very great superiority of Coquet over Daisy, and yet the latter was fairly, justly, and unmistakeably the winner of the heat. Of course every dog-judge knew why—but the why could not affect the decision.

Now take the working in general, and first the puppies. Did any one ever see such rambling, straggling work, and such breaking? The hares were most trying to puppies, of course; but the backing! there was hardly a puppy of the lot that was not wholly innocent of such a proceeding. It seemed to me as if the breakers had entirely neglected this part of their education.

I know it is a common thing, but a very mistaken idea, all the same, to break a puppy for a trial virtually single-handed—i. e., to work him with a slower dog than himself, so that he may (as his master thinks) get all the points and not want to back at all. Such an idea is not only based on an utterly false foundation, but it is really and truly a species of "jockeying," and, as such, indefensible.

I could not help wondering that the judges did not at once put out dogs which persistently refused to back. If they had done so, the winners, in many cases, would have been called by different names. The winner in the Setter Puppy Class, for instance!

Perhaps this fault in breaking came out the most clearly in the braces, which would certainly have been an eye-opener to anyone who had not seen through the previous performances. These braces were, of course, supposed to consist of perfect and well-matched dogs. Still, even the time-honored name of Brailsford could not produce any one dog work throughout, and that in the style of a Clumber spaniel. Here also Daisy's tactics came out in somewhat strong relief, spoiling the chance of both herself and partner. Daisy seemed to me a bitch of good pace and very pretty style; her tactics throughout were a rush to the front and to point at once, usually, I thought, at nothing, or perhaps, more correctly speaking, at stale scent. A long draw on would occasionally produce a bird or so, but whether these were the original cause of the point, who could tell, with such a wealth of bird about? Anyhow, whether there was something or nothing, the point secured her an abnormally long start, and then it was a case of ditto, ditto.

It is a pity that her breaker does not endeavor to correct this tendency, as it spoils what would otherwise, in spite of the mean, unsetterlike stamp of the animal, be a very charming goer, and vastly handicaps any chance she would have of winning a brace stake. I could not help longing to see one of the terrific goers of years ago put down with this bitch. Such a dog would have passed her as if standing still, and she would fain have had to be content with second fiddle, false or true, and not much chance of that. The judges, I opine, found her out by the time that she ran with Woolton Game, so had their eyes wide open to condemn her treatment of her own partner, poor honest Brave Rock.

The Llewellin puppies were very disappointing. Of course, they were very young, but had they not been worked stale they would have made a somewhat different record. The black and white was fairly beaten by Ranger, who went in good form, and was much better handled. But no living soul that I spoke to, and certainly not myself, could form the faintest idea what was in the mind of the judges that made them shelve Satin, whose performances were most undoubtedly the most perfect of any puppy that ran—indeed, as far as I saw, absolutely faultless. There must have been a "bee in their bonnet" here, somehow.

It was pleasant to see a gentleman, in the person of Mr. Lowe, working—and winning, too—with his own dogs as well as his friend's. If he would only keep his whistle in his pocket, and manage to attain to confidence in his dogs, he would beat any dog-worker present at Newport. What a pity it is that gentlemen cannot see their way to working their own dogs. More, it cannot surely be infra dig, more than riding a steeplechase, and if the fashion were only once adopted we should not only have a very far higher tone at trials, but we should have science greater and more real. We should have some tricks banished that are very nauseous to look at, and, above all, there would be a dawn of hope, which would amount almost to a certainty, that their dogs would not, as is now too generally the case, be kept for trials only. Ah! I should like to live to see that day. What a curious thing that "one dog work" in the braces was. It was most marked in all except the winners, and in the very unfortunate Moor and Mast combination.

I verily believe myself, that the breaker of these two pointers was the only man on the ground that had the faintest idea of properly working a brace of dogs, and yet look at his luck. The Field says they were put down in a "lovely field." I suppose it means that the field looked pretty with the sun on it, for it was a grass field, as bare as your hand and full of hares, past, present and future. Thence to a field of springing barley, and then to a long range of bare, seedy meadows, the abode of hares and moor-hens.

Nobody could help it, as it happened, for there was nowhere else to go, but it was most terribly hard lines, and I believe most fully that the dogs in question would have beaten the second prize winners; anyhow, their worker would, if they could only have had one good field of seeds.

This brings to my mind a thing that seemed to me very curious, viz., that in an important affair of this sort, some sort of organization is not brought to bear on the manner in which the ground is to be beaten. Nobody seemed to know anything whatever about it, except, perhaps, a little on the first day, when the "knowledgeable one" happened to be a somewhat important competitor. Now, I don't mean the slightest insinuation against the said competitor, and I do not believe he would do anything that was not strictly hororable; but then there is a tremendous difference in fields, and surely any occasion should be avoided which might cause the "enemy to blaspheme." I know I would not myself, on any imaginable condition, undertake the office of "bossing" the judges if I were a competitor, for I should know that I must either choose the very worst ground for myself, or incur the imputation of taking the best. A cleaver man who knew the country might make a plan of the estate in a pocket book a day or two before, and take the judges easily from field to field without the loss of time and of strength that was uselessly pitched away last week.

To return to the dogs for a moment, it was a very pretty sight, the prettiest in the trials, to see Coquet and Belle win the braces. A clumsy start was made, but the lovely little bitches soon got over it, and taking each her own beat in proper style, ran, both in pointing and backing, an absolutely faultless course.

By the way, I had nearly forgotten one thing which struck me, perhaps more forcibly than anything else. How often we saw birds rise at once to a point; and yet people said, "What a good point!" and "How wild the birds are!"

Bosh! the birds were not wild; and it was a very bad point! The fact is, in order to sustain the reputation for "telescopic" noses, which a few dogs attained some years back, combined with instant brilliant turns and points, our breakers allow their puppies to get close to their game before standing, and, therefore, they virtually flush it every time. If these dogs were to be employed for shooting, they would be useless.

If I were a judge, I confess I would note a point of that sort, unless made by a dog going down wind, and suddenly turning on scent, as a flush, and nothing else. The old heroes and heroines of former times would be going forty miles an hour, and suddenly pull up with a force that shook the earth, and a beautiful sight to see! Yes! but the birds were a hundred yards off, and that is the difference.

You have got to breed something different before you see that sort of thing again. These prick-eared, tough-haired curs can smell somewhere about as far as the sheep dog, that is not, in many cases, in my opinion, wholly innocent of their existence.

Again, I have heard hard things rash and bitter said about what is called "creeping." Nobody hates a pottering dog more than I do, but I love and honor an animal which, when the almost infallible instinct of pure, high-bred blood tells him that scent is bad or ground is dangerous, will crawl and creep and give you your shot. I have seen many a dog like that, and I know some now, and who would not rather have them, both in or out of trials, than the star-gazing, galloping, fluttering fool that goes the same pace everywhere, which is generally about ten miles faster than his nose, and makes beautiful sensational points at a bird a foot from him?

Another thing seems to be lost—the galloping across hare foil without noticing it. It seemed to be a deal more like draw, draw, poke, poke on the line for half a mile. There is the sheepdog element got in again somehow.

ROD.

Shall We Have Striped Bass?

The interrogatory is simple enough. The satisfactory response to it rests mainly with the Fish Commission—to arrange for the procurement of the eggs and their placement in the hatcheries, to the promise or the assurement of the game and very desirable species of food fish. The striped bass is one of the gamest of fish which swims in the sea and in brackish waters—estuaries, rivers and bights. It is a voracious fish, and is good from the size of four pounds up to fifty or sixty pounds, and occasionally has been taken in seines up to nearly seventy pounds weight. Its meat—if the term will apply—is white and of fine flavor, firm, and of smooth grain. It is a handsome fish in form and outward appearance—something between the salmon and the pike; not so deep through, as the salmon or the shad, but as broad as either, and without the spike form of the pike in its symmetry of proportions. The longitudinal stripes upon its glistening sides reveal at once the propriety of the nomenclature. A peculiarity of the striped bass is its enormous throat in comparison with other food fish. It is somewhat to its prejudice that it is what may be called cannibalistic in its appetite, and a bolter in appeasing it. Striped bass have been taken of ten pounds weight with a young bass of one pound weight, unmasticated, inside them. Had the story of Jonah been in connection with a huge striped bass, there would be fewer doubters among any who know of what prodigies in swallowing living creatures whole the striped bass is capable. It is hoped that this quality of the fish does not constitute an objection to the species on the part of the Fish Commissioners. They should recall that an instance is not on record in which a striped bass, even the most monstrous in size and of like nature, has been taken with a Fish Commissioner or any other man inside of it. How much this is saying for the bass is a matter which every person must determine for himself. It is to its credit that it is fond of good fish, and when a youngster of its own species happens in its way about feeding time—which seems to be as with men in taking a wife—the tender young thing is taken in and given a place where it will do the most good—to its senior, which certainly evidences its fine discrimination and its fondness for its own kind.

The striped bass is not a fresh water fish, it requires the better preservative qualities of salt water, and thereupon fattens to suit the taste of the epicure, as it is in its way epicurian itself. No mention has ever been made of a striped bass that had stomached suckers or made prey of catfish. It is too careful and too abstemious a fish to take its horns that way. Another thing, striped bass are a species of choice food fish which catfish never devour or drive out from streams they inhabit.

The striped bass is not a bony fish in the way of the small innumerable bones which make shad and herring so perplexing at table. Their anatomy is of noble mould—resembling more the vigorous salmon—albeit they have too much instinct of self-preservation to attempt fish ladders and leap falls in a manner the reverse of Sam Patch and his kind. It was a crazy man who insisted with Tallyrand—when that brilliant and wary diplomat was in New York and stood upon the parapet of Castle Garden—that he should make the leap to the massive stone pavement beneath—who instantly took in the situation and comprehended the condition of his unexpected interlocutor: "O, no; anybody can do that. Let us step down to the pavement, and from there jump up here." Probably the striped bass would suggest to the salmon something of the kind, if the two were in company at the level of the dam. And if the salmon persisted in its leaping freak, the striped bass would let it go above to its own satety in waters in which it could disport.

But we started in to write of striped bass and recommend them to the Fish Commissioners. Somehow there is that immemorial propensity, which will out whenever fish and fishing are the subjects, to wandering alike from the text and the exact truth. It all comes of that story of Jonah's-ergo, it is copying after scripture. A fellow can't just help it. They all do it. Just as some people will believe a horseman on every other subject except that of which he knows most about, the world generally seems to be incredulous of everybody when fishing is the theme. It may have been a reason why the Apostles, the most sacred of fishermen, failed with the doubters of their day. That matter of the five loaves and two fishes may have balked them. They should have discerned that that was a miracle. Their bad example in not having believed has been ever since perpetuated—among the ungodly mind; among the unchristian. Let those who refrain from believing men who have been a fishing heed and ponder. Stripes are not for bass only. The word of the angler should go in the land. It is the delight of the amateur in sport. Their quality of truthfulness is not in similar category. Beware the "dull product of a scoffer's pen."

Announcement.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has changed ownership and management. The purpose of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is to sustain its past high reputation as the leading publication of its kind upon the Pacific Coast, and to build still higher upon this good and safe foundation, in every field fairly within the scope of field and stream, of manly sporting and wholesome pleasuring.

In every department there is engaged experienced, skilled and facile writers, to instruct, chronicle and entertain readers. The aim and study is excellence in matter, fidelity in treatment of it, and the humor which is relished by men of every degree. Performance shall exceed the promise.

The Pacific Coast in general comprehensive aspect, is a vast territory of unequalled activity and matchless enterprise, largely made up of the most intelligent and energetic of the more populous portion of the Republic east of the Rocky Mountains, and of the most spirited of the adventurous of other climes. The mellowing vein of fondness for the grand sports which are as heritage of noblest natures, courses through best lines of ancestry, and develops agreeably as opportunity is presented. On this Coast it is at its best. In California it is most apparent. As the State is every year moving to the fore front in products of the soil, in every field of art, in the sciences, and in practicable methods, likewise is California becoming noted for the superiority of stock of every kind. California breeding farms are already famous, and California bred horses command the readiest sale in the East at highest prices. To this great interest the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is mainly devoted to. It is the ambition of its owner to advance it to place in the estimation of all, here and in the East, commensurate with the highest appreciation in which the well bred horses of California are held; to maintain it as the trusted representative of the turf; to advance it to the front rank of turf expositors.

In the other fields of legitimate sporting the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will keep fully abreast of the spirit of this onward age. The Rod shall not be spared; our Feather and Fur readers shall not be neglected; and everything in lines of hearty sport and wholesome enjoyment shall receive attention and encouragement.

Interesting to Livery Stable Keepers.

A suit at law occurred lately in New York which is of much interest to every keeper of a livery stable in the large cities, and it will also interest owners of property adjacent to stables. It was brought by a lady who owned and occupied valuable real estate property and an elegant dwelling in a fashionable part of the city, against the owners of stables of the first-class which adjoined her premises, praying the Court for abatement of the nuisance, as she made complaint the stables were to her household. The case was heard in the Supreme Court, Judge Andrews presiding. The Court held that "a stable is an actionable nuisance, and that the residence of any neighborhood in which such a pest is situated can bring action to have the same removed." Further, the Court declared, "that it was no defence to the action that the defendant's stable is well and properly built, nor that it is a convenience to some people in its neighborhood. It would be a desirable arrangement for many liverymen, and convenient for some of their customers, if stables could be located upon every block in the finest streets of the city, but it will hardly be claimed that such an arrangement should be effected when the certain result would be incalculable injury to adjoining property."

The owners of the stable purchased from the lady her handsome property, and so escaped the further process of the law, but immediately other residents in the neighborhood began similar action, and these cases are yet to be heard. In the event of similar judgment against them, the stable owners will appeal to the Court of Appeals, whose judgment is final. The case has created measurable consternation among owners of fine and large livery stables in every part of the city, and in their own protection they will make common cause to avoid the consequences. One of them gave expression to what appears to be the reflex of the common sentiment among all in the business, to this effect: "It seems to me that this decision practically declares that livery stables must not exist near the homes of rich people, implying that they must locate in districts where poor people live. Any other interpretation means a proscription of them altogether. I can't see why a livery stable should not exist on Seventy-third street, where Judge Andrews says 'fine people' live, just as well as on a street where people reside who are not quite so 'fine.'"

Valkyrie's Construction.

It seems still to be an open question whether or not the new British yacht Valkyrie, built by the most celebrated of yacht builders of England, for Lord Dunraven, to win the America cup in American waters, has a centre-board, after the American model. A famous British sailing master, Captain Sloan, himself a hearty, jolly Irishman, is in New York, and has given the newspapers a description of the Valkyrie as he saw her upon the stocks, a short time before she was launched. He considers her a very fast sailer and a good boat in stiff breeze and heavy sea. She is conspicuously different model from any British yacht yet built, and her builder evidently patterned after the American yachts in important respects. She is less in length, breadth and tonnage than the Genesta and Thistle, which vainly contested for the America cup in succeeding years, but she is of deeper draught, and is calculated to sail closer to the wind, by reason of the peculiar form of her keel. It is broader and deeper at the fore part and centre—which probably caused the impression that she has a centre-board. Captain Sloan thinks that it was not the purpose of her owner or her builder to have a centre-board, but to depend upon her unusual depth and width of keel. A remarkable peculiarity is the great difference between her water line and her length over all. She looks to be a much larger vessel than she really is on this account. Her bow and stern are alike very raking and extend beyond her water line out of all ordinary proportions. This will enable her to carry a great amount of canvas and be rated to better advantage in the sailing allowances of the New York Yacht Club rules, as to time in racing.

American yachtmen believe that neither the Volunteer nor Puritan can outsail the Valkyrie, and her widely uneven performances in her trials against the crack British yachts adds to this feeling of confidence. It is the impression of some, however, that the Valkyrie has not yet been sufficiently tested in her sailing, owing to the inability of her sailing master to fully understand handling her, on account of the marked difference between her build and rig from the yachts to which British sailing masters have been accustomed. In a few more contests in British waters and upon the long voyage across the Atlantic, all this may be overcome, and by the time the great contest for the America cup in American waters shall be made, her sailing master will be thoroughly instructed in handling her to the full extent of her quality in every condition of wind and sea. In this event the Valkyrie may be a more formidable competitor for the American cup than she is now considered by the New York Yacht Club.

It will be a contest in which greater interest will be generally entertained in this country, and in the United Kingdom as well, than has ever been felt, not excepting the splendid triumph of the America in British waters in 1851, and the victory of the American yachts over the British Thistle, and again of the Volunteer over the Genesta, within the past three years. So far the American yachts have proved invincible to all the world, and attested the superiority of American marine architecture. That the Volunteer can beat the fastest yacht the British builders can construct is the prevalent belief. But if one can be built in any other country in all the world, and prove it in a contest, the pride and further skill of our Yankee builders will be aroused to the accomplishment of still prouder triumphs on the vast waters. Hold fast is a good dog until another proves to be better, and until the Yankee yacht can be surpassed by one from some other country, America can contentedly and composedly rest upon her laurels. If the Valkyrie can beat the Volunteer in August, and win the America Cup, none will congratulate her more heartily than the Americans. It will have the good effect to arouse them to greater energies, and to construct the yacht that shall entitle the country to the lofty distinction for aye of the mastery of the seas in naval skill and speed and pluck.

Registration of Pacers.

Martin Halfpenny, in Wallace's Monthly, puts forth a plea in behalf of pacers, and thinks that they are entitled and should be admitted to the rank of "Standard." He brings to his support in the argument the blood and performances of the most noted pacers, and also the results of breeding within the lines of the most renowned trotters. In this presentation he cites from George Wilkes, to whom he assigns first place as "the greatest of all trotting sires," with a line of 59 trotters and six pacers in the 2:30 list, through Blue Bell, "the next greatest sire, and himself a pacer," with 53 trotters and 5 pacers; Hambletonian, "who will always have the honor of being the greatest of all progenitors," but with 41 trotters to his list and no pacers; Happy Medium, with 38 trotters and 3 pacers; Electioneer, with 38 trotters and one pacer—"the fastest, Manyanito, 2:16, out of a mare by the pacer St. Clair;" Almont, with 32 trotters and 2 pacers; Daniel Lambert, 32 trotters and 1 pacer; Volunteer, 26 trotters and 1 pacer; Nutwood, 21 trotters and 3 pacers, down to noted sires who had below 20 trotters and from 4 pacers to only one or more, and thence still lower in the list, from Messenger Duroc and Whipple's Hambletonian, each with only 1 pacer, to 15 and 14 trotters; Mambrino Patchen, with 14 trotters and no pacers; Gen. Benton, 10 trotters and no pacer, to Scott's Hiatogo, 5 trotters and 9 pacers, and Pocahontas Boy, with 3 trotters and 7 pacers.

A large number are mentioned, but enough are here given to illustrate the grounds of his argument, which is that the greatest trotting sires have produced pacers also. All that are mentioned have produced ten or more that have records of 2:30 or better.

Hambletonian, Princeps and Green's Bashaw did not produce pacers with a record of 2:30, but Mr. Halfpenny is of opinion that this is to be accounted for on the ground that the get of these horses were neither trained or allowed to "go that way;" that in the case of Hambletonian, "in his time pacing was unpopular, and if any of his colts showed a tendency to that gait, the fact was concealed and suppressed." He cites that the sires foaled before 1870 were prolific in pacers of the 2:30 class, but that no sire foaled since 1875 has produced ten or more trotters or pacers in the 2:30 class. Red Wilkes, 1874, Onward, 1875, and Sultan, 1875, were each sires of the get of that class, and he argues from this that the fact that such horses as Red Wilkes, Onward and Sultan "can produce speed at the pace, is one of the indications of their great prepotency and power." His facts and deductions, as presented, hardly appear to bear out the strength of the argument.

The precise meaning is somewhat clouded by what next follows. Reference is made to sires foaled since 1876—Alcantara, Pancoast, Nugget, Mambrino Russell—of whom the last two were from daughters of Pilot Jr., and the dam of Mambrino Russel was also the dam of Maud S., the fastest trotter in the world—and next, Jay-Eye-See, 2:10, whose dam was a daughter of Pilot Jr.,—each having pacing blood in them—and Happy Medium, the greatest sire foaled in 1879, with four trotters in the 2:30 class.

Mr. Halfpenny thinks "there would seem to be no chance for further argument; that "it is high time the pacer was admitted to the standard." He makes no allusion to the performances of the famous pacers Oneida Chief, James K. Polk, Pocahontas, Pet, Billy Boyce and Johnson, but he argues solely from the qualities for speed developed in pacers descended from George Wilkes and other great sires who had a tendency to pace and were double-gaited, that the pacer should be admitted as standard; otherwise, he suggests that the pacing horsemen of the country ought to form a National Pacing Horse Breeders' Association, and "engage the editor of the Monthly to edit and manage a racing register. If the National Trotting Horse Breeders' Association will not consent to admit pacers to registration, the same as trotters, then a Pacing Association should be organized," and he is of the opinion that the proper basis for registration of pacers would be a record of 2:25 instead of 2:30—a tribute to, or recognition of, the great natural speed of the pacing horse.

It is a subject which is likely to interest horsemen, particularly pacing horsemen—a free for all to go as they please upon it.

Difference in Season Terms.

In looking over the stud advertisements in California newspapers devoted to the turf and the newspapers of similar class in the States east of the Rocky Mountains, one is struck with the wide difference which exists in the season terms demanded on that side above the charges made on this, in about nearly equal qualities of high bred stallions. As instances, the following from Kentucky and Ohio are presented: Bell Boy with a record of 2:26 at two years, and of 2:19¼ at three years, now standing at the Elmwood Farm of Mr. Hooper his owner, has his book full for 1889, at $500. At Highland Farm, Nutwood, record 2:18¾, $500, and book nearly full; Red Wilkes, record not advertised, $300, and Wilton, record 2:19¼, both with books full. At Stoner's Farm, Paris, Ky., Baron Wilkes, record 2:18, $300, books full. At Alexander's Woodburn Farm, Lord Russell, brother to Maud S., without statement of record, $300; Harold, sire of Maud S., without statement of record, $300; Belmont, sire of Nutwood, $300; and King Wilkes, record of 2:22½, and Pistachio, brother to Nutwood, each $200. At Cynthiana, Sultan, record 2:24, $300. At Cedar Park, Woodnut, record 2:18½, $300; Antevolo, record 2:19½, $200, and Epaulet, record 2:19, $200. At Glenview, Phallis, record 2:13¾, $250. At Abdallah Park, Simmons, record 2:28, $200. In the $150 list are Fallis, record 2.20 and trial 2:19½; Wilkes Boy, record 2:24¼, and Brown, record 2:18¾.

Of course the above are only instances picked out at random. The list might be increased on close examination. But enough is presented. The prices stated are much in excess of prices in California, for equally approved stallions in blood, breeding and records. Bell Boy is a California bred horse, foaled at Palo Alto by Electioneer, dam Beautiful Bells, the exceptional two-year-old sold for $50,000. Fallis is also a son of Electioneer. Neither could command such rates as are paid for their services in the East. Nutwood was in high prime while in California, but he could not command terms to be compared with the sum he holds in Kentucky. Sultan could not, and as to Baron Wilkes, Phallas, Wilton and Simmons, it is within bounds to say that $100 would be the topmost paid the first two, and $75 to the last named. Pilot Russell, a brother to Maud S., at Dover, Mason Co., Ky., has $150. It is more than double the amount that could be got for him on this Coast.

There is food for reflection in these figures and facts. There are a very great many more people on that side of the Continent than on this side, but the enormous proportion in numbers dwindles when the comparison in wealth, per capita, is applied. The ratio per thousands who have the wealth and means besides to own trotters of high breeding and fine horses for pleasure uses, on that side, is below that which exists on this. As to the horses and their value, on account of blood and breeding and speed, the records stand yet to the credit of the East, but as California and the Pacific Coast is every year moving to the front, the probability is that the horse to lower the record of Maud S., will be of Californian parentage and breeding. Bell Boy may yet do it. Turfmen of high reputation are of opinion that Sunol will. The sons and daughters of Stamboul and Guy Wilkes, are yet to be heard of. Time will solve the problem, and it is altogether likely, we repeat, from what has been accomplished, that a California bred trotter will prove the champion of the trotting turf.

At the sales in New York of youngsters from celebrated breeding farms and of fine blood, the largest prices are obtained from the trotters bred in California; much above the prices at which even Kentucky horses sell. Bell Boy is at the pinnacle, and below in the scale can be cited a score of others in figures high up, in the grand round up of lots. The prices at which the youngsters sent on by Stanford, by Haggin, by Rose, Baldwin, Corbett, Valensin and other California breeders have sold are every year larger than the same classes bred in Kentucky and elsewhere in the East have commanded. This is proof that the Eastern horsemen value the California bred trotters above those bred in Kentucky. All this is something for California turfmen and others to consider. They get trotters from as thorough lines and with as great speed as can be found in the East, and at less cost for the breeding, as the figures above presented show. No man here will pay $500 or $350, or any other sum, for the services of a stallion in Kentucky or anywhere in the East, when he is aware that in his own State he can secure equally as good a colt at less cost for the breeding—and perhaps one that is better bred and with better promise of speed. As California is becoming every year the favored of States in developing horses to their best, it is simple logic that here are bred the best horses, with best profit.

Racing in Oregon.

One of the most successful meetings that has been held in the northwest was brought to a successful close last Saturday at Portland, Or. The weather has been brilliant, and the prospect of good racing brought a large influx of spectators into the city, all of whom were highly satisfied with the sport. The general management and supervision would serve as a pattern for some of the other northern meetings. The pool selling conducted by the well known W. Ayres, was extensively patronized.

SATURDAY, JUNE 8th.

The Portland Speed Association wound up their meeting in real racing style. The weather was as good as could be desired, and with a large crowd the association has every reason to be thankful for, and at the same time proud of, the result.

The three-year-old trot (two in three), purse $250, was won easily in straight heats by Altao, the best heat in 2:47.

The mile running, purse $400, was divided between R. M. Donaca's J. M. R. and Cy. Mulkey's ch g Tom Daly, in 1:45¾. Had they run it off the former would probably have won, as Tom Daly is not a genuine miler, having a preference for a shorter route.

The free-for-all trot, purse $500, brought out three starters, Palatina, Little Joe and Susie D. Palatina won handily, the best heat being 2:27½.

MILTON, MASS, March 3d, 1889.

J. H. CLARK, Esq.—Dear Sir: Will it be agreeable to you and Mr. Hopper to have Bell Boy and Edgemark come together this season on some track convenient to both, and at such a time as not to interfere with other engagements. I do not propose the idea for the sake of gambling, but for the sole purpose of testing their merits, and shall be very glad to meet your convenience in the matter. (Signed) Very truly,

VETERINARY.

The Examination of Horses as to Soundness

At the quarterly meeting of the California State Veterinary Association, held at the Baldwin Hotel last Wednesday evening, Dr. Thomas Bowhill of this city delivered the following address, which should prove of great interest to all who own horses:

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN—

As veterinary practitioners we are frequently called upon to decide — not upon the particular ailment, its causes, effects, and probable termination from which an animal may be suffering, but upon a far weightier question, in many cases, as to whether a horse is not sound in wind and limb, and if not, to what extent he is unsound, and how far said unsoundness is likely to interfere with the duties expected of him. The difference between the latter case as compared with the former, is that you have a patient that is likely to live, and have living testimony to the error or truth of your prognosis. Again this is not all. Your mistakes if any, are often set down for something worse, and your actions sometimes interpreted as dishonesties. There are numerous pitfalls in the examination of horses as to soundness, and an exact method of procedure is necessary. However, it is necessary first to consider the terms soundness and unsoundness. The following definitions have been given.

Lord Ellinborough defines unsoundness to be "any infirmity rendering the animal less fit for present use and convenience." Another definition is, that unsoundness is any alteration in structure or function which lessens the usefulness of the animal or reduces his market value.

Baron Park says, "a horse is sound when he is free from hereditary disease; is in possession of his natural and constitutional health, and has as much bodily perfection as is consistent with his natural formation."

Some restrict the word "sound" to mean perfect—which is absurd as it is next to impossible to find a horse perfect in everything.

Baron Anderson takes a very sensible view of the situation. He says, "the word sound means sound and the very qualification of which it is susceptible arises from the purpose for which the warranty is given. If, for instance, a horse is purchased to be used in a given way. The word sound means that the animal is useful for that purpose, and unsound means that he at the same time is affected with something which will have the affect of impeding that use."

The above understanding is one which veterinary surgeons would do well to obscure in their practice. Many horses are examined with defects which some might consider unsound, but experience and judgment are necessary to decide whether these defects will interfere with the working powers of the animal. In such cases it is always necessary to know what work the animal is intended to be put to. Such an animal can be called practically sound. In using the term it sometimes becomes very difficult to know where to draw the line—here again experience, judgment and observation are necessary.

For instance, you examine a horse, and find him all right with the exception of a splint, which is well to the front of the canon bone, and considerably below the knee. Now such a blemish will never interfere with the usefulness of an animal, and to reject such a horse would be doing a great injustice both to him and his owner. However, it is necessary that all defects should be explained to the buyers of an animal, so that he may be willing to take the risk, guided, however, by the veterinary surgeon's opinion.

Great difficulties arise in giving opinions in disputed cases, as it is seldom that two men can be found having the same opinion on certain defects whether they cause unsoundness or not.

Having consider ihe terms soundness and unsoundness, we will next consider the method of examination. For any veterinarian to attempt the task without method is a folly, which will as often land him in difficulties as not. Science does not recognise slip-shod work, and a method of some kind you must have, and if it be imperfect, you must study to perfect it; but whatever it is you must follow it always, if you wish to avoid mistakes. I know of no better method to recommend than that taught by the late Professor Dick. It is capable of being considered under three divisions.

1. Seeing a horse for as long a time as possible in his stable.

2. Seeing him, and feeling his several points when standing on level ground outside the stable.

3. Seeing him in his various paces, and watching and listening to his respirations, and afterwards removing his fore shoes.

Suppose a horse is brought to you for examination, you will put him at once in a stall and fix him so that he has plenty of liberty. Watch him closely for crib-biting, windsucking and weaving.

Both crib-biting and windsucking are or lead to real unsoundness. Crib-biting can only be practiced when a horse has something to pull at; but if he be more accomplished, he will be able to "suck wind" by elevating his head and having nothing to grasp.

Crib-biting is at first a nervous disease, and may be the result of imitation or arise de novo from gastric discomfort long continued or frequently repeated which is brought about by any of the forms of indigestion.

Weaving is a vice which can scarcely be detected except by watching a horse in the stable. This, like the last, is also a nervous habit, which keeps the forelegs in constant motion when they should be at rest. As to wind-sucking, it is claimed by some no such thing exists, and that it is gas generated in the stomach, and the efforts are made to expel it. However, opinions differ on this point. You will need to pay particular attention to the horses' attitude in the stall. Should be not stand equally on both forelegs, your suspicions should immediately be aroused. He may point leg, throwing the foot under the manger as in navicular disease, or swing the limb, that is, let it hang from the side. You must note whether it is the near or off-limb, and whichever it is, examine it very particularly when the animal is outside the stable.

Regarding the hind limbs, nothing so definite can be said. It is quite natural for a horse to rest his hind limbs one at a time, but he may be lame in a hind leg, and, moreover, may be standing on it and resting the sound leg on account of having stood so long on the sound leg as to make it painful, so that nothing but an unusual attitude or some visible defect justifies any conclusion being arrived at concerning the hindlegs in the stable.

Provided nothing unusual has been observed, make the horse stand over briskly in the stall, and watch for evidences of spavin or stringhalt. They can sometimes be detected in this manner; remember, however, that any horse accustomed to stand in deep straw will lift his hind legs high, when standing over, even if there is no straw under him.

Should you be satisfied, you will next put a snaffle bit on the subject and bring him to the stable door, and make a careful examination of his eyes. There is nothing so good as a top-light, which we often find over a stable door. Bring the horse up to the door and shut it, and in this manner you can examine the anterior half of the eyes thoroughly. First, see if the eyes are of equal size, as repeated attacks of opthalmia leave one eye smaller than its fellow, and another thing of great importance: examine the eyelid thoroughly to see if it is corrugated, because such is generally the case after an attack of periodic opthalmia. Again the smaller eye will frequently show signs of previous disease in the shape of the pupil. When the iris is involved you not unfrequently have adhesion of its posterior part to the lens. This is usually only partial, so that on contraction of the iris the part adherent does not move, and so alters the general outline of the margin of the pupil. You can also test the eyes by tension by resting the last three fingers of both hands upon the eyebrow, and then pressing the index fingers alternately upon the globe of the eye, covered by the upper lid, and thus you can compare the resistance of both eyes. You can also apply the catoptric test in a dark stable, or you can use the opthalmoscope, should your suspicions warrant it.

Being fully satisfied with the eyes, you now bring the horse out of the stable and place it on level ground. Take a general view of the animal as a whole by walking round him. By this means you can detect obvious causes of unsoundness which may render further examination unnecessary, i. e., spavins, curbs, splints, ringbones, shaky forelegs, broken knees, wasted shoulders, and fractured ileum, commonly known as hipped, etc. It is best to commence your examination on the near side of the horse by looking at the opening of the nostril and examining the Schneiderian mucous membrane for discharge, ulceration, constriction and polypi. The discharges may arise from catarrh, nasal gleet, pus in the gutteral pouches, or glanders, or the membrane may be excoriated from the discharge caused by a diseased tooth. Catarrh, while it lasts, constitutes unsoundness, and to pass a horse so afflicted would not be good judgment, as the after-affects are sometimes very serious. Nasal gleet is also an unsoundness, and requires careful examination to distinguish it from glanders.

Next examine the mouth, gums, etc, being careful to ascertain the horses age, and beware of horse dealer's tricks, which are numerous. You must also examine the molar teeth for irregularities and diseased teeth, and the spaces between the molars and incisors for evidences of a hard puller.

We now feel beneath the jaws for enlarged glands, which are often the after effects of strangles, and if so, you must be cautious in testing the wind afterwards. Now pass your hand over the poll, using pressure, and look for evidences of poll evil. At this stage you also examine the parotid gland, which may also be enlarged from the after effects of strangles. Passing down the neck we now distend the jugular vein and examine for partial or complete obliteration of same, and for marks of previous bleeding. Should the latter be present we must at once suspect the animal has at one time been treated for some severe disease, and it is our duty to inform the intending purchaser. Severe injuries to this vein constitute unsoundness. We are also liable to find skin disease on the neck, i. e., mange, ringworm, eczema, etc. If so, we shall advise the intending purchaser to have the animal cured previous to purchase.

Passing further down we come to the shoulder, there may be collar galls caused by a bad fitting collar, or an irritable condition of the skin, and small tumors are also found in this region. If the horse is intended for harness, it is an unsoundness giving rise to much trouble afterwards. We also examine the shoulder for atrophied muscle commonly known as shoulder slip or sweeny. This is detected in comparing both sides and by the firm elastic resistance which those muscles give on pressure in health, and by the convexity from before backwards. The point of the shoulder may show signs of setons or blistering. This should at once arouse our suspicions. But again we must remember that mistakes are often made in the diagnosis of lameness, and incompetent practitioners in doubtful cases often apply treatment to the shoulder as an experiment. Again we must not condemn a horse with prominent spines on the scapula and on poor condition as affected with shoulder slip. Again a horse may be atrophied in both shoulders. We will now examine the front of the fore limb first. On leaving the shoulder we pass our hand over the Flexor Brachii muscle and down the front of Radius, and seldom find any unsoundness until we come to the knee, when we arrive at an important part—a part much liable to injury, and can receive none but the most trivial scratch with impunity. On passing the fingers over the front of the knee you may feel and see any injury to the skin. But "broken knees" is such a vague term that it includes every degree from mere clipping off of the hair, to laying open the joint and exposure of the bones. Why this widely prevalent suspicion of "broken knees?" Popular belief cannot be ignored, and therefore not this. Broken knees can be enunciated as follows:

1st—Skin bruised, not cut.

2d—Skin cut.

3d—Skin divided lacerated and extensor tendon exposed.

4th—Wound goes through tendon exposing joint.

5th—Wound goes through tendon exposing joint and fracture of one or more bones of the joint.

It is quite evident that a horse suffering from the effects of the fourth and fifth form is unsound in so much that he cannot bend his knee. Another point is how a horse injured his knee. Was it the rider's or the driver's fault, or is he a stumbler? If so, he is liable to fall again, and in that case any of the above forms is an unsoundness. In fact it is a good rule to reject as unsound all cases in which you find distinct evidence of injury which has failed to become entirely obliterated in six months. We must, however, beware of carpitis which always constitutes unsoundness. We also have capped knees which are of two kinds.

1st—Serous, which is superficial.

2d—Synovial, which is deeper seated.

These swellings impede mobility or not according to their size and position. A horse with such swellings would have to be taken for better or worse, because they are unmistakeably apparent. Having finished the knee we now pass our hand down the front of the canon bone until we come to the fetlock joint; practically we can pass over this without a thought as it is seldom affected in any way, except on race horses and that is sore shins. We will now describe all the parts beneath the fetlock joint together, and with this method in view will now proceed to place before you the following classification.

I.—ANOMALIES OF SIZE.
1. Feet too small.
2. Feet too large.
3. Feet unequal in size.
4. Frogs atrophied.
5. Frogs large and fleshy.

II.—ANOMALIES OF SHAPE.
1. Contracted feet.
2. Flat soles.
3. Heels too high.
4. Heels too low.
5. Toes too long.

III.—ANOMALIES OF POSITION.
1. Pasterns upright.
2. Pasterns long.
3. Pasterns short.
5. Toes out-turned.
6. Toes in-turned.

IV.—INJURIES.
1. Brittle hoof.
2. Pricks in shoeing.
3. Gathered nails.
4. Bruised sole.
5. Bruised coronet.
6. Speedy cut.
7. Brushing.
8. Unnerved.

V.—DISEASES.
1. Canker.
2. Carbuncle of Coronary Band.
3. Corns.
4. Disease of Pyramidal process of Os Pedis.
5. False quarter.
6. Grease.
7. Laminitis sub acute.
8. Laminitis chronic.
9. Navicular disease.
10. Quittor.
11. Ringbone.
12. Sand crack.
13. Seedy toe.
14. Side bones.
15. Thrush.

I. Anomalies of Size.—When the feet are of equal size, free from disease, but larger in proportion to the body than common, you may regard it as of no consequence. As far as we are concerned it is neither an unsoundness nor does it in any particular way lead to unsoundness, but it is different when they are too small, that is, small out of proportion to the body. It is more difficult to satisfy yourself, as it is well known when a part is inflamed nutrition, and therefore growth, is arrested. Again, feet may be of unequal size, and still both may be quite sound. Atrophied and fleshy frogs are neither of them conditions which exist singly, and if they did, would not constitute unsoundness, being nearly, if not always, associated with other defects.

II. Anomalies of Shape.—The long axis of the fore foot is from side to side, but in the hind foot it is from before backwards. In the front this long axis tends to become like the hind foot, from before backwards, but there is no tendency to alteration in the hind foot. This condition is brought about by disease and the elevation of the frog from the ground, and paring with the draw-knife, cutting away the bars, etc., due to the old creed of "What's mine 's my own," not only of the vulgar, but of those who ought at least to know the rudiments of political economy. The causes of flat soles are as follows:—

1. Paring with the draw-knife.
2. Laminitis.
3. Congetal.

This may be an unsoundness of the greatest magnitude, or it may not, and in judging it you have to be guided by its 1st. Cause.

2nd. Degree.

In some cases a broad web shoe and leather sole is necessary, and if with this he goes "feely" he is unsound, because a sound horse can go with ease in ordinary shoes. Sore heels, though themselves not an unsoundness, are frequently associated with radical unsoundness, corns, bruises, etc. Long toes are not an unsoundness, but are apt to lead to it.

III. Anomalies of Position.—A horse with upright pasterns may go sound, but he is liable to go lame at any time. Toes turned out or turned in are not an unsoundness, but lead to it.

IV. Injuries.—Under this heading we have unnerved. However neatly this operation is done, it is found out in two days: 1st, Marks of the incisions; 2nd, by the numb, awkward way he uses his feet. To test him, ride him on a hard road, and you will find it as much a paradise to him as a soft, grassy park. Brittle hoof is an unsoundness when it cannot bear the nails with which the shoe is fastened. In a flat sole, a bruised sole of any degree whatever is an unsoundness, occurring as it does in a conformation suffering from it, and predisposed to it.

Bruised coronet can seldom be looked upon as a trivial injury.

V. Diseases.—The following diseases in this classification are so obvious that comment is unnecessary, i. e.: 1. Canker. 2. Carbuncle of coronary band. 3. Disease of pyramidal process of os pedis. 4. False quarter. 5. Quittor. 6. Villitis.

Others, though obvious, require some comments, i. e.: 1. Grease. 2. Ring-bone. 3. Side-bones.

The remainder require considerable attention. If grease is unmistakably present, then the horse is unsound; if it only threatens, then the horse is for the time being unsound, because if he was worked it would undoubtedly become aggravated, and he would require treatment, and a horse requiring even so little as a dose of physic does not answer the definition of a sound horse. Ring-bone usually affects the hind pasterns, but is often found on the fore ones.

Ring-bone is an unsoundness without any mitigating circumstances.

Speedy Cut can only be looked upon as an unsoundness when fresh done, no matter how many scars; they only show a grave defect in the horse's action.

Side-bones are generally found in heavy draught horses, but seldom in light breeds. If present on an animal intended to do slow work, and he is going sound, you can pass him as practically sound; but if the animal is intended for fast work under saddle or in harness, it is an unsoundness.

Corns, this is about the last thing you look for, because to make sure of finding them it is necessary to remove the foreshoes and examine the seat of corn. Some practitioners simply cut in below the shoe with a searcher, but such an examination is bad practice, when you can have the shoe removed. You must remember that the extravasated blood constituting a slight corn is not imbedded in the crumby material the knife first cuts—but in the living or sensitive horn beneath. Corns are very properly regarded as an unsoundness.

REMARKS.

The intention of the Directors of this Association is to make this place a central point for racing in California. They recognize the fact, that in order to do so they have got to give large purses in order to get first-class horses. Knowing they have as well-appointed grounds and as good a track as there is in California, having first-class stabling and the best Club House on any track in California, and plenty of fine grass for horses the whole year, and by dealing justly and fairly with the horsemen, we hope to receive their patronage. We are situated about half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles, which makes it an accessible point for the patronage of the whole State.

Being aware that the responsibility, to a great extent, of the Association, is not known outside of our own State, we herewith at ach a certificate, signed by the Banks of this City, as to the responsibility of the Association.

We, the undersigned, do certify that the Fresno Fair Grounds Association is perfectly responsible, and its statements are reliable:

LEWIS LEACH, President Farmer's Bank.
O. J. WOODWARD, President First National Bank.
LOUIS EINSTEIN, President Bank of Central California.
H. D. COLSON, President Fresno National Bank.
W. H. MCKENZIE, Cashier Fresno Loan & Savings Bank.

WILKES PASHA.

STANDARD 2618.

Dark bay with white hind feet, 16½ hands high, bred by R. P. Pepper, of South Elk Horn Farm, Frankfort, Kentucky. Sired by Onward, 1411, record 2:25¼, trial 2:17. He by George Wilkes, 2:22, sire of sixty-five horses in the 2:30 list, ten of them with records below 2:20. First dam Fisher (dam of Clara Wilkes, 2:29¾, trial 2:25) by American Clay, 34, sire of Granville, 2:26; Maggie Briggs, 2:27; Ella Clay, 2:27½; and the dams of Executor, 2 24½, Ranchero, 2:23½; Judge Hawser, 2:24¾; Ambassador, 2:2), and nine others in 2 30; second dam by Wilson's Snow Storm, sire of Jim Irving, 2:24; third dam by Paddie Burns, thoroughbred.

Onward, 1411, is one of the noted sires of to-day. In 1887 he placed seven performers in the 2:30 list, including Houri, three-year-old record 2:19¾; while in 1888 he still further sustains his reputation by adding nine of his sons and daughters to the list. Onward combines the blood of the two great trotting families, Hambletonian 10 and Mambrino Chief 11, and derives his speed inheritance direct through the greatest son of the one family, and the greatest daughter of the other.

Onward's dam was Dolly (the dam of Director, 2:17, and Thorndale, 2:22½), by Mambrino Chief. Dolly was one of the greatest speed-producing brood mares that ever lived. George Wilkes stands at the head of the list of sires of fast trotters with 65 performers with records of 2:30 or better, and the combination of these two great producers will breed on with absolute certainty.

WILKES PASHA will make the season of 1889 at the stables of the undersigned, at the Trancas Bridge, two miles north of Napa, on the Soda Spring Road.

TERMS,

For the season ending July 1, 1889, $35 in U. S. gold coin.

Alfalfa pasturage $4 per month; natural grass $2.50 per month.

Every attention and care will be given to mares, but no liabilities assumed for accidents or escapes.

Science in Horse Shoeing.

Horse shoeing is likely to receive considerable attention at the Windsor Royal, England. The Farriers' company proposes to do some excellent work in a most necessary direction, and in setting about it in a highly sensible manner. This company offers prizes for the successful candidates in a horse shoeing competition, a sum of money and the freedom of the company being the awards. The examination is to be of a practical and searching character; competitors are not only to be called upon to shoe a fore and hind foot, but are also to be questioned as to the structure of the hoof and its adjuncts—a very desirable proceeding. Such a contest as this is sure to awaken interest and inquiry among those who are connected with horses, especially among farriers themselves, who will be sure to study full details of what takes place; and the result cannot fail to be beneficial. Multitudes of blacksmiths, says the London Standard, do their work by rule of thumb, with a very scanty and superficial knowledge of the component parts of the horse's foot, and this leads to cruelty and expense; for, by improper shoeing, the horse is so often injured that he suffers acutely, if, indeed, he be not actually ruined; and what hurts the horse in the foot hurts the owner in the pocket.

Inbreeding.

An article in Wallace's Monthly on this subject by "R." concludes as follows:

"A reasonable theory would be that inbreeding is, in effect, an intensifying of the qualities, good and bad, that the mated animals have in common, and that by selecting individuals free from the defects wished to be shunned the qualities sought for would be strengthened and increased without corresponding disadvantages. It is a common saying that an ounce of fact is worth a pound of theory, and the breeder will do well who will go out into the field of experiment and give to his fellows the actual results of his efforts. Who can now say as a fact that the coupling together of a horse and and mare, full brother and sister, necessarily produces inferior offspring? Questions of a moral nature cannot enter into the mating of brutes, and the only thing to merit consideration should be the physical results flowing from the union. To render such experiments of value, selections of the individual animals should be made with the greatest care. The characteristics of their ancestors should be studied, to ascertain whether they have any decided bodily or mental defects to be increased by inbreeding. Springing from the same fountain of life, to the fruit of their family tree, sweet and bitter, their offspring would have a double title. Their defects and infirmities, both mental and physical, would, as a rule, undoubtedly be aggravated and increased; but why might we not with equal reason expect the desirable qualities to be strengthened in the ratio? It can not be denied that many cases of the closest possible consanguinity have occurred, wherein the results were highly favorable, that came from the accidental pairing of the animals, so that care in selection was out of the question. What results may be accomplished in establishing the future characteristics of the trotting horse by judicious inbreeding is as yet an unsolved problem."

The Thoroughbred Stallion

Judge McKinstry,

Will make the Season of 1889, from March 1 to July 1, at San Felipe Rancho, near Gilroy.

PEDIGREE.

Foaled 1879, by Grinstead or Thad Stevens, dam Katy Pease; second dam Minnie Mansfield by imp. Glencoe; third dam Allegrante by imp. Young Truffle.

DESCRIPTION.

JUDGE McKINSTRY is a bright bay with black points, 15¾ hands in height, of a conformation combining power and speed. His breeding is one that cannot be excelled. The families on both sides being noted for their gameness and fleetness. Speakin of JUDGE McKINSTRY, Matt Storn, the well-known trainer, says: "He is the fastest race-horse I ever saw on the Sacramento track. He has shown me trials that were marvelous, one especially of a mile and a quarter that was ahead of the present record." He was started in several races when not in condition to run, and even then developed an amount of speed that is characteristic of the noted families from which he descends. His performances are too well known to need repetition here. Good judges of horses state positively that there can be no doubt of his sire, as he is a perfect picture of Grinstead, but rule compels us to name both sires.

TERMS: $75 payable when the mare is moved from ranch, or, $100, with the usual privilege. Good pasturage, $3 per month. Mares at owners risk. All communications must be addressed to

MEMO.

The Fast Trotting Stallion, the Best Son of Sidney.

Will make the Season of 1889 at the Oakland Trotting Park.

He was bred by G. Valensin at the Arno Stock Farm, Sacramento County, California; foaled spring of 1885

PEDIGREE.

By Sidney.
First dam Flirt by Buccaneer.
Second dam Mohaska Belle by Flaxtail.
Third dam by John the Baptist.

Sidney by Santa Claus, 2:17¾, his dam Sweetness, 2:21¼. Strathmore, the son of Santa Claus, has 22 of his get which have trotted in 2:30 or better, up to close of 1887, several having entered since, and Volunteer the sire of Sweetness, has 26 in the same list. Buccaneer is the sire of Shamrock, two-year-old record 2:25, and of Flight, 2:29, and in him are combined the strains of Long Island Blackhawk, Vermont Blackhawk, and the dam of Rysdyk's Hambletonian. Flaxtail figures prominently in both pacing and trotting descendants, and is the sire of the dam of Apex, 2:26, Flight, 2:29, J. H. McCormack, 2:29, and Shamrock, 2:25.

PERFORMANCES.

Memo only trotted in public in his two-year-old form, obtaining a record of 2:49, though he was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District Track, the second heat of which was made in 2:31½, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, and had it not been for a slight strain of his fore fetlock there is little question that he would have shown in public very close to the best record. On the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20½, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32½ to 34 seconds.

DESCRIPTION.

He is nearly if not quite sixteen hands high, and of powerful build throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both fore-feet white and a touch of white on his off hind quarters. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his action superb.

TERMS: One hundred dollars the season.

TRADE MARK

OSSIDINE

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

Owner of Eole, St Saviour, Eolist, etc., says; I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

LONG BRANCH, July 28, 1888. F. GEBHARD.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Santa Rosa Race Track.

Of all the pretty valley towns in California there is none that surpasses Santa Rosa in loveliness. The residents who located there in the days gone by seem all to have been animated with the one idea, and that was to beautify their little city. In architectural designs Santa Rosa's buildings equal any in the State, and the business folks are trying to rival each other in the beauty of their residential quarters. The streets are well paved with basalt blocks, asphaltum, and some few are macadamed, while they are brilliantly lighted at night with an excellent system of electric lights, not forgetting the assistance rendered by the Santa Rosa Gas Works. The city contains at present somewhere in the neighborhood of 8,000 population, and is in a very prosperous condition. The merchants find no cause for complaint, business being good. The insufferably warm nights which causes the ordinary San Francisco man to dread the summer evenings in a large majority of the valley cities, are very rarely found in this section, the cool ocean air coming in from the coast and up from San Pablo Bay, meeting the hot air currents from the north, causing the atmosphere to be thoroughly enjoyable, instead of intensely oppressive. The county buildings are of the best, the court house having few equals in the State. Last Saturday evening the brass band gave an open air concert, a thousand or two persons assembling to listen to the first-class music.

At the stable of the Byington Bros. the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN representative met Mr. Byington, the Mayor of Santa Rosa, a live wide awake gentleman who has labored diligently for the good of the city. It is a great pity that the energetic citizens of the town are hampered at present with a set of old fossils in the Board of Supervisors, who object to doing anything that will bring the great merits of Sonoma before the people of the Eastern States, in fact they seem afraid that emigration will work incalculable injury to those already there. They have even refused to allow the sum of $1,000 with which to assist the local Board of Trade and the State Board. Mayor Byington is very severe on the Supervisors, but no more so than the balance of the business men of Santa Rosa.

By the courtesy of Mr. Roney a look was taken through the rooms of the Santa Rosa Club, a new organization lately started in that flourishing community. The situation could not be improved on, directly in the business center of town, it is handy for all the members, which number at present fifty, but at the next meeting of the Directors, the number will be largely increased, as there are any quantity of applicants who desire to join. A large reading room gives ample opportunity to those who are of a literary turn of mind; all the principal magazines, periodicals and newspapers being on file. At luncheon hour each day, a repast is set out for those who from press of business cannot go home. Billiard room, sitting room, smoking room, chess and checker room, and an elegant bath room go to make up a cosy and comfortable lounging place for the members.

Mr. W. H. Sanborn, manager of the track, owner of "The Castle"—which is the sporting headquarters—livery stable owner, and owner of race-horses, game chickens, etc., placed a buggy at the disposal of the writer, and a ride was taken around the beautiful city. A call was made on Messrs. McGowan & Clarkson, at Kronckes' Park, where a party of about eight hundred from San Francisco were having an enjoyable time. Mr. Kronckes, who, by the way, is an enthusiastic horseman, has fitted up this pleasure resort with everything that will tend to add to the comfort of those who visit his little paradise. A large dancing pavilion give those who are devotees of Terpsichore a chance to indulge in their favorite pastime. Swings, shooting galleries, swimming bath, elegant promenades, and a host of other attractions makes the park a very enjoyable place to visit. A drive was then taken to the race-track, where we found Mr. G. Gurne, Mart Rollins, Dr. Klench, one of California's prominent veterinary surgeons, Mr. Murphy, the staunch believer in Anteeo blood, D. N. Carithers, and many other prominent owners and trainers. Of the followers of the thoroughbreds, there were only two representatives, Geo. Kennedy of Healdsburg, and Bruce Cockrill, whom not to know is to confess ignorance of matters pertaining to bang-tails. Bruce brought out half a dozen candidates with which he will try to win fame and fortune this season. Daisy D. naturally was the first one to claim attention, the mare looking in excellent condition, notwithstanding that her foal has so lately been taken from her side. Mr. Cockrill has every reason to be proud of his Wheatley—Black Maria mare, for she has earned many a big dollar for the stable.

Captain Al is a fine, slashing brown colt, two years old, by Kingston (a son of Hercules), dam Black Maria by Georgetown. He has not received any work to speak of, but acts and moves like a race-horse should.

Roundout is another good looking colt by the same sire as Captain Al, but out of an Ironclad mare. With plenty of work he should be a success.

Acclaim, in the same stable, is owned by Geo. Kennedy. She is a yearling filly by Three Cheers, dam Rosette by Wheatley. Mr. Cockrill has a great opinion of this youngster, and with good reason, for she is a perfect picture of the thoroughbred. Acclaim is entered for the Futurity Stakes of 1890, which will be worth $100,000 to the winner. Here's that Acclaim may win the rich stake.

Mark L. is in looks a Joe Hooker; in fact, he is almost the living image of Sorrento, but he is in no ways related to that family, being by Ironclad, dam a Lodi mare. If Mark L. does not make a name for himself he terribly belies his looks.

Inkerman is a bay gelding by Ironclad, dam Alice by Wheatley, who is still very high in flesh and will need a lot of exercising to bring him down to the necessary condition for racing. The two last mentioned horses are owned by W. H. Sanborn.

After inspecting the thoroughbreds we took a look through the stables of that reliable trainer, L. W. Marsh. We were first shown two fine horses owned by Mr. C. C. Beamish of San Francisco, the first, Zeno, a six-year-old stallion by that grand sire, Sultan, dam Lady Utley. He has been put through his paces, but unfortunately became lame and had to be put out of training. He is now coming round all right, and in a few days will be jogging again.

Cora B. is a very pretty light chestnut, four years old, by Saladin, and is full of go. She moves with good action, and has plenty of speed, which should bring her to the fore.

Mamie J. is owned by E. Seegleton of Santa Rosa. She is four years old, by Anteeo, dam by Whipple's Hambletonian, a cross that always nicks well. Mamie J. is the very picture of her sire and shows a fine turn of speed.

Mr. G. W. Frost, of Cloverdale, has a good roadster in the same stable which goes by the name of Jack Frost, but it would be a bitter day if Jack got left.

Laurel Dale, three years old by Anteeo 2:16¼, dam Danville Maid by Don Juan, is a fine large rangy stallion, the property of Rose Dale Breeding Farm. He is about sixteen hands high, weighs a trifle over a thousand pounds, has magnificent carriage, a good gait, and although never trained, shows every indication of being no disgrace to his breeding. Laurel Dale is a promising horse in everything that the term implies, and we hope to see Mr. March make a low record for him, not only for his own satisfaction, but also for the satisfaction of Dr. Finlaw, the owner of the farm.

The next one worthy of interest is Lock, a chestnut, four years old, by Antelope, he a son of Nutwood. This is a beautiful specimen of the equine species, his owner Mr. Murphy, feels assured that Lock will give a good account of himself before long.

Mr. Murphy is also the happy possessor of a bay filly, Maud M., two years old, by Anteeo, dam by Nutwood, 2nd dam by Echo, which is far above the average of the young ones usually seen. She is compactly built, with great power, her muscular development being grand, and at the same time she is a trotter that no one need be ashamed of. Maud M. will be able to trot with her class, and from looks, should have a license to throw dust in the eyes of many of her competitors.

Mr. March also showed us an iron grey filly owned by James Elliott of Napa. She is called Jessie R., four years old, by Whippleton, dam said to be by Kentucky Hunter. Like all the Whippleton family, she is quite speedy, and may prove a treasure to her owner.

Having exausted the March string we next are shown the trotters, under the charge of Charles Farns. He has as one of his patrons, James H. Laughlin, Esq., of Santa Rosa, a devoted admirer of the horse, and an estimable gentleman. Mr. Laughlin has in training at present, May Day, bay filly, four years old, by Anteeo, dam by Gen. McClellan; Mark L. (who must not be mistaken for the thoroughbred in Mr. Cockrill's stable), bay stallion, three years old, by Anteeo, dam by Gilpatrick, and also Beware, three years old, by Anteeo, dam by Gen. McClellan. These are all very promising colts and should amply repay their owner for time and money expended on them.

Mrs. Duncan has in the same stable Canteloupe, two years old, by Antelope, he by Nutwood, the dam being also by Nutwood. If there is any merit in inbreeding, surely Mrs. Duncan should reap a harvest from this youngster.

Myrtie is owned by B. Marks of Ukiah, and is by that game old trotter Black Ralph, who trotted his last race away back in the early part of the "seventies." Myrtie is coal black, and is not only pretty to the eye, but can move along with the best of them.

John Lawrence is the trainer for Guy E. Grosse, owner of many good ones, his favorite being Sunset, a son of Anteeo, dam Bessie S., who combines the blood of Whipple's Hambletonian and Geo. M. Patchen Jr. He is a dark bay, with one white foot, he stands about 16½ hands, has a perfect head, good neck and shoulders, great depth from withers to top of arm, is nicely coupled and magnificently put up in the quarters. Sunset has plenty of bone, is well muscled, and is full of life and vigor.

Midget and Ante-up are full brother and sister to Sunset and have all the characteristics of that noted son of Anteeo. Midget is three years old, while Anti-up is a year younger. The last is a fine colt and should soon be able to get a record. Sunsetter, is one of the first grandsons of Anteeo, and it is a great pity that it has been impossible to trace his dam. Sunset, the sire, has strongly marked the yearling, and it is to be hoped that Sunsetter will turn out as good as sire and grandsire. The last of Mr. Grosse's string at the track is Anti-off, who is almost coal black. He is three years old, by Anteeo, and his dam is what is known as the Taylor mare. Mr. Grosse may well be congratulated on his quartette for they are a fine lot, well looked after, and good specimens of the son of Electioneer, after whom they all take.

"Is Mr. McGraw about the stable anywhere." "No sir, he has gone to town."

Well, we will have to take a look at the horses minus the company of "Mac," whom it is always a pleasure to meet, for he can tell many a story of the olden time, when horses did not receive the attention they do now, but the interest manifested was just as deep as that shown to-day. The first of his stable seen is a very pretty light chestnut, two years old, by a son of Sultan, dam by Geo. M[illegible]atchen Jr. He has the appe[illegible]irs and [illegible]being a good usefu[illegible]nimal and if Mr. McGraw does not make him a bread winner, it will be very strange.

The next to be seen and appreciated was a bay gelding, four years old, by Anteeo, dam by Belmont. Here is another inorossing of thoroughbred blood to Anteeo, that should prove first-class, if those who prate so much about thorough. bred infusion are correct in their theory. I. De Turk is the owner of this well put up trotter, and with him expects to win many a race.

"What, Dan Brown," yes, here is a horse named after my old Petaluma friend, and his appearance would indicate that he is as much of a stayer as Dan himself. He is two years old, a beautiful bay, and is by Anteeo, dam by Brown's Volunteer, 2nd dam by Owen Dale. Mr. De Turk is the owner of Dan Brown, who will have a shy at some of the youngsters on the circuit.

Ante-Button is a four-year-old Anteeo, whose dam is the old Button mare. Now there is breeding that is hard to beat, Anteeo 2:16¼ and Yolo Maid 2:14, shows what the blood each by itself can do, now what should a combination be able to compass. He is rather small, but is full of vim and grit and he will be a hard one to down. Mr. De Turk, in addition to owning the above, has also a dark bay, two years old, by Anteeo, dam by Echo, 2nd dam, old Nancy. This is a very fair youngster and can go a good gait even now.

Mart Rollins is training for Mr. T. J. Ludwig, a prominent citizen of Santa Rosa, and has five horses in his stable. They are Tom C., bay gelding, 16½ hands, who can beat 2:50 at present. He is by Kelly Patchen, dam by Belle Alto. In an adjoining stall we find Anteeo Jr., a fine brown stallion, three years old, by Anteeo, dam by Jupiter, he by Green's Bashaw; 2nd dam by Gilpatrick.

We now come to the finest matched team in Sonoma Co., if not in the State, Ed and George, bay geldings, 17 hands each, both by Alexander Button, and out of half sisters of unknown breeding, although they were very speedy road mares. They are perfect beauties, being colored, gaited, shaped and styled alike. As to speed, they can show a full mile in 2:40 at any time, and being kind and gentle, should bring a small fortune if Mr. Ludwig ever sells them. Santa Rosa Belle is another Anteeo filly, her dam being by Niagara.

There are quite a number of well bred horses in Santa Rosa, which are not kept at the race track, the owners keeping them in private stables. Mr. Geo. A. Tupper, Secretary of the Santa Rosa Association, having a very fine Anteeo mare, which he prizes highly. She is a neat bit of horse flesh and should make a valuable brood mare. Santa Rosa will, this year make a showing, which has never been equaled in her racing annals. The purses will be large, every attention paid to visitors, and those who attend from August 19th to 24th, will be sure to have a good time.

English Racing Rules.

The Racing Calendar recently received contains a draft of the English racing rules as reported by the Committee. They were to be submitted at Newmarket last Wednesday, with a proposition that special meetings be held in London for the purpose of considering them.

The proposed changes are not specially important, and will scarcely affect the rules of racing in this country. Some of the amendments are as follows:

On Handicapping.—The handicapper shall append to every handicap the day and hour from which winners shall be liable to a penalty, and no alteration shall be made after publication.

This will avoid a repetition of the Lady Rosebery trouble, in connection with the Liverpool and Manchester cups last autumn, she winning the former on the day the weights were due and after the hour fixed for the publication of the weights. But the handicapper delayed the publication and handicapped her on the form shown as a winner, and her owner claimed that she was exempt from a penalty, which was allowed by the Stewards of the Jockey Club.

Change of name.—Whenever the name of a horse which has run in any country is changed or abandoned, his old name as well as his new name, or description, must be given in every entry until the change has been published in two "monthly calendars," or the "Book Calendar," and a fee of £5 paid.

The amendment is adding the word "abandoned," and requiring a fee of £5 to be paid.

Jockeys.—No jockey whose license has been withdrawn or refused on the ground of misconduct will be eligible to ride trials, or be allowed in any weighing-room, stand or inclosure during the time his suspension from riding continues.

This is an entirely new rule, and is probably aimed specially to keep jockeys like Charley Wood off the turf.

Entrance Money, &c.—Every horse whose number has been exhibited shall be liable for his whole stake.

This rule is rarely violated in this country, for when numbers are up horses can only be withdrawn by reason of accident.

Allowances.—Allowances must be claimed at the time of entry, but omission to claim is not a source of disqualification, and a claim for allowance to which a horse is not entitled does not disqualify unless carried out at scale.

This is another rule that is not specially of a necessity in this country, where secretaries and clerks of scales more often than not calculate the weights for owners and trainers.

Weighing Equipments.—It is optional for the jockey to weigh out or in with his bridle, and the clerk of the scales shall, if requested, allow one pound for a curb or double bridle, but if a horse run in a hood, muzzle, martingale, breast-plate or clothing they must be put on in the scale and included in the jockey's weight.

This rule, although opposite to that adopted by the Brooklyn Jockey Club last week, requiring jockeys to make their weight without their bridle, is already a rule in this country. The rule of the American Jockey Club says: "If a horse run in a hood or clothing it must be included in the jockey's weight." This rule might be [illegible] in this country to include leg bandages and be [illegible] when one horse has run with weights on the[illegible]

Starting—All jockeys [illegible] starting post must immediately place [illegible] er's orders, and every horse will be considered as having started when once the advance flag has been raised.

If this rule is ever adopted in this country, the authority to order the advance flag raised will have to be invested in the starter.

Prizes—In all sweepstakes, except selling stakes, the second horse shall at least save his stake.

A race may be declared void if no qualified horse cover the course according to rule.

Both of the above are new rules, and are of but little importance in this country, where the second and third horses are well taken care of.

Corrupt Practices.—If any person be guilty of or shall conspire with any other person for the commission of or shall connive at any other person being guilty of any corrupt or fraudulent practice in relation to racing in this or any other country, they may be warned off Newmarket Heath, etc.

The power in this rule to "warn off" or to "suspend" in that country is evidently aimed at those who put up the jobs. In England the Chetwynd case is no doubt in view, where, unless a man actually did the wrong charged, he scarcely came under the rules.—N. Y. World.

The Suburban.

All the rank and fashion of racing America turned out last Tuesday to witness the Suburban at Coney Island, the weather could hardly have been improved, being cooler than it usually is. The track was a trifle slow owing to the heavy rains of the previous day, but was drying rapidly and was in fair condition when the came out. Gorgo was the only Californian to face the starter, and Senator Hearst's black mare gallantly upheld the reputation of the State, and had it not been for sexual troubles a few days previous, would probably have just about won. Raceland was made a hot favorite in the books, though when McLaughlin appeared on Terra Cotta in the preliminary, both looking in the pink of condition, a lot of money went on him, while Badge and Bella B. were fairly backed.

When the nine starters, which, en passant, is the smallest field on record, faced the starter, Mr. Caldwell soon dispatched them on their journey, Belle B. being the only fractions one in the crowd, and she had a shade the worst of a good send off. Volunteer went right out, closely followed by Gorgo, until rounding the turn into the backstretch where Gorgo closed up, and passing Volunteer as did Eurus and Bella B., went on at a merry pace, leading Eurus three lengths past the half mile pole, with Raceland just clear of the rest all bunched. Raceland now closed up gradually, getting to the black mare's girths at the three-quarter pole, and a furlong from home passed her, and despite Hamilton's vigorous effort on the mare, and McLaughlin's determined finish on Terra Cotta, who came with a rattle in the last 100 yards, Raceland won handily by a good length, Terra Cotta just beating Gorgo a neck for second place.

The Suburban.—A handicap sweepstakes of $100 each, half forfeit, and only $25 if declared by February 20th. The Association to add the amount necessary to make the value of the race $10,000. The second to receive $2,000, and the third $1,000 out of the money so added. One mile and a quarter. Sixty-eight entries.

On the same day J. B. Haggin's Salvator, 3, Prince Charlie—Salina, readily accounted for the Tidal Stakes, value $6,500, and judging from the easy manner in which he won he ought to hold his own in all the three-year-old races of the year.

Why He Didn't Pull the Sulky.

At the Palo Alto sales I met H. N. Smith and W. M. Humphries. Fifteen years ago the former owned the fastest trotters in training and also the fastest the world had seen up to that time, while the latter had Judge Fullerton, a horse famous for his purity of gait, great flights of speed, stopping qualities and the glorious uncertainty which he added to every race in which he started. As I joined them they were resurrecting a few of the races trotted by Goldsmith Maid and Judge Fullerton, both of which are now dead, but not by any means forgotten. Mr. Smith told me the peerless daughter of Alexander's Abdallah won an easy race at Fleetwood from the Edward Everett gelding through his instructing Doble to carry the latter to the half in a minute if necessary. Doble reached the red posts at Morrisania in 1:04¾, and Ben Mace guided Fullerton between them in 1:05¼. His bolt was shot before the rocks were reached, and the Maid jogged home in 2:26.

In those days Mr. Humphries was always on hand and drew away Fullerton's sulky as soon as unhitched, while his linen duster and big fan were seen on every track of any consequence between the Atlantic and Pacific Coasts.

"But I'll tell you of one," remarked Mr. Humphries, "when I did not draw the sulky up to the cooling out shed. It was in 1874, near the close of a very unprofitable season. Goldsmith Maid and Judge Fullerton had been trotting through the West that year for a percentage of the gate receipts, which were small at most towns. In the grand circuit we met American Girl a few times, and September found us at Beacon Park. When we came back to the hotel from Allston, Doble and I met three men from Dayton, Ohio. They were going to give a fair over to their town, and it was decided to have Goldsmith Maid and some other horse go there and trot.

"Of course we were willing to go as it was on our way to California, where we were going for the winter, but Doble would not consent to any percentage at such a town. Finally the delegates agreed to give $1,500 for each horse and pay our expenses. As soon as it was down in black and white, with the name of three good men at the bottom, Goldsmith Maid, Gloster and Fullerton were shipped to Dayton.

"When the fair opened the attendance was so light that the directors wanted to compromise and give us a portion of the gate receipts. Thinking we had the best of the game we refused to let up on them, but in a short time the tables were turned. The night before the race all the railroads running in to Dayton were deluged with telegrams from every station along the line calling for cars. It looked as if all Ohio wanted to see those horses trot, and next day all the passenger and flat cars in the yard brought in loads of spectators. By noon the town was literally alive with people, and when a pair of the finest carriage horses I ever saw drew up in front of the hotel to take myself and family over to the track, I never saw such a sight. The track which is surrounded by hills was covered by a mass of humanity. The stands were full and men, women and children stood at the least six or seven deep all around the rails of that half mile track.

"Yes, sir, it is a fact; there were over 62,000 people on that half mile track and $31,000 was taken in at the gate, the admission fee being half a dollar. I never saw a sight like it before or since, and oh, what a race horse Fullerton was that day. He started against Gloster, while Goldsmith Maid went against time, accompanied by a runner. Hickok drove my horse, and Doble had Gloster, who they expected to win with and had their money on. After the first heat which Judge Fullerton won in 2:24¾, for he did not know where the stopping place was on a half mile track, while Gloster could not get around the turns, they hunted me up and wanted to know what they should do.

"Win with Fullerton if you can, was all the advice I had for them.

"'But we have our money on Gloster,' replied Hickok.

"'Get it out,' and it did not take the pair long to place an order in the box on Fullerton, who won in 2:23, 2:22½.

"After each heat the people crowded in about the horses on the stretch, in such a mass that the sulkies had to be passed out over their heads, while the horses were compelled to pick their way to the cooling out shed.

"It was a great day and no mistake, and one that still lives in the memory of every man in Dayton. Goldsmith Maid trotted two heats to beat 2:20, finishing her miles in 2:21 and 2:18, the second mile being the best on record over a half-mile track up to that time, and remained their until 1878, when Rarus trotted over the Toledo track in 2:16.

"That was the day I did not pull Fullerton's sulky up to the cooling out shed, and I guess about the only one, concluded Mr. Humphries.—Ex.

Winning Jockeys at Jerome.

The spring meeting at Jerome has changed the standing of the jockeys in the way of winning mounts. For the Jerome meeting Anderson heads the list, closely followed by Hayward Sr., Garrison and G. Taylor. The latter has still a good lead in regard to the total number of wins at Brooklyn and Jerome—fifteen at the former track and eight at the latter. F. Littlefield has fallen off considerably. At Brooklyn he was second with nine wins to his credit, while at Jerome he has only succeeded in piloting winners three times. The full list of those having mounts at Jerome will be found below:

In Hurbert Howe Bancroft's History of California, Vol. V., we have a graphic account of the first steamer that ever plied in California waters. She was built at Sitka by an American as a pleasure boat for the officers of a Russian company, and purchased by Leidesdorf, being brought to San Francisco in October, 1847, on the Naslednik. The dimensions of the steamer were: Length. 37 feet; breadth of beam, 9 feet; depth of hold, 2½ feet, drawing 18 inches of water, and having side-wheels moved by a miniature engine. The fact that a steamer was built in Alaska in the early days of steam navigation is quite as interesting as the main fact in review. Subsequently, many steamers and sailing vessels were built in Alaska by the Russian American Fur Company.

VETERINARY.

The Examination of Horses as to Soundness.

Continued.

While the shoe is off, examine the sole carefully. You must examine the foot carefully for any signs of Laminitis or Founder. Examine the rings on the wall of the hoof. The rings of health differ from those of Laminitis in being regular, while those of Laminitis are irregular, and converge towards the toe. Any signs of previous Laminitis is an unsoundness.

We now come to Navicular disease vulgarly termed "Groggy Lameness.

Gentlemen, this is one of the commonest causes of unsoundness among horses used for fast work, and one which we are compelled to diagnose by the most unsatisfactory of methods namely by absence of signs and the presence of symptoms.

Some say if a horse points he has Navicular disease. No such thing. Again others say if you have contracted feet you have got Navicular disease, but it is well known to you all that both of those conditions can exist without the animal having Navicular disease. In fact it would take too much space to do this form of lameness justice; but sufficient to say it is manifested in two ways: First, Negative signs; second, Positive signs.

Negative, absence of any other cause of lameness in any other part of the foot or limb.

Positive, heat in the hollow of the heel, tenderness upon pressure. When you pare the sole and frog, you find a reddluish color, right beneath the Navicular Bursae. The gait on trotting in the disease is also very suggestive. This form of lameness is incurable and hence an unsoundness in all its forms.

Sand-crack, this is an unsoundness because it may become deeper, and causes lameness, and if not, it shows a hoof incapable of performing its functions and retaining its integrity.

Thrush, should this be due to a local cause you can pass sound, but if he is a "leggy," flat-sided horse with a thrush, do not pass him sound as it is more than probable the thrush is constitutional. Mr. Fearnley mentions a case which will no doubt, interest you. He says, I passed a horse for a gentleman, and when I examined him, I found good open feet, but fancied him a bit flat-sided. When the horse came home, the head groom exclaimed "whats' 'e passed such a flat-sided brute as this for?" About a month afterwards the horse was a complete wreck. Thrushes on both fore feet, contracted heels, bone spavin on off hock, large splint on near-fore-leg—what a change in five weeks. He cost £150, and was sent to Tattersall's and sold for 33 guineas.

Having entered as minutely as space will allow into the diseases of the phalanges, including the foot, we will now go back to the fetlock joint, where we left off. Grasp the joint with your right hand, then the pasterns, and screw your hand round the parts, and feel for ringbones. Do the same to the top of the coronet. Lift the fringe of hair round the coronet, and look for sand crack. Having finished the anterior or front of the limb, begin the posterior or back part by commencing at the elbow-joint. You frequently find a swelling at this point which is sometimes soft and full of serum, or hard and consisting of a fibrous tumour. It is not an unsoundness, but it is an eyesore. But still a serious enlargement is an unsoundness while it lasts, and again those tumours when once removed are liable to recur. Now pass you hand down the flexor muscles, and just above the knee you may find a swelling on both sides of the limb where the tendons pass through the bursae, and if the superior check ligament is strained, you have the swelling most pronounced upon the inside. This is an unsoundness if the superior check ligament is strained.

Many claim this and its ally windgalls to be more evidence of over-work than of unsoundness. It is granted there may be no impediment to movement, but if movement cannot be repeated a reasonable number of times without heat and swelling of the parts, necessitating sedative means, then we should decide such a horse unsound.

At this point we may find filled legs, scientifically known as œdema of the areolar tissue of the legs. There are many horses, if left in the stable for a few days, will come out with filled legs, especially those of a lymphatic or sluggish temperament, but if it goes down with exercise it will not affect the usefulness of the animal, but it is better not to recommend a horse with filled legs, they are generally troublesome and unsightly.

We may find a skin disease mallenders at the back of the knee. This must be cured before the animal can be passed sound. Here we also find evidences of speedy cut marks of some form either above or below the knee, but you must be careful to distinguish between this and the mark of knee-cap straps.

As far as unsoundness in speedy cut is concerned, in the enlightened age we live in, and the perfection of horse-boots as prevention to injury, I do not see any reason to condemn a horse that speedy cuts, but again, a horse that speedy cuts is never safe for saddle purposes, and requires to have its shoes removed every three weeks.

Now, leaving the knee, pass your hand down the back tendons. Any bulging indicates disease. If towards the back it is the perforatus, and if laterally it is the perforans. These lesions constitute unsoundness. Strains of these tendons usually commence at the check ligaments which causes filling at the back of the knee. Now commence again at the knee, and pass your hand down the superior sessamoidean or suspensory ligament. Any knotty enlargement encountered on this ligament in any part of its course is an unsoundness indicating previous injury. These injuries generally occur on the lower fourth and generally on the inside where the lateral part is given off from the bifurcation. This is the weakest part, and it will often commence as a small swelling, which some trainers will say is due to the horse having knocked himself, but in a short time said swelling terminates in either total or partial rupture of same. Any injury to this ligament is an unsoundnes.

Now slide your forefinger and thumb down the canon bone for splints, which generally occur on the inside, but are found on the outside or scattered over the bones indefinitely.

There are five kinds of splints:

1. Simple or single.
2. Pegged or double.
3. Chain or multiple splint.
4. Splint close to knee.
5. Splint involving knee or spavin of the knee.

Never pass a horse sound with a pigged or double splint, because its appearance on both sides is a sign of exostosis going on beneath the suspensory ligament. Chain splints indicate a large part of the metacarpal bone is affected, and an animal so afflicted when put to work generally goes lame. Never pass a horse sound with the splint close to the knee. It is often no larger than a pea, but it is nearly always sure to cause lameness. Splints affecting the bones of the knee should never be passed over.

Now lift the horse's limb, and hold it by the pastern with your right hand and push aside the tendon with your left thumb; you will thus be able to feel the back of the cannon bone, and consequently any splints which sometimes occur in the situation. You will also in this position feel the upper part of the suspensory ligament before it bifurcates. Now pass on to the fetlock joint and look for evidences of sessamoiditis, which generally leaves a little swelling on the outside of the bones. The slightest alteration of structure here is an unsoundness, because a horse may again have sessamoiditis, and you are responsible to your clients. You must also look for evidences of neurotomy, both the high and low operation. Try the lateral ligaments of the pastern joint, examine the lateral cartilages for side-bones. Lift the foot and hold it with sole upwards and observe:

1. If the shoe is evenly worn.
2. The amount of concavity of the sole.
3. The frog, its size, shape, etc.
4. The cleft of the frog for thrush.

Having now finished examining the fore part, we will proceed along the trunk to the hind limb. We will first examine the withers for signs of fistulas, and the ribs for any signs of fractures. We now look for herniæ, of which there are three kinds generally:—

1. Umbilical.
2. Ventral.
3. Scrotal.

Umbilical and ventral herniæ are objectionable:

1. From their unsightly appearance.
2. The bowel is more exposed to external injury.
3. From the liability to become strangulated.

Great caution is requisite in giving an opinion, and you must find the size of the aperture; also if the hernia is irreducible. Again, in brood mares hernia is a serious unsoundness, because it is liable to cause trouble during parturition.

Scrotal Hernia will claim your attention while examining entire horses, and if you find one you should on no account pass him, as they are liable to become strangulated at any moment. Again you have to determine if it is Hernia or Hydrocele. To test for Hernia, cough the horse; for Hydrocele, hold a candle in a dark place close to the scrotum, and you will find the scrotum semi-transparent.

In passing along the near side you examine the prominent point of the Ilium (anterior Iliac spine), which not unfrequently is, or has been fractured. Now pass your hand over the gluteal muscles and look for wasting or atrophy of same. Also examine the cocco-femoral articulation or hip joint for any depressions or bursal distentions. Now pass your hand down the Vasti muscles and you will come to the stifle joint, which is often the seat of lameness, you may find bursal distension, but worse than all is where the Patella having once been out (stifled) is liable to partial or complete dislocation at any moment. In this case we have almost nothing to guide us except the animals action while being made to back and turn, then he may often show nothing, and he is passed sound, and the first time he goes to work out it comes again. Now examine the Tibia for undisplaced fractures. We now come to the hock which is one of the four principal points we must see are sound. These four points are: eyesight, forefeet, wind and hock.

The diseases of the hock are due to concussion and sprain entirely, except capped hock. They are:

1. Bone spavin.
2. Bog spavin.
3. Thoro pin or thorough pin.
4. Curb.
5. Capped hock.
6. Sprung hock.

Passing your hand down the front and inner aspect of the hock, the first lesion you are liable to discover is Bog spavin which is distension of the capsular ligament of the hock joint. This occurs in two forms:

1st—Soft and fluctuating.

2d—The tense.

The first form is by some considered to be Hypersecretion of Synovia and not unsoundness, especially in Clydesdale colts.

The second form is different; it is drum like and tense to the touch with heat and tenderness present and want of freedom of action. This form is an unsonndness.

We now come to Bone-Spavin. This is a most important cause of unsoundness. Recollect, of course, that it is the small spavin you have to beware of, and not the one you can hang your hat on. Bone-Spavin is an unsoundness. But again, suppose a horse is brought to you with a spavin situated far back and you gallop or trot him hard, put him in the stable, and allow him to rest for 20 minutes or half an hour. Now take him out and trot him, and if he goes sound you can pass him as practically sound—as he might not show any lameness for a long time or never, unless it (the spavin) should extend forward.

You must also examine the inside of the hock, for firing iron marks. Marks of punching and causticing, and also for remains of previous injury or disease of the joint. Before leaving spavin it is necessary to call attention to what is commonly known as coarse hocks. This is very often the case in young horses, and they will as a rule outgrow it.

Now examine the front of the hock for Sallenders, which is very common in Clydesdale horses, and is like Mallenders in the fore limbs. You are also liable to find a small bursal distension at the tip of the metatarsal bone where the Flexor Metatarsi tendon is inserted. This is due to strain and overwork. Passing your hand down the front of the cannon bone you now come to the fetlock. Examine it the same as we did the front one, giving special attention to the pasterns, as they are very prone to ringbone especially in blooded stock, which is as already mentioned an unsoundness, also look out for sand-crack in front of the hoof.

Before passing your hand down the back of the hind limb, examine the tail, for being docked, fractures, mange, nicking and paralysis, lift it up, and examine the rectum for melanotic tumors, especially in grey horses, and other malformitions, giving especial attention in mares, to see there is no rupture of the rectum caused during parturition, and commonly known as Jillflirted.

Now examine the Ischial Tuberosity and find if it is not knocked off, caused by the horse "backing against a post." This injury when old and healed may never cause lameness or defect.

Now proceed down the back of the thigh to the hock, and you may find point of same capped. This occurs in two forms: 1st—Serous, a collection of serum in the connective tissue. 2d.—Synovial due to injury and consequent distension of the bursae of the gastraocnemii tendon, where it is inserted on the point of the Os. Calcis. Immediately above and on front of capped hock we find a swelling on each side this is known as Thorough-pin. This is a distension of the bursae of the Flexor pedis perforaus as it passes through the tarsal groove, sometimes in severe form, the distension appears below the tarsal groove. It is very often associated with Bog Spavin, which if very large, will cause Thorough-pin, but again a large thorough-pin will never cause a Bog-spavin. Many young horses, especially Clydesdales, have thorough-pins when they are growing, but at 4 years old they have nearly disappeared. Thorough-pin occurs sometimes without lameness, and again it may cause great lameness.

The question of soundness is a question that rests with the condition of the lesion and the work the horse is intended for, but the most that can be given is a practically sound certificate.

Passing further down the back of the hock we come to the seat of curb, which, when recent, causes lameness. When, of old standing, calloused and well set, a horse may do any amount of work, and never go lame. You must be carful not to mistake an excessive development of the cuboid bone for a curb. Curbs are an unsoundness, but provided it is of old standing and the horse shows no lameness, a practically sound certificate can be given.

Before leaving the hock it is necessary to mention a condition known as a severe strain of all the ligaments of the hock and sometimes associated with fracture of the small metatarsal bones. This causes so much lameness that it is not likely you will be asked to examine such a subject. Below the hock the lesions are similar to those of the foreleg, though not so numerous, and further mention is unnecessary. Having now finished the examination of the near side, you must repeat the same formula on the off side, being careful to lift the mane, as the same generally lies on that side, and look for poll evil.

The third and last part of the examination consists:

1. Testing for lameness.
2. Testing for wind.
3. Removing the fore-shoes.

As regards the third, all considerations involved have been gone over in treating of the fore-feet. In trotting for lameness trot on hard ground from you and watch the movement of the hind limbs, and in trotting towards you watch the action of the fore limbs. The hard parts, such as bones, exhibit disease best on hard ground. Now gallop the horse on soft ground, and the soft parts, such as the muscles, are tested.

You must also send him forwards, backwards and turn round and round both ways on the same area of ground he stands on. When you gallop him, provided he is a saddle horse, listen to his respirations, and find out if he is a roarer, whistler, high blower, or broken winded. After listening to the breathing have him brought to a standstill and notice how long the breathing is in quieting down to the normal. A high-blower is not an unsound animal; but roaring and whistling, which is only a stage in roaring, are both an unsoundness. Some practitioners, on trying a horse's wind, catch him by the head and give him a punch in the side suddenly, or only make a feint, and if he grunts they examine him closely for roaring. But all grunters are not roarers, and all roarers are not grunters. Others cough the horse after trying him for wind. Have the horse backed towards you while you stand a short distance away, and thus you can test the muscles of his back.

Now, gentlemen, a description of the examination of horses as to soundness is finished. If any opinions are put forth not based upon common sense, any suggestions you can make will be gladly received, as this paper is intended to invite discussion on a point of such vital interest to all veterinary surgeons and horsemen in general. Concerning warranty and certificates mention is unnecessary, as it would require a paper to itself, the laws and customs are so different in various countries.

Again gentlemen you must recollect that a mistake in the examination of horses is far more detrimental to your reputation, than a mistake in diagnosing or treating disease. The former is a living monument of your incompetency and carelessness, and soon goes round ruining your reputation, at least as far as an examiner and judge of horses is concerned. Now again a mistake in the diagnosis of a disease—no one is much the wiser—provided the animal gets well, and the public are not sufficienty versed to raise any objections—but in the former case a great proportion of the public can make good judgment themselves. Another requisite is quickness to detect departures from the normal state. Self confidence is also necessary. Remember what Mayhew said "the veterinary surgeon is not permitted to doubt." In conclusion I may state that I should have written much more on this important subject to do it ample justice, but I hope the points mentioned will be sufficient to call forth an animated discussion as to the points of a good horse, which is an animal with many good, few indifferent, and no bad points.

The San Franciscos added another victory to their score on Saturday, defeating the Sacramentos at the Haight street grounds, by ascore of 12 to 9. The San Franciscos went to bat first, and Shea, Donahue and Hanley made the circuit of the bases, giving the home-team three runs. For the Sacramentos, Veach opened with a hit to center and McSorley followed with a hit for two bases. Krehmeyer went to first on called balls. Roxbury went to bat and hit to Hanley, and the ball was quickly passed to Donahue and then to Powers, retiring both Krehmeyer and Roxbury by a neat double play. Veach scored and Newbert retired the side by a fly to third.

The San Franciscos made four runs in the second, three in the fourth and did not score again until the ninth, when they batted out two runs.

The Sacramentos struggled hard to tie the score in the eighth and ninth, but could not place more than nine runs to their credit. Following is the score:

One of the most brilliant games of the season was contested at the Haight-street Park on Sunday between the Oaklands and San Franciscos, resulting in a well-earned victory for the latter by a score of 7 to 4. The fine fielding, batting and base-running of both teams gave full satisfaction to the 8,000 spectators who assembled to see the game. The chief honors were carried off by Perrier, Hardie, Donahue and Powers. Perrier made a difficult running catch in the second inning of a long hit from Dailey's bat, and in the fifth captured a hit on which Hardie thought he would make at least three bases. Hardie's one-hand catch of Perrier's fly in the fifth inning was one of the features of the game, and was loudly applauded. The San Franciscos were first at bat, but the side retired without scoring. For the Oaklands, O'Neill and Smally reached first on called balls. Hardie struck to Donahue, and was out at first, Powers quickly fielding the ball to second, forcing Smally out. Meanwhile O'Neill had lost no time, and while this double play was in progress had reached home, scoring the first run for the Oaklands. No runs were made then until the third, when the San Franciscos, by timely hitting, a passed ball, and errors by McDonald and O'Neill, scored five runs. In the ninth the San Franciscos increased their score by one, Incell taking Smally's place, the latter being unable to play. The Oaklands made two in the eighth, and scored again in the ninth, but were not able to overtake their opponents. The score:—

The Langtry Farms.

By Grim.

The plural is used in speaking of the large domain, owned by Mrs. L. Langtry, in Lake County, for when the purchase was consumated, there were a number of farms bought, and all thrown into one. The farms are situated about eight miles from Middleton, in one of the prettiest valleys ever seen anywhere. The lady has made a most excellent selection in the choice of lands, for situated as they are, almost everything can be grown on the broad acreage. Away up the hills, almost indescernable to the eye, there is a large vineyard from which was made last year the most delicious wine, a large quantity being disposed of in the immediate neighborhood and is highly spoken of by those who used it. The vineyard and orchard comprises 160 acres, and there are over 2,000 acres in grain and meadow. The farm in its entirity comprises over 5,000 acres. The house which was selected for a residence was found altogether too small, so a lot of alterations and additions were made thereto and now the building is fit to receive anyone. There are eight bedrooms, drawing room, sitting room, dining room, bath rooms, etc., in addition to servants' quarters. The house is well shaded by a number of old Oak trees, which surround it, giving it the appearance of one of the old English mansions, which are so frequently seen in a trip through Great Britain. The front of the house is thickly studded with roses, while the lawn fairly bristles with beautiful flowers of all descriptions. A nicely laid out carriage way leads up to the house from the main road, the borders of which are tastefully and artistically arranged with trees and flowers alternating. In the rear of the house is a vegetable garden, large enough to furnish everything necessary in that line, for visitors and farm hands. Tool shed, barns, stables and everything appertaining thereto. There is a change necessary, however, in the name of the creek that joyfully meanders through the farm dancing and bubbling over pebbles and sand and dashing occasionally against the willow branches which thickly over hang the stream. Now it seems easy enough to give the brook some nice sounding title, but what will Mrs. Langtry's friends think when they hear that the beautiful stream running through her farm bears the horribly sounding name of Bucksnort Creek.

Really it is too bad that this unharmonious name should be applied to this limpid stream, when so many appropriate ones might be selected. A trip was taken through the farm under the guidance of Mr. Aby, who acts as superintendent during the absence of Mrs. Langtry. We found the fields heavy with natural grasses, and also alfilerea and burr clover in abundance. The grain of which there seemed enough to feed all the horses in Lake County, was almost ready for the harvest hands; several adjoining fields devoted to hay, presenting a small army of laborers, who were hard at work laying in a supply of the nutritious grass, who, when the hay is properly housed, will pay attention to the grain. The burr clover balls are now being eagerly sought after by the cattle, of which there were hundreds of head browsing through the meadow lands and hill sides.

The fair owner has shown excellent judgment in the grades of horned stock, selected as the Nuclus, for, what will be shortly, one of the largest herds in the coast counties. The equine portion of the establishment is represented by Friar Tuck, one of the best sons of the immortal Hermit, which Mrs. Langtry purchased from Major Ramsay of England, who brought him to America last year. The following will give an idea of his breeding:

Friar Tuck is one of the most fashionably bred horses that has been imported. The fact that he is by Hermit, who for ten years past has proved the best sire in England, should alone render him valuable, as Hermit has sired two winners of the Derby in Shotover and St. Blaise; two winners of the Oaks in Thebais and Lonely, and such eminent performers as St. Marguerite, Peter, Candlemas, St. Louis, Retreat, Charon, Queen Adelaide, St. Mirin, Clairvaux and Friar's Balsam. The Hermit sires are very fashionable at present in England. There are only three in this country, St. Blaise, Mr. Pickwick and Stylites.

Like all the Hermits, Friar Tuck was a very sound horse, and ran until six years old, and won a great many races (see calendar). His breeding on his dam's side is very rich. His dam, Romping Girl, was a slashing race-mare, and ran third to those famous fillies Hippia and Achievement in the Oaks of 1867, and as a four-year-old she won the Shrewsbury Cup. In the stud she foaled Abelard, Rampage, Lancaster, Merry Monk and Fair Barbarian (now in Mr. Belmont's stud in Kentucky). It will be noticed that Friar Tuck's fifth dam is the immortal Queen of Trumps, winner of the Oaks and St. Leger of 1835, and one of the greatest mares that ever lived. Millgreen, by Friar Tuck, was a winner in 1887.

This grand horse has had quite a number of mares sent to his harem, of which the following are the best known:

J. B. Chase's ch m Mistake by Wildidle, dam Katy Pease by Planet.

Same owner's ch m Arathusa by Joe Hooker, dam Priscilla by Thad Stevens.

Dr. C. E. Farnum's ch m Medea by Norfolk, dam Mary Givens by Owen Dale.

Same owner's b m Sister to Ruth Ryan by Lodi, dam Eva Bulwer by Bulwer.

B m imp. Josephine by Straun.

Several trotting mares have been sent to Friar Tuck, the owners being desirious of obtaining a strain of running blood for the trotting families.

Mrs Langtry will have in the course of a few weeks, a very fine dairy under way, the lumber having already been secured and the carpenters will be put to work shortly. There are in all about 400 head of cattle, including Durhams, Alderneys, Jerseys, etc. For working uses there are thirty-six head of horses and mules, four of the latter being called Cohglan, Modjesha, Potter and Bellew, the latter being aptly named, for I found him a powerful kicker. All the outbuildings have been thoroughly overhauled and repaired where necessary, and many improvements added. The house and ground are well furnished with water, supplied by means of windmills, but in the near future it is the intention to sink artesian wells. The house is most elegantly furnished, befitting the station and wealth of the lady. The first glimpse that one gets of the interior, presents a picture that is the equal to anything ever described in the Arabian Nights, and is a perfect dream to those not accustomed to the surroundings of the rich. Mrs. Langtry has made a brave fight against those who would have ruined her if possible, but she has nobly stood to the profession which she adopted and won fame and fortune, so that she is deserving of the grand home which awaits her arrival in Lake County.

CORRESPONDENCE.

A Challenge.

Editor Breeder and Sportsman:—I wish through your valuable paper to inform the owners of the valuable two-year-old filly Linnett—Messrs. Bunch & Ober, I think, are the owners—that I will trot them a match race with my two-year-old colt Lottery Ticket for the sum of one thousand dollars, race to be two best in three, to take place on Stockton track within thirty days of this date, the National Association Rules to govern.

I will make the above amount to be trotted for more or less, as Mr. Bunch may wish; or, in order to know who has got the best colt, if he does not wish to match for money I will trot my colt for fun and State honors.

The above terms are open to anyone of the colts that were in the race with my colt on the 4th of June at Sacramento.

Very respectfully. Lafayette Funk.

Farmington, San Joaquin Co., Cal., June 16, 1889.

Editor Breeder and Sportsman:—Would you kindly notify horse owners in this country, through the medium of your columns, that we are requested by Prince de Sagan, Sir F. Johnstone, Bart Comte Charles Kingsly, Prince de Croy and Chevalier G. Hyndenick, composing the Board of Stewards of the Steeplechase Association of France, to publish in the forthcoming number of our official Turf Guide, which will be issued on the 14th inst., the full programme of the grand International Races, flat hurdle and steeple, which will take place at the race track at Spa during the last week in July and the first week in August.

We are likewise instructed by the Secretary, Mr. E. Guillemot, to receive entries for these races and cable same over free of charge. Very truly yours, Goodwin Bros.

New York, June 11th, 1889.

Editor Breeder and Sportsman:—The State Agricultural Society are now at work upon a proposition that if successful, will enable us to give a very important spring race meeting, to follow the P. C. B. H. A. It is our purpose to close eight events; four two-year-olds and four three-year-olds with our regular programme for the fall meeting, August 1st. The handicap and purses for all ages will close January 1st; no purse less than $400, nor any amount less than $400 added to any stake.

We expect to be able to add $10,000 for the four day's meeting. These meetings will be conducted with as much care and attention as are the fall meetings of the society, and our only purpose in giving this additional one is to encourage the interest of breeding and racing upon this coast. Just as soon as our arrangements are perfected, I will forward you a list of stakes and other data pertaining to this meeting. It will be exclusively for thoroughbreds, and taken in connection with the P. C. B. H. A., it will give our breeders extended opportunities of realizing upon their produce early in the season.

If we meet with the success anticipated, I can safely say that in two years hence our stakes for this meeting will be worth from $2,500 to $5,000 each. The greater the opportunities to realize, the more valuable will be our racing stock. We also hope to encourage the wintering of Eastern stables in California to the end that the improvement will be so great as to justify their locating permanently with us.

Very truly,

Edwin F. Smith, Secretary.

Grim's Gossip.

J. B. Haggin will go East to-day, to witness the summer racing.

Nehusta, 2:20, who was sold at the Rose sale to Mr. Shults, has been bred to Pandect.

Mortimer, 2:27, by Electioneer, was sent to Hickock's stable at the Bay District on Saturday last.

The Grand Prix De Paris was won last Sunday by Vasitias, Pourtent second and Arelithe third. The winner would receive about $20,000.

Willfred Page has added to his stud a bay mare by Nutwood and black filly by Dexter Prince, dam the Nutwood mare aforesaid.

There are quite a number of stakes in which the second payment is due July 1st. Those who have already made first payments should bear this in mind.

Mountain Boy, who was purchased in the spring at an Eastern sale by B. C. Holly of Vallejo, has served forty-three approved mares since his arrival in California.

A few days ago, while in San Jose, Mr. Burke had Donathan work out Eros. The game little stallion has lost none of his speed and he should be heard from on the circuit.

Dr. Watkins, the veterinary dentist, has made a very prosperous trip through Sonoma County, and largely increased the number of his clients. He is giving general satisfaction.

The Secretary of the P. C. T. H. B. A. informs us that an objection has been filed against Bay Rose, 2:20½, by Sultan being allowed to start in the 2:20 class, National Stallion race.

The Rathbone, Bryant W. match will come off to-day week at Oakland unless the owner of the former pays forfeit. The match has been slightly altered, professional riders being allowed.

B. J. Johnson, one of the partners in the Chicago Stable, bought on his own account Bravo (3 Bramble—Nevada), who has been running so well in the West, for $4,500. On his form and breeding he is cheap.

W. Meany, the steeplechase jockey, has now charge of some three or four horses in Matt Allen's string, and the probability is they will be put to the jumping business. True Briton is one of the number.

The Horse World, published in Buffalo, says that great contests of speed are the rule rather than the exception in San Francisco on Sundays. This is really going away from home for news.

Matt Storm, who has been visiting San Francisco for several days, returned to Sacramento last Tuesday. He reports his stable in good condition and hopes to take a couple of his best to Eureka in a few days.

On Wednesday and Friday mornings, September 18th and 20th, Messrs. Pruitt & Goff, of Kentucky, will have a mammoth sale of Shorthorns at the Fair grounds, Sacramento. They are all registered and the breeding of the best.

In 1885, after Abbie, a daughter of George Wilkes, made her record of 2:26¼, she sold for $1,200. At the sale of General Tracy's horses, a short time ago, Abbie sold for $5,900. The blood of Wilkes does not sink; it is on the rise.

Out of a total of 2,508 horses exported from Great Britain the first four months of this year, 252 stallions and 149 mares came to the United States, nearly all for breeding purposes, and mainly for farming draught and horses for all work.

Dagworth, the sporting editor of the Los Angeles Tribune, gave as his tip, in Tuesday Morning's Tribune, Raceland 1st, Terra Cotta 2nd, Gorgo 3rd. I hope he had them well backed in the books, for as everybody knows, they came in as he predicted.

On Wednesday morning last, Orrin Hickok worked out Alfred S. one of the miles being completed in 2:20½. Pete Brandon worked the pacer Racquet, at the same time, and it was all Alfred S. could do to beat him under the wire. Alfred S. trotted the last half in 1:07.

Irene, the mare who has astonished western race goers, the past few weeks, is as blind as a bat, half bred, and yet can beat nearly all except the very first class up to a mile. The Scoggan Bros. gave $1000 for her last week, previous to her beating Mollie's Last.

Knap McCarthy's bay stallion Sir Archy by Altitude, won the 2:35 pacing race at Terra Haute Indiana in three straight heats, time 2:24¼, 2:21¼ and 2:21¾. He says Geneva S. is wonderfully well just now, and Knap has every prospect of having a successful season.

Frank De Poyster has been in town for several days, trying to get Al Farrow reinstated. I understand he has obtained possession of the horse and wishes to enter him in several of the meetings where the entries are not yet closed, if the Blood Horse Directors will reinstate him.

The French racing authorities intend to allow no more unnamed horses to run at meetings under their control. On and after August 1st next no horse can be engaged that does not bear a name. How much trouble and confusion would be saved if a similar rule were enforced at American meetings.

Mr. J. C. Graves, of Keene, Ky., had a very fine mare that was in foal, to die last week. The colt would have been born soon, and as it was a valuable one, Mr. Graves did not care to lose it. So he cut open the mare and got out a fine bay colt in good condition and as lively as a cricket. The colt is now thriving —Woodford Sun.

Last week Capt. Kidd, a well known Kentucky horseman, sold at Winona, Minn., 80 blooded horses for a total of $43,000. Empire Wilkes, the trotting stallion, was sold to Kentucky parties for $8,000. I know that a prominent California breeder has been trying to buy the horse for some time, and feels quite sorry that he missed this opportunity.

J. B Haggin has in contemplation, so I am told, the breeding of several barren mares, which will be stinted in Australian time, so that the progeny may be sent to the annual yearling sales held in Sydney. This is like sending coals to Newcastle, but still the idea seems a feasible one.

Von Bismark is recovering rapidly from his attack of paralysis, and by this time will probably have resumed his duties at the stud. So his owner, Mr. T. E. Moore, of Shawhen, Ky., informs me.

Albert Cooper took with him to Chicago the three-year-old bay gelding Reward, Jim Brown-Trophy by Great Tom. The bay gelding ran two good races at Sacramento, meeting with exceptionally hard luck, and when fit will take a lot of beating in his class if not outweighted.

Mr. Lambert on Thursday took Lida Ferguson, the crack sprinter, up to Eureka on the same boat Archie Stevenson took Susie S. (Ironwood—Jennie Mac) another short mare. Both mares are very fit just now, and should give a good account of themselves.

Archie Stevenson has bred his two mares (sisters to the unfortunate Susie S) Avondale 7 years, and Gem of the Mountains 5 years, to Prince of Norfolk. By the way I hear that in all probability Stevenson will shortly be paid for his mare who was unfortunately killed at Sacramento.

Buenos Ayres seems determined to have the best trotters and race horses in the world. They have plenty of money and are prepared to spend it. Prince Wilkes ought to prove a Leviathan among the trotters, as should Goldseeker, if he can be bought. Among the thoroughbreds, they have offered $50,000 for him already, and will probably obtain him.

St. Louis has had three extra days racing this week, notwithstanding the fact that Kansas City had already claimed the dates. Mr. Webster, the President of the Kansas Fair Association, protested strenuously but ineffectually, against St. Louis taking the extra days.

Balsora Wilkes, pacer, locally known in Buffalo as the "milk-wagon horse," made a record of 2:17¾ last year. It brought an offer of $6,000 for her, which was refused. This year she is making no time to compare with her record and no price is offered for her. Moral—sell when a good price is offered.

The London Live Stock Journal says the ladies of the American colony in that great emporium fancy the English saddle horse more than the American trotter. For riding, yes; but for driving, the American trotter is incomparable. The American girl has herself—better than a 2:40 gait. The dude still lower.

The Boston stallion Ready Boy, with a four-year-old record of 2:27¼, has since shown a mile in 2:21, it is said, and is likely to be entered for the $10,000 for stallions of 2:19 to be trotted for in the Fall at Boston. Some think the 2:21 report over loaded—an outcome of beans.

The mare Darkness, which made a record of 2:21¼ at Hartford last year, has been sold for a roadster. The bid she made for record was beyond her powers on the track. One mile was too much for her. She can make a quarter at a two-minute gait. Her quarter is too much for the other three-quarters.

A full brother to Miss Ford was sold the other day among the Belle Mead yearlings to the Dwyers for $3,500. 53 head in all were sent up from General Jackson's famous place, and the average $628 is very creditable and certainly profitable.

Mr. Marcus Daly, of Bitter Root Breeding Farm, has sent to B. C. Holly, of Vallejo, for three Woodnut fillies. Mr. Holly has furnished two himself and purchased another good one outside. He will take them and two mares bought by Mr. Daly from Mr. Corbitt, San Mateo, to Montana when he starts with his own string early in July.

Mr. Woodard, the owner of Alexander Button, sire of Yolo Maid, has a four-year-old mare by his stallion that paced a mile last week in 2:22¼, and she is still very rank. She is called Belle Button, and will surprise many of the knowing ones when she comes to the post.

Ernest Rogers has just painted a life like portrait of Electioneer for Senator Stanford, who is, I hear, very favorably impressed with it. With perseverance Rogers ought to make one of the best animal painters in the States. Electioneer, J. M. R , and several others that I have seen, are very accurate representations, while the coloring is exceptionally good in every instance.

Mr. James P. Kerr is now the sole proprietor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, the best weekly turf paper published on the Pacific coast. Mr. Kerr for years and years was the financial manager of the Call, and there is not a newspaper man in San Francisco who does not know him, who is not indebted to Mr. Kerr for innumberable courtesies and kindnesses.—Racing World.

Mr. C. J. Hamlin, of Buffalo, has written the Sire Bros., agreeing to their offer to trot one of their horses by George Wilkes against his mare, Belle Hamlin. As the Sires named Harry Wilkes and Rosalind Wilkes for Mr. Hamlin to choose from, he selects the former, who has a record of 2:13½. Time and place has yet to be agreed upon, but the event will no doubt take place at a grand circuit meeting in August, probably at Rochester or Hartford.

Many old turfites and breeders will be surprised to learn that Blair Athole carries the final "e." "Pavo," the famous English writer, says: "At his owner's special request, I stood sponcer whilst on a visit to Spring Cottage in the colt's yearling days, and selected that title on Mr. I'Anson expressing a desire for a double name, as in the case of Blink Bonny which represented 'beautiful view,' wherewith the Blaire Athole district is so bountifully supplied."

The Belmont run on the 13th, was the first time Hayward rode the winner. In 1870, 1871, 1873, 1874 and 1875, he was, in turn, unplaced on Stamps, Monarchist, Waverly, Brigand and Warwick. He was second on Fiddlestick in 1876, unplaced on Magnum Bonum in 1877, third on Turrene in 1880, unplaced on Forger In 1881 and second on Oneka in 1887. He did not ride in the race in 1872, 1878, 1879, 1882, 1883, 1884, 1885, 1886, 1888.

Dan McCarty has taken his string of trotters, upwards of twenty, to Fleetwood. They seem in good trim and no worse for their journey from Chicago. A few days after their arrival Bedford (by Altamont) trotted a half in 1:13; Kitty Wilkes trotted a quarter in 35; Hidalgo, who is by Sultan, trotted a half in 1:12, and several of Dan's other California trotters showed good halves and quarters. Dan has had to pay forfeit in the four-year-old stakes at Rochester and New York as he had not taken his crack on with him.

Kingwood, formerly the property of Sir Geo. Chetwynd, died on his way out to Monte Video.

Last season Lillie Stanley was given one hundred and thirty odd heats between 3:00 and 2:30 in her work, and a few below the fastest time named, but none faster than 2:27. She trotted in her races to a record of 2:17½. Now, we hear of her going early in June in 2:30 and 2:19. Ergo! she will beat two minutes in her races this fall. Nest-ce pas?

The Petaluma track is getting very lively. To the large number already quartered there, there have been added this week the stables of Messrs. J. H. White of Lakeville, A. Zane of Healdsburg, and Dr. Wm. Finlaw of Santa Rosa. Mr. White's stable (12 head) includes Kitty Almont, by Tilton Almont, a candidate for the 2:30 list, and a promising three-year-old colt by Director, dam by Gen. Benton.

The Chicago Horseman has a front page picture this week of Don Jose, the property of Theodore Winters. When Don Jose left California he was reputed to be by Joe Hooker, but the Horseman has discovered that the sire is Grintsead. In a tabulation it is made Grinstead as the sire and carried out accordingly. Stick to the trotter, dear Horseman, you are a success in that line.

Mr. S. N. Straube informs me that the grand two-year-old Castro (Clovis–Carrie Stoner), owned by himself and Dan MacCarty, died last Saturday from inflammation of the bowels. He was an exceptionally promising colt, having easily trotted quarters in forty seconds. Mr. Straube also says that he sold last Monday, to C. Saxe, Madera, the brown suckling, one month old, by Clovis, dam Fannie Loring, 2:34, by General. Evidently colt raising in the Fresno district is profitable when handled by an experienced breeder.

Wallace's year book for 1888 shows that 837 pacers have records of 2:30 or better, but remarkable to relate, the side-wheel fraternity can hardly boast of the showing made in the list of pedigrees. Of the entire number there are 299 who have no pedigree whatever; 47 of them can show a sire but no dam, while 185 others of the sidewheelers have to stand before the world with dams not traced. We thus find that of 837 with records, 531 of them are faulty in ancestery.

Doddering Dodds fancies Racine, if the appearance in his Canadian Sportsman of a pirated reproduction of our picture of the stallion may be accepted as evidence of liking, rather than proof of absence of ordinary journalistic honesty. Dodds does not even handle a shooting stick well, or he would have been more careful in punching out the name of the horse, artist and the imprint of this paper when he was stealing the picture. His only redeeming vice is good taste, as shown by appropriation verbatim of our text relative to the cut. Good bye Dodds.

The Chicago Breeder's Gazette adheres to the opinion, expressed last year, that the importation of draft horses this year will be less than it was last year, with lower prices and better horses. The American buyers and importers have learned something to improve their methods of the past. The European breeder or seller has put up jobs on them, and the Americans have had their eyes opened to the practice. They can do better at home by breeding to sound stock than in crossing the ocean to badly cross their breeds.

That troubles never come singly is illustrated in the case of Capt. Thos. E. Moore, of the Cedars, near Shawan, Bourbon County. Four weeks ago he lost by fire his stables and $50,000 worth of fine trotting stock, and now the great Victor Von Bismarck, the head of his stud, is paralyzed and cannot recover. He was valued at $50,000, and is the sire of Bluegrass Hambletonian, 2:20¾, Edgemont, three-year-old record 2:21, and others. Bismarck is owned by Mr. G. G. White, of Paris, who purchased him recently but was not to take charge of him until the close of the season of 1890. He stood at $300 and his book is full for 1890.

The Breeders' Association have made a nomination race of the free-for-all which did not till on June 1st. Horses will not be required to be named until Oct. 9th., with such horses within reach as Stamboul 2:14¾, Favonia 2:15, Lot Slocum 2:17¼, Lillie Stanley 2:17¾, Sable Wilkes 2:18, Ben Ali 2:22, Dawn 2:19½, Maggie E. 2:18¾, Alfred S. 2:21 and several dark ones that might be added to the list. There should easily be subscribers enough to fill the race and give as grand an exhibition of speed as any reasonable man could wish for. Entries will close August 1, 1889, and as starters need not be named until seven days before the race, nominators will have every opportunity to transfer their subscriptions should they be unabie to start the horse originally intended, but as yet unnamed for the nomination race.

Quite a number of breeders of trotting horses seem to think that it is not important for them to join the Breeder's Association at the present moment, because they have no colts to start at the meeting this fall. If these gentlemen will read the list of entries we published last week they will find that if all breeders looked at the matter in a similar light, instead of the ninety odd names now in the membership list, the association would consist of eighteen members. The fall meeting is already an assured success, and as it will have been due to the enterprise and enthusiasm of a comparatively small number of the breeders, it has been suggested that the hangers-back be mulcted for their tardiness by increasing the membership fee after 1889 to double or treble the very moderate sum now required.

As there are probably a good many horse owners who are too busy to trouble themselves about rules and conditions, it may not be out of place to explain here that a nomination race is one in which the subscriber buys the privilege to name at a certain date the horse which shall be started on his subscription or entry. In the present instance let us suppose Messrs. Jones, Smith and Brown to each buy a privilege, i. e., make an entry for the free for all nomination race. Messrs. Jones and Smith may each have only one horse apiece that would be fast enough for the class, whilst Brown may have two to select from; yet Brown pays no more for his entry than either Jones or Smith. To equalize this, however, Jones and Smith have yet the privilege, should their horses break down or show their inability to start at any time prior to October, 9, when horses must be named, to transfer their subscripiton to Robinson or any other owner whose horse may in the meanwhile have developed unlooked for speed. Back East this class of races has become very popular, and there have been several instances where original subscribers (whose horses were unfit to start) are said to have sold their subscriptions at a premium, so great was the demand from persons who earlier in the season had no idea that they would have horses fit to go in those stakes, and had therefore made no provision for them.

ROD.

Dr. C. W. Aby, Champion Angler.

The genial manager of the Guenoc Stock Ranch in Lake County, Dr. C. W. Aby, beside being an equine authority, is a sportsman of the keenest sort, as the following letter received from him the other day attests. He says:

Opportunity offered this afternoon, to try your teaching at fishing. I went to the lake with seventeen worms at 4 P. M. I used up my worms in one hour and brought home 42 catfish, and two carp. I used two hooks as before, and made seven doubles or fourteen fish in seven throws. I have never had the "buckague" before, but from the symptoms, it must have been the trouble. My first throw was received in the mouth of a one-half pounder. My next brought 2 to the bank—then my knees began to shake. The perspiration simply poured off me. I shook like a storm-tossed willow. I sat down, and still they bit most terribly. They finned me fearfully. I let fourteen get away in my haste. I hooked one that must have weighed four or five pounds. In my agitation to get him on terra firma, I let him loose. My basket was chuck full. (The same we used.) I was on the opposite side of the lake, from where we were How I wish I had you here now. Mr. J. W. Wilson, President Capital J. C, Sacramento, is at the Harbin Springs. I am going to try to get him down for a day's fishing.

I'll back myself, against any and all comers on the Guenoc Lake, for a wine dinner; the dinner to be prepared by my "colored Frenchman." The loser of the match, can select the wine. I will take you for my judge, and the other fellow to select one, and the two, select the third. Each side can invite four guests. Entrance free. Catch weight, rod and line. Thoroughbreds only can enter. Match to come off any time, on or before 15th of July.

Anglers Luncheons.

Even anglers, innocent, wrapt and contemplative though they may be, are subject to some of the baser needs that are found in folk not so gentle, such, for instance, as a regularly recurring desire for toothsome food while upon the stream. One of our most highly appreciated exchanges, the English Fishing Gazette, recently invited suggestions for luncheons to be carried when fishing, and these are some of the replies:

"You are right in your editorial note about Mr. A. George's portable pasty. The subject has also found out a lover and patron of 'German sausage,' to whom I beg to offer recipe for a 'portable dram' to finish up with; and it will become more necessary from the recent licensing of 'knacker's flesh' viz, horse, ass and cum multis aliis hoc genus. In addition to usual flask have a one-ounce phial; in it place one tablespoonful of strong mustard and a teaspoonful of salt. At farmhouse or, if in Ireland, cabin, where hot water can always be got, mix phialful into a tumbler of hot water as soon as it can be got; drink it. I can assure 'J. H. W.' he'll be quite fit and empty enough to enjoy another of the 'highly flavored' sausages 'wrapped in tinfoil,' which certainly formerly I found 'toothsome' in Russian Finland, and when dependent on monastery diet off Cape Papas, in the Morea; not to say some forty years ago they were 'toothsome' adjuncts to praties and salt on the west coast of Ireland. But in those antediluvian times 'German sausages' were made of bona fide pig. I should, above all things, recommend 'J. H. W.' to cease 'trusting in Providence' either for 'lunch' or 'fish.' That's all a myth now-a-days. If 'J. H. W.' finds dram a leetle too strong, dillute it with a second spoonful of boiling water, and make two parts, taking second part an hour after the first. If taken in this form 'J. H. W.' will be amazed at his appetite for supper."

Another correspondent writes:—

I herewith add my quota of likes and dislikes. Personally on a sultry summer's day, I find flesh meat in any form objectionable, especially on account of the attractions it presents to flesh and numerous other kinds of flies. Also many forms of cooked meats soon dry and eat hard; if in pies or rolls, are apt to sour or to acquire flavors not intended by the cook, and if seasoned sufficiently to prevent that they then require the assistance of a larger flask than (if I understand "Piscator Esox" aright) our friend is desirous of carrying. I fancy "P. E" would prefer a lunch free from all such objections. Now, gingerbread, with or without cheese, is handy, very tasty, and does not dry.

Biscuits and raisins are very satisfying. Mince pies made of fruit (not meat) are also good, and when the mince-meat is well flavored with rum, keep moist and fresh for a long time.

Another correspondent adds his quota:—

My favorite lunch is egg and raisin pie, made with not too rich a crust, or it is apt to break up in the pocket or basket; say half a pound of butter to a pound of flour. It is made somewhat as follows: Line a mould the size of the pie required with paste, and put into the pie so formed as many sultana raisins and candied peel as may be desired; then nearly fill the pie up with the nicely-sweetened egg custard; finally, cover with paste and bake. These pies will keep good and moist for a week or two.

If the day is not too hot there are few drinks which equal oatmeal and water. To all who enjoy a hard-boiled egg and yet fear the consequences, only let them be well cooked—i. e. boiled for twenty minutes or longer—and they may eat them with impunity.

To which the editor adds:

We shall recommend ginger beer with gingerbread and cheese, but think the ginger might be omitted with advantage in both instances. Hard-boiled eggs are favorites of ours for a fishing lunch, only never eat one after dark. We shall never forget one hard-boiled egg we had; we were walking back after a day's fishing on the Barle, across the moor from Withy Pool to Exford We can only repeat, Don't put your teeth into a hard boiled egg after dark—unless you as good as saw it laid.

Another:

For long days with tiring walks I have tried a variety of fare, and can find nothing equal to a couple of thin slices of home-made bread and butter. Brawn or ham creates thirst, and the latter is an enemy to be dreaded. Of liquors, too, I have tried many kinds, the objection to most being that a big flask must be carried. Last summer I solved the problem to my own satisfaction, and now I carry a very small flask filled with strong lime juice cordial A cup of water with half a dozen drops of the cordial, makes a pleasant and refreshing drink. Blue Ribbonites, note.

The editor remarks again:

We advise any one who thinks of trying "Blue Dun's" "cordial" to take some old brandy with them, in case the "cordial" does not agree with them. We tried the lime juice cordial once, and nothing but being well insured enabled us to survive it.

On the subject of pastes as attractive lures a correspondent writes:

In my opinion the secret Sir W. Elliot wishes for is "oil of worms." This delectable compound used without doubt to be freely patronized in a by-gone age, and was supposed to be irresistible. The worms were collected and gently stewed or rendered down in a saucepan digester till they went almost to nothing, the resulting oil being carefully preserved as something more precious than otto of roses. The fragrant composition being freely smeared upon the angler's bait, was presumably most attractive to the fish, and, indeed, if made from brandlings, one can well imagine it to have been indescribably luscious. Traditions are not wanting of trout following the footsteps of the angler armed with this invaluable preparation across forty acres of wet mowing grass to his own front door.

Notes of Fishing and Things.

As the anglers go out and the word comes in, there is hilarity and joy. With good equipment and a chosen resort, the city man, inspired with the sentiment that no pent up business confines his vigor—the boundless spread of field and stream now rouse his fond endeavor. To catch fish and tell the truth are his main objects in life. All is fish that comes to his line, and the lyin' of another is not in his way. Rod and reel outward bound. The reel will be more apparent after the feast upon the day's catch, if there be virtue in good cheer, glow in the "rosy" as convivia' Dick Swiveller fondly named it. Convivial is a sort of consin-German to convalescent, and the gaiety follows the condition as health assures and congeniality resumes sway. There be anglers who resemble the great English jurists of mellowing memory. Lord Stowell and Lord Eldon—they had stomach for any given quantity. It is to these that must be attributed the stories about anglers' exaggerations. When wine is in wit is out—for the time being; yet there is another old saw which cuts to the contrary; in vino veritas—freely translated to the effect: truth lies in wine. The holder cannot yield beyond the stakes deposited. It is a case of hear (hic!) lies; which, in parity of Ancient Pistol's "convey," can be denominated vaporized utterance—gas, but not phlogistic, and it is not so culpable as the "equivocation of the fiend that lies like truth." What is the story of a string of fish, trophy trove by a genial friend of magnifying mouth, to the honest friendship of wine companionship? Lord, how this world is given to lying!

Not a tithe of it belongs to the stories of fishers. They all do it. Captain Bobadil was merely the type of rare Ben Jonson's period. He could slay an army by twenties in sword play at a time. The timorous romancer of his fishing luck, who has only catfish and suckers to his elegant outfit and a toilsome day, should not look the desperation he feels as he protests that all his catch were trout, and such speckled beauties, radiant in gold and glistening of silver dots and spots! He has only to recall the Indian Rajah who boldly held his own idea against the accomplishment of the scientific masters of mechanics who endeavored to reason with him that steel was the product of iron. "What," shrieked the rajah: "steel from iron? Why, next you will tell me if I put a donkey in the furnace I shall draw forth a horse!" Suckers must sometimes serve for trout, even at the inn.

The iron sinks into the soul of the gentle angler as he contemplates the hazards of the return home. He has prodigies to relate—little to show. The deputed one of his set presents him with a cork. It is discouraging Even Munchausen is given respectful attention. Jules Verne and all around the world he appropriates as his own, after the manner that Satan attempted on the blessed Savior, is taken in, ad libitum, and here, at a little bit of a tentative fabrication, too innocent to merit severe censure, the sharp rebuke comes: "O, what a whopper!" It is unparliamentary and crushing to experimental endeavor. At it the tough experienced practitioner smiles and wins eclat by something bigger and more circumstantial. The dejected tyro, restive in his gloom, has no better resource than had the Lady Rumford, who, baulked in her garden party by the irate and jealous Count, took sweet revenge in pouring boiling water over his most beautiful and precious flowers. To impeach the angler spoils no fish in market open to all for purchase.

Silver is sure bait when flies and worms fail. It is on the homestretch the racer wins—on the way home the unsuccessful angler retrieves and lands himself an applauded winner. At poker it is all in the draw. Likewise in fishing—much depends upon the luck of some other who has commercial ideas to be encountered on the way, and a reputation is thereby made or saved in angling. To return without a basket is something not to be mentioned. Fill your basket—no matter how—and with stiff heel and defiant upper lip the angler can confront his critical neighbor most dubious of his skill.

Notwithstanding the similarity of orthography and pronunciation, anglers are not angels, nor are angels anglers. Sydney Smith's lawyer brother, reproached by a physician that his profession rarely made men angels, retorted upon his medico friend, "No, your brotherhood have first chance." In like spirit it may be said that fishers are preceded in fiction.

The tale of the sea-serpent has yet to be unfolded, and anglers have no responsibility in it. Anecdote will illustrate in cases where logic fails. The Irishman who leaped from a burning building in disarranged nether dress, with his trousers hurriedly pulled on hind side before, cried out to his comrade in response to the inquiry as to his condition, after taking a confusing look at his lower raiment: "No, Pat, I'm not kilt, but I fear I am fatally twishted." Only in twisted condition is the tongue of the amateur angler who revels in the boast of his performance with no more intention of harmful representation than the gay maiden has in prideful mention of her first beau. It doesn't harm the fish; it tickles the maiden—the one and the other. Let the fishing go on—the stories will be the custom—to be continued. Bill Travers remarked to a dear old angling friend, "Hank, I'll bet that you and I can tell more lies than any other two men in the city, and I'll agree not to open my mouth."

With the beginning of the season there is room for all. To the music of the lyre and the graces of the anglers, joyously comes the rod and moves the reel.

United States Commissioner of Fisheries, Livingstone Stone, accompanied by Dr. Bean and Captain Carroll, of the Smithsonian Institution, are in the city, pending their departure to investigate the habits, spawning seasons and numbers of salmon in the rivers of Alaska. An Act of the last Congress authorized the action now being taken, and it is possible that a salmon hatchery will be established in Alaska.

Distrustful Trout and Salmon.

Several years ago the great naturalist, Frank Buckland, whose death produced profound sorrow to the lovers of birds and animals in every part of the world, called attention to the fact that salmon trout, and other game fish could not be caught by means of artificial flies in certain lakes and streams in England. There was no trouble in catching them with this sort of bait in the lakes and streams in Scotland and Wales, and in those portions of England where scientific fishing tackle had not long been used. The fish in the streams that had long been visited by town anglers, however, were not to be tempted by artificial bait of any sort. During the last two or three fishing seasons it is reported that these fish, which are the joy of the angler, will not touch the May fly, which is the article of food of which they were formerly the most fond, and which has generally been employed for bait by fishermen since artificial flies, grubs and minnows have been rejected, They have apparently come to distrust everything but vegetables and animalcule.

A scientific angler in a communication to an English sporting paper states that he spent an entire day trying to induce some fine trout to accept the tempting food he offered them. He displayed before their eyes and within reach of their mouths some twenty varieties of artificial flies, grubs and fish, but they were all looked upon with disdain. He then baited his hooks with May flies, but the cautious fish were not to be tempted by these. Presently some May flies approached his boat and, as is usually the case, some of them touched the water and were held fast. Some of the trout and other game fish rose to the surface, surveyed the creatures, and then slowly moved away. They were evidently hungry, for they searched the sand and mud on the bottom of the lake in quest of food. If they found small insects they would eat them.

The conclusion of this angler was that these fish have been educated up to a point where they have become useless to the fisherman. Acquired knowledge has made them overcautious. They are no longer credulous, like the trout and salmon in the streams which few fishermen have visited. They know quite too much to be imposed upon. They have seen some of their former friends and companions take tempting-looking insects and small fishes into their mouths, after which they were pulled about in the water against their will, and finally drawn into a boat or thrown upon dry land. They are not willing to run the chance of being treated in this ugly fashion. In fact, in his opinion a race of fish has been evolved by "natural selection" that decline to touch artificial bait or May flies. As their numbers are not lessened by anglers, they have multiplied. The ignorant and entirely uneducated sorts of fish have diminished in number. Only the kinds of fish survive that decline artificial bait and May flies. It is another example of the "survival of the fittest."

And now comes a distinguished disciple of Darwin and Spencer, who declarer that the former inhabitants of Alaska were very highly civilized, and made use of artificial bait for catching salmon. He draws his conclusion from the circumstance that the salmon of Alaska will not touch artificial bait or flies. They learned from their remote ancestors to avoid them under penalty of being caught. The consequence was that the salmon multiplied. The effect was bad, however, on the inhabitants. Not being able to procure brain food, they declined in intellect and diminished in numbers. At present the salmon of Alaska are among the wisest of their race, while the men stand very low in the scale of intelligence.

Those who address inflammatory communications to us, requesting scarification of the State Fish Commissioners, are requested to write with equal warmth either to Hon. Jos. Routier, Routiers, Sacramento County, or to Hon. J. Downey Harvey, No. 4 Sutter Street, San Francisco. The gentlemen named are de facto Fish Commissioners, and may be so de jure.

A young minister came to an old minister, and said, "I cannot get on; I have been preaching now for three years, and the people won't repent, and they won't believe, and everything seems to be a failure." The old minister said, "I will tell you what is the matter, John. You don't know how to fish. When a man goes out to fish he takes a beautiful pole, and he puts on it a nice line, and puts on that a delicate hook, and he puts a beautiful fly on that, and then he drops the fly very softly into the stream. That is not the way you fish. When you go out to fish you take for a pole a weaver's beam, tie on the end a cart rope, and put to the end of that a pot hook, and then you bait it with a snapping turtle, and then you splash into the stream, and you say, "Bite or be damned."

A correspondent writes to the trout at Blue Lake in the Sierras:

They are not so round as brook trout and their meat is yellow. It is the same way in the Highland lakes, which are about a quarter of a mile apart—one pouring its waters into the Mokelumne and the other into the Stanislaus; you have to fish from a raft at night, as the trout will not rise in the daytime. Fine, hard fish are the best cooking, and the crack way of preparing them is to lay them on a hot rock. If you don't believe it, ask Jim Budd; he never will have a trout cooked in any other manner since I showed him how it was done. We were up together, fishing down a canyon, and I got quite a distance ahead. I looked back and saw Jim sitting on a rock. It was an hour or so before I turned and started up stream, and there sat Budd on that same rock—he hadn't stirred. 'Hello, Jim!' says I, "what are you doing?" 'Fishing,' said he. I walked up, and what do you think he had?—thirteen large bullfrogs! He had caught every one of them with a hook and line. I learned afterwards that it is a favorite practice of his to lag behind and catch bullfrogs; it is less laborious, and he has the fun of seeing them jump. I suspect he eats the legs, but I never caught him in the act. Well, it was towards night and we started back towards our horses, two mile up stream. Darkness comes on suddenly in that rarefied air and in those deep canyons, and in a few minutes it was so dark you couldn't see a man five feet away. We had to feel along with our poles. When we reached the horses it was late. We were hungry and wet. I built a fire, heated a stone, and laid my catch on it, sprinkling the trout with some whisky that by chance happened to be left in the flask. I tell you they tasted good! and the best of it is, they are good next morning when cold, if you cook them that way. It's better even than frying them in bacon lard like doughnuts. Trout baked on a rock, and venison, pork and beans cooked in a pot set in a hot hole in the ground make a royal meal in the mountains."

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Old Black Joe Again.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I am in receipt of a letter from W. R. Pape in reference to Old Black Joe as follows:

36 WESTGATE ROAD.
NEWCASTLE, TYNE, May 28, '89.

Dear Sir: The reason that I cannot give you the pedigree of my black pointers is this: I never show or exhibit them, therefore I have not got their names registered in the Stud Book. The dog I sent, which was mate to the bitch which got lost overboard, is two years and four months old, and the last bitch I sent you is one year and ten months. I shall be most happy to furnish you with any information which lies in my power. I remain, dear sir,

Yours faithfully,
W. R. PAPE.
pp GEO. C. PAPE.

This corroborates my statement to Mr. Allender, that so near as I could figure Old Black Joe was pupped in February, 1887, and should set at rest, once and forever, those who know so much about the age of a dog.

JAMES E. WATSON.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 17, 1889.

[It would seem that Mr. Pape should recall the sire and dam of Old Black Joe as readily as the date of the dog's birth. Registry in the stud book cuts no figure in the matter. However, it may be considered settled that the dog was whelped in January, 1887, and was therefore eligible to the Derby in January last.—KEN. ED.]

Mutilation.

There is no doubt that mutilation of all forms is very slowly, but still steadily, on the decrease. I hear no more of "worming" dogs' tongues; tails are no longer bitten off; and the barbarous fashion of cropping off the ears of some dogs close to the head (sometimes—horribile dictu—these appendages were pulled out by the roots) has disappeared. But I consider I am still behind the age in the practice of "cropping" the ears of dogs at all. It is a practice that will disappear in time; of this I am perfectly convinced, in spite of the present half-hearted action of the Kennel Club; but none the less do I consider that it behoves every humane lover of the dog to make—however small and insignificant each such influence may be—his stand against it, says John Brown in the Asian.

It is not so very long ago that Pugs and Dalmatians had their ears completely severed off. A pug of a choice strain, with a pair of unmutilated ears, was as rare a creature as a fox-terrier with a full tail; and the round bullet earless head was considered a thing of beauty; but this fashion is happily no more, and the pug's small delicate folding ear, is now, and deservedly, one of his most admired points. The barbarity had more in it, too, than the mere cruelty of the original operation. The cavity of the ear being exposed to all weathers, inflammation and canker of this delicate organ were only too frequent, and comptete deafness not uncommon. Nor was there any reason for the mutilation beyond a fancied improvement in the looks of the animal—a fancy that I know now to have been quite mistaken. Cropping the ears of fighting dogs, such as the old bull-terriers, had at least this much reason on its side, that otherwise the ears became convenient points for an opponent to seize; and, as a matter of fact, when the ears of these canine gladiators were not so cropped, they were almost always torn to shreds. There is a similar show of reason for the practice of "dubbing" fighting cocks. So, too, the custom of "rounding" the ears of fox-hounds is considered to aid in preventing these appendages from being torn by the thorns in covert. But even were it not so, two wrongs do not make a right; and I contend that the "cropping" with which I am at present more especially concerned, which has no show of reason beyond the appearance of the dogs, and which entails an operation far more painful than the above, should be altogether done away with.

The mutilation to which I allude is that of cropping the ears of such dogs as the Great Dane, the bull-terrier, the white English terrier and the black-and-tan. These dogs are cropped to make their ears stand upright like darts, and with a certain inward curve; and, though no doubt dog-fanciers would at first recoil with horror at the idea of an uncropped bull-terrier, I firmly believe they would very soon get over the shock, and eventually actually appreciate the change, regarding the former custom much as I now do that of cropping pugs. I have, in fact, a striking example before me in the case of the Irish terrier. These dogs were formerly cropped to obtain the prick ears; I then had classes at all our big shows for both cropped and uncropped specimens; and since, the Irish Terrier Club has decided against cropping altogether. It is rare now to meet a man who prefers the prick ear specimens to the handsome drop ears of the uncropped terrier.

I have been much disappointed at the last action of the Kennel Club in this comparatively small, but in the interests of our dumb friends, not unimportant question. I had hoped that Dr. Turner's resolution would have been accepted. This resolution was that any dog born after the 1st of July, 1889, and which had been cropped, would be ineligible to compete for any prize offered at any show held by the Kennel Club. Had this resolution been passed, it would have been a most important step towards the desired end. It would not have prevented cropped dogs being exhibited at the numerous other shows held all over the old country—not even at those shows held under Kennel Club rules; but I am certain that the ruling would have had a very strong moral effect, and that in course of time the senseless and cruel practice would, though dying hard, die out. Unfortunately I learn that Dr. Turner's humane proposal has been defeated in favor of an amendment that the question should be postponed till the next meeting of the Club; this next meeting, in the ordinary course of things, will not take place till the beginning of 1890. I hope that in the meantime all those who may be able to bring any influence to bear will not fail to do so.

Those people who, in their small-mindedness, argue that what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander, and that if bull terriers be not cropped, no more should fox terriers and spaniels be docked, only show much ignorance on the subject. No one, except those who have had experience, can tell what a painful and troublesome operation this cropping is. To begin with—a fox terrier has its tail cut when a sucking puppy, say, ten days' old. The operation is performed in a second, and judging by the way the pup is sucking merrily a few moments after, the pain must be of a very transitory nature. A bull-terrier's ears are cropped when the animal is, perhaps, an eight months' old puppy. The primary operation is comparatively a very slow one; and then afterwards, the plaisters, the threading, the frequent manipulations to induce a correct carriage, all keep up the torture, and in the end the result is often a disaster.

The result of the abolition of the practice would be that breeders would at once set to work to produce a desirable form of ear. If a small prick ear were desired, they would breed that; but a small, neat folding ear, the "rose" form, would, in my opinion, look the best. I have myself possessed uncropped specimens of bull-terriers that left little to be desired in point of appearance. To those who think it would be impossible for breeders to attain the desired result, I would say with Tertullian, Certum est quia impossible est, because I know that far greater results have been achieved. Within certain reasonable limits, and at the expense of time, I can practically breed anything I like. Whether I require fowls with a top knot of feathers and bare legs, or bare heads and feathered legs; whether retrievers, which must be pure black, or bull-terriers pure white, or Dalmatians symmetrically spotted black and white; whether bull-dogs of great size and weight, or tiny toy-terriers weighing a couple of pounds—with the demand, the supply meets it. We have only to regard the results attained by Bakewell in the case of sheep, by the Booths in shorthorns, and by Laverack in setters, to know what can be done by judicious and intelligent breeding.

And from a selfish point of view, for me in India, the abolition would be a special benefit. Cropping is an art of itself, and the operation is by no means as simple as it might seem. I suppose there is hardly a man in the country capable of cropping a terrier's ears correctly, while a bungling job is a caution to behold. On the other hand, if not cropped no attention being paid to breeding small well-hung ears on account of the cropping, we have an equally unsatisfactory result. Two huge prick, bat-like ears, or ears one cocked and one falling, utterly ruining the appearance of the best bred dog. I have seen bull-terrier puppies in this country, the offspring of imported Crystal Palace winners on both sides, quite grotesque and hideous in their appearance on account of their huge, unshorn ears. When once the dictum goes forth that cropped dogs are debarred from first class shows, the breeders will soon arrange to give handsome uncropped specimens.

Scotch shepherd dogs are now employed at the Cape of Good Hope in herding ostriches, a work which they perform with great sagacity.

The Kennel Editor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will judge all classes at the Los Angeles Bench Show. The official report will appear in the next issue of this paper. Quite a contingent of San Francisco dog men will go down.

The President of the Southern California Kennel Club writes that entries to the show to be given by the club, beginning on Monday next, are coming in even more rapidly than was expected. Considerably more than one hundred animals are to be benched, among them some very fine specimens.

Mr. Graham, who judged the last dog show, sailed on Wednesday from New York for his home. A note from him conveys the warmest expressions of appreciation to those whom he met while in San Francisco. He claims never to have been treated with more consideration, and that he never enjoyed a show better than that of the Pacific Kennel Club. If he enjoyed his entertainers half as much as they did the quaint little Irish visitor, he was indeed pleased.

When Mr. Graham arrived in San Francisco, among other introductory letters brought with him was one from a wise man of the East, who has for years presided over the kennel destinies of Forest and Stream. Major Hammond, of whose recent return to his labors after a spell of illness we are glad to hear, wrote: "Mr. Graham is a good judge. If you don't think so, just try to sell him a dog." No shrewder estimate of the man could have been made, and we apprehend that even the few who pretend to see error in his judgments really feel that if such a test was applied the judge would soon demonstrate his ability.

Local cocker spaniel fanciers, led by Mr. Will Kittle, intend to use their dogs in the field during the coming season. Mr. Joe Bassford has, we believe, given the cocker a trial on quail, as has Mr. Henry Bassford, and we shall be pleased to learn from all of these gentlemen the extent to which trials have been made and the results. Mr. Kittle's use of his cocker has been confined to Point Reyes, where the birds are plenty but the cover so dense and high as to make a pointing dog a nuisance. The cocker goes yapping about through the bush and puts up the birds in great style, giving many shots that could not otherwise be had. Mr. McKoon, at El Cajon, who has shot over cockers for many years, claims that they are the dogs par excellence for use on California quails. Mr. McKoon long since intimated an intention to write us about his experience with cockers, and we venture to recall the fact to his mind.

The "California Kicker" is a curious sort, as he has been developed by the recent show. The ordinary objector usually finds in the award of the judge to his particular exhibit, some ground for criticism, but not so as to the last show. The gentle "kicker" takes a new course. Professing complete satisfaction with his own success at the show, he nevertheless feels called upon to claim that injustice was done his friends A or B or C, and when asked to point out minutely the injustice it almost invariably appears that what any one can see were glaring defects in his own dog, have been detected by the judge in his friends exhibits and the animals pegged back accordingly. It is very easy for the man whose dog is very good in any point to so magnify that excellence as to excuse in his eyes fatal deficiencies in other points, and so the race of "kickers" is perpetuated. But there is a redeeming quality about the "California kicker" which is, that his objecting is done without personalities and without rancor. It results, not from a desire to take advantage of anybody and to secure unfairly what cannot be attained legitimately, but merely from lack of opportunities for comparison and newness in the showing of dogs. The last show did not produce a tenth as many "kickers" as the preceding exhibition, and there is reason for the faith that in time the Pacific Kennel Club shows will become noted for the angelic sweetness of all exhibitors even after the judging has been finished.

The Supplement.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN is pleased to present this week, as a supplement, the picture of Mr. William Graham and a few of the dogs shown at the last Pacific Kennel Club show. Those who saw Mr. Graham will attest the wonderful accuracy of the portrait; and of the dogs it may be said that each picture is a perfect counterfeit presentment.

It is with a measure of pride that this paper records the consensus of opinion of its contemporaries, which is that the illustrations presented to its readers have always been better than any others of like character sent out in the world. The present supplement may well be preserved both for its artistic excellence and the interest attaching to the subjects

THE GUN.

The Gun Club.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The fifth regular match of 1889 of the San Francisco Gun Club took place at Adams' Point on Saturday last, 15th ultimo, and had but a fair attendance, so many of the members being out of town fishing, etc., etc. Quite a brisk breeze was blowing most of the afternoon, but the birds did not seem to take advantage of it, as many flew directly into the wind, rendering a comparatively easy shot. Still there were but few lingerers, the majority of the birds rising directly the traps were uncovered, and a few were of Murphy's best selection, regular drivers.

Eleven members shot on the occasion, with the following scores:—

Handicap distancec 30 to 26 yards.

F. S. Sanborn	28	2	0	2	1	1	1	1	2	1	1	2	1—11

Several side matches and freeze-outs were afterwards shot, the principal winners being Messrs. Jellett, Woodward, Grant, and Golcher, some fine shooting being done throughout the afternoon. The club will shoot three more matches before the season ends, the various contestants selecting the best five scores out of the eight for the prizes in the various classes.

Inside Points by John L. Brewer.

John L. Brewer, who recently returned from a successful trap shooting trip through England, says some rather caustic things of British shots, of whom he does not hold the highest opinion. Each State of America, he says, can produce a champion that ought to beat the best man England can produce, if allowed to meet on equal terms. And this is just where the English trap shots are cute. They know that if an American visits England he must be a first-class man, or he would not travel such a distance. The mere announcement that he is an American puts a handicap on him, and this handicap is increased until he has little or no show to win. This is a high compliment to the skill of American trap shots, but it is not fair play. Every man ought to have a chance for his money, but in a country like England, where personal feeling is developed to a frightful degree by personal pride, outsiders must be beaten, and if they cannot be beaten on their merits, they must be prevented from winning by excessive handicaping or other severe conditions. I should like, he says, to have used an American gun while in England, but it is probable that if I had done so I might have been asked to withdraw. If there is any article that is ridiculed more heartily throughout England than the American gun, I fail to hear of it. Manufacturers laugh at it, and the people generally speak of it comtemptuously as a "club"—that is, out of balance, awkward, unfinished, and like a club.

You will see that I did not care to raise feeling against me, so I said little or nothing about the American gun. I am inclined to the opinion, however, that the time is coming when the American gun will make its way not only in England, but on the continent. English makers will not turn out a good gun unless they get a big stiff price for it. American makers not only turn out a good serviceable gun at a moderate price, but they guarantee its shooting qualities. Those are points that are bound to have effect, and if the English were not bound hand and foot to their prejudices, and so easily deceived into believing everything they are told by interested parties, the people as a whole might be struck with a regular American gun cyclone. I am positive in my opinion that the English high grade guns are the best and only first-class guns made, and that American makers cannot approach such guns any more than a pig can fly to the north pole; but there is also no doubt in my mind that Americans can turn out a good gun at a much lower price than English makers, and hence can undersell them in their own market. Of course the profit on a high grade gun is proportionately high, but when an Englishman is sure of getting the best results, he never hesitates to pay liberally.

You ask me about the most important event in which I took part. That is rather a hard question to answer, as I took part in a large number of equally important events, while I was constantly shooting to break records and to test the killing range of my gun. Probably the most important event in which I was a part winner was an open-to-all shoot at best Bluerocks for £300, equal to almost $1,500 of our money. In this big event I was placed at 35 yds, while the next nearest handicap was 29 yds. You will see that I conceded 6 yds. or 18 ft. to my opponents, very much more than any handicapper in an American event would dare to penalized a contestant. I was assured that I was allowed to compete at 35 yds. just to show that English trap-shots were not afraid of me. You can bet a toothpick that I smiled, and that I also determined to get a share of the pot, as Englishmen call the stake money. When a fellow is roasted over a pot he might as well tumble in, and I fell in by killing 15 straight, and won one-third of the money, or $500. I used a Purdey hammerless, 8 lbs. weight, 32 in. barrels, both full choke. This gun has an extra set of barrels, 7 lbs., 30 in., full choke, as a relief in a long shoot.

It may be interesting to know something about this gun. It was shot by me in a rough or unfinished state for four months, at the end of which time it was turned over to Purdey to be completed. It was built specially for trap shooting, and I will back it against any gun in the world. I never saw a gun to equal it for hard shooting at long range. When I first got this gun, I was so well satisfied with it,

A Lucky Winner.

The Duke of Portland is the most fortunate of winners upon the turf. He is descendant of that Batavian Bentinck who was the friend and confidant of William III., and was created by the king in the first year of his reign Earl of Portland. King George I. raised him to a Dukedom in 1716. The present Duke of Portland succeeded to the title and vast estate in 1879—the inheritor of broad lands in England, valuable real estate property in London, and millions of pounds sterling. He is a patron and devote of the turf; has the finest stable in all England.

Last year was notable in English sporting events for the large accessions in racing prizes—the Lancashire Plate, worth £10,222; the Sandown Eclipse Stakes, £10,000; the Leicester Portland Stake for two-year-olds, £6,000—the largest ever put up in the United Kingdom. He won the Derby with Ayrshire, and also the 2,000 guineas. The year's winnings brought him a total of nearly £27,000—equivalent to $135,000. This year he has again won the Derby—with his Donovan, which as a two-year-old last year won eleven of the best prizes of the year, amounting to over £6,000—$30,000—with only two defeats. His winning the Derby this year places Donovan in the foremost position (and rewards the Duke of Portland beyond comparison in turf winnings, exclusive of betting), in the reckoning of many years, since the Duke of Hamilton ended his clouded career upon the turf. Donovan is now the most valuable horse in the kingdom. Other events of the year are before him. Already, his owner, is credited with total winnings of over £100,000 from his stables. He was born immensely rich, and adds to this wealth by rare good fortune through the superior excellence of his stable.

Inbreeding Considered.

It is still a debated question whether inbreeding is conducive to the best form and performance of trotters. The American trotting horse is the key to the solution, but further time is required to the safe test. Instances in favor and adverse can be cited. The predominant belief must come from thorough scurces. A correspondent of the Chicago Breeder's Gazette, who adopts the inbreeding theory, cites the results as witnessed in Empress Eugenie, an inbred Hambletonian; of Albert France, 2:30¼, and Wilton, 2:19¼, sons of George Wilkes by the same dam, Abbey, a daughter of Rysdyk's Hambletonian, also the sire of George Wilkes, and thus closely inbred. Again, Young Jim, son of Wilkes, mated to a daughter, Taney, produced Butterfly, 2:19¼ at five years. Taney, mated to Jay Bird, another son of Wilkes, produced Eagle Bird, 2:21 at four years; and Simmons and Bonnie Wilkes, son and daughter of George Wilkes, produced Bon Bon, 2:26 at four years. Castalia, 2:30½ at three years, sire and dam by George Wilkes, is another instance, and Goldsmith Maid was an inbred Hambletonian. As breeding is studied and conducted now, the issue will be pretty clearly demonstrated. And so will it be as to the better cross to obtain to attain perfection at last.

A New Proposition.

It is proposed, by a number of prominent turfmen in this State, that connection with the National Trotting Association shall be sundered, and that an Association shall be organized to comprise the Pacific Coast, or the territory west of the Rocky Mountains, for all purposes similar to those of which the jurisdiction is now confided to the National Association.

The proposition has its advocates and its opponents. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has at present no disposition to take sides. It would be manifestly improper to do so. The determination of the turfmen of the Pacific Coast should be, as it will be, the decisive quantity. But impartiality between conflicting opinions is required, and we feel it incumbent to set forth the reasons and arguments for and against the proposition, as these may be offered from either side.

On the part of the proposers of the new organization it is alleged that the National Association, with its headquarters on the Atlantic side, is too remote to satisfy the requirements of the Pacific Coast; that this wide distance affects the interests involved upon this coast, either by tardiness or by lack of appreciation or attention in the transaction of the business peculiar to this farthest country The details are not now important; it is upon general grounds, comprising the enumerated details, that the proposition rests.

It will be months, almost a year, before the matter can be fairly considered and determined. A Pacific Coast Association should embrace every State and Territory west of the great longitudinal mountain range, divisional of the empire of the East and the empire of the West. California is alike central and paramount in all this expanse of territory. As California determines, accordingly the decision of all the others conjoined will be. Full deliberation and sound judgment are the qualities that are imperative to the final solution. Neither local interest, individual bias, nor temporary considerations ought to prevail in the deliberation. Whatever may be done should be done to permanent consequence.

Opposed to the proposition it is urged that there is not now any reasonable cause for change; that no benefit can flow from it, and that continuation in the established situation is more advantageous in every respect to all interests. It is urged that the tardiness and inattention toward this Coast, of which first complaint was made a few years ago, have been remedied and do not now exist. The home Board of Appeals take due and timely cognizance of all cases which require consideration. One difficulty which existed, appertaining to the personnel of the National Board, has been overcome by the removal of the offending or derelict official. The only cause for complaint hinges on the delay consequent upon distance between the Pacific and the Atlantic, in the transmission of matters of this Coast through the mails, and the times of the meetings of the National Association.

It is contended that these difficulties cannot be remedied by the organization of a Pacific Coast Association; that the facility and rapidity of communication by mails and by telegraph obviate every objection of this kind; and as to rules and judgments the condition cannot be improved by the establishment of a local Association on this Coast; that the National Association is entirely competent and satisfactory. It has field and jurisdiction in turf matters analagous to the Supreme Court of the United States in matters of law—as the final tribunal and arbiter to hear and decide cases which come up to it from every State and Territory embraced in its jurisdiction.

This is the situation as it is understood. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN endeavors to act fairly and impartially in the matter. The proposition has the backing of worthy and honorable gentlemen conspicuous in turf interest in this State. It is opposed by gentlemen equally worthy, honorable and conspicuous. It will be the subject of discussion and deliberation during the year until conclusive determination. Propriety and moderation will prevail in the consideration, and unbiased judgment will predominate. The importance of the subject will ensure the soundness of the determination.

The Park Speed Track.

The Golden Gate Park is a charm to everybody, the admiration of traveled notables who come to California from every portion of the world, for its handsome drives and absorbing scenery, its native growths of flora and arbor, and its artificial beautification.

One feature was lacking. Besides the smooth, cleanly and delightful driving grounds, bridle pathways and walks for pedestrians, the want of a pleasure driving ground, for speed and safety and enjoyment was felt. The pleasant and smooth macadamized drive ways are wearing to the horses, and the limit of speed to ten miles an hour, is at times alike perplexing and unsatisfactory to the numbers who seek there the gratification of a "spin," and sit behind the ambitious and not always perfectly controllable fast trotter or spirited pair which they handle. Our California fine bred trotters are inspired with the feeling of the State—to excel and prove their mettle.

More than two years ago, in appreciation of this want among the beauties and delights of the park, a movement was started to supply the lacking quality. Citizens of broad public spirit and ample purse determined that, so far as in themselves the want could be supplied, took the San Francisco way of doing things toward the object. A total sum of $32,561 was subscribed and paid in for the purpose. The Park Commissioners were in co-operation with the scheme. It was, to have prepared a driving pleasure track, distinct from the established drives and riding paths and pedestrian's walks, so as to interfere with none of these, which should serve for all who cared to participate in the pleasure. The track was to be of clay, to assure ease and relief to the horses, and allow nearly topmost speed in the exhilarating sport. It was not to be a racing track, nor to be subjected to the accessories of saloons, betting, or any of the customary racing track habitudes. It should be simply, actually and only a driving pleasure ground for gentlemen, with the facilities for speeding without the objections which the fastidious prefer in regard to racing tracks or sporting courses. The Park Commissioners expressed their accord in the plan. Neither the State nor the city was taxed for a dime of the expense.

The money—$32,561—was paid in entirely upon private subscription by wealthy, generous and public-spirited citizens. The Park Commissioners allotted the grounds—quite as they had allotted the driving ways, the riding paths, the walks, the children's play grounds, the conservatory, the sites for memorial statuary, the music stand, and everything. The Park Commissioners have absolute control of the Park, as they should have it, the road ways, the path ways, the dispensation of the water, and everything pertaining to that lovely and prideful resort for everybody.

Agreeably to the concessions of the Park Commissioners the driving pleasure track was laid out, and the work pushed onward to completion. The Pacific Improvement Company was given charge of the work. February 28th this year, the track was completed, and the Park Commissioners received it from the Committee of Supervision appointed by the subscribing citizens. The Pacific Improvement company has been paid in full—$31,000—for their part of the work. The contract called for a depth of six inches of clay upon the track of a little more than a mile in length—a full mile of this thoroughly level and smooth—and 100 feet in width. In some places the depth of clay does not exceed four inches. The track, however, is finished, and has been accepted and turned over to the Park Commissioners, and they have accepted the trust.

It was February 28th of this year that the Park Commissioners accepted the track. Still it is not opened to the subscribers nor to anybody. It is closed and boarded up at each end, and no one is permitted by the Park Commissioners to go over it. It has not been given attention by any of the employees of the Park. The winds blow the drifting sands upon it; the rains wash its edges; the elements have their impairing sport with it. Much expense attends these consequences of nonusage and neglect, and only disappointment and aggravation can come of the negligence. The Park Commissioners have control of the water in the Park. The driving pleasure track sadly needs watering. There are no conduits, no prepreparation or security whatever against waste and wear of the closed and unused track.

A wrong impression has been lodged to do harm to this track, and it has been studiously, if not deliberately created. It is represented as akin to a racing track, and the push seems to be to bring the people to believe that this is at their expense. The facts are as we have herein stated. The cost of the track is defrayed entirely by the private subscriptions of generous citizens. Not a dime has come from the public purse; not a mill will it cost any non-subscriber. It is not a race track, nor does it possess any of the characteristics of the kind. Absolutely free from saloons, or their possibility, no crowds, no betting, nothing to interpose or offend, and with police to guard and aid in case of accident. The Park driving pleasure track is intended simply for the recreation of the participants, without annoyance or harm to any others—as innocent as parlor billiards, as delightful as yachting, as unexceptionable as lawn tennis. California horses have the go in them, and go they will. The world of pleasure seekers enjoy the excitement of the drive—who shall hinder them from it? The Park Commissioners ought to have the track opened. The people should be allowed the delights of the track.

Important Notice.

The proprietor of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has sent to all Directors of Agricultural and Fair Associations, as well as to all prominent trotting horse breeders on the Pacific Coast, a copy of the letter which is given below, as far as their addresses are known. It is desired that the opinions of all interested in the subject should be sent in, so that those who are moving in the matter may fully understand the feelings of those most likely to be interested for or against a change. If there be any of our readers who desire to ventilate their views on the matter, they are hereby cordially invited to send in communications to this office at once:

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN,
313 Bush Street, near Montgomery.
SAN FRANCISCO, June 19, 1889.

DEAR SIR:—The subject of forming a Pacific Coast Trotting Association on the same plan as the National and American Trotting Association is at present being seriously discussed by prominent horse owners.

We desire to obtain the personal opinion of all who are interested. If a large majority are in favor of such a movement, then a meeting can be called at a suitable time and place, the organization to consist of one member of the Board of Trustees from each district or association.

These opinions will be published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. In this manner the views of the different writers will be brought prominently before the trotting horse public.

Please favor us with your ideas on this subject as promptly as possible. Respectfully,

J. P. KERR.

Fair Advertisements.

There are quite a number of new advertisements in this weeks issue from various fair associations in California and Oregon. A perusal of the announcements will give a fair idea of what will be done in the racing world this year, and will also enable the owners and trainers to form an idea of where the most advantageous entries may be made. The following are the new "ads:"

Nevada County, at Glenbrook Park, August 20th to 24th.
Sonoma and Marin, at Petaluma, August 27th to 31st.
Mount Shasta Agricultural Association at Yreka, October 2d to 5th.
Stockton Fair, September 24th to 28th.

The Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeder's Association also announce the re-opening of the Free-for-all and the 2:30 class. The conditions are slightly altered, and the Directors have every reason to believe that both of these races will fill well.

A New Track.

Year after year, for almost a decade, the report has been current that a new track for San Francisco was inevitable and would surely be built within a short time. Still the years have passed and the new track is even yet a thing of the future. Committees have hunted for suitable localities but without favorable results. It is only a few months since that a party of gentlemen who are prominent members of the Blood Horse Association, visited the neighborhood of the six mile house in hopes of finding land that would answer the purpose intended, but without, as far as heard, finding the necessary amount of ground. A few months ago, a well known and wealthy gentleman, offered a hundred acres of land near the cliff house for the purpose, but the parties to whom he made the proposition, saw fit to decline his offer, or could not see their way clear to make the undertaking a success. So the matter has stood until about three weeks ago, when a practical man made up his mind that a new track could be had if handled in the proper manner.

The gentleman alluded to is Frank H. Burke, Esq., who in looking around found that eighty-five acres could be procured at Menlo Park, on a ten year lease for $1,500 per annum. He at once saw the railroad authorities and got from them the assurance that if first class racing only was given over the new track, they would issue return tickets from San Francisco for the extremely low sum of twenty-five cents. However, the railroad reserves the right to refuse tickets at this price for any scrub races, but on the other hand gives assurances that it will run special trains to the meeting of any recognized association, and have plenty of cars in readiness after the races to bring passengers back to the city in good time. So much for the railroad company. Senator Stanford was then interviewed, to see what he would do personally toward assisting the enterprise. He received Mr. Burke very frankly and listened to the scheme which met with his full approval, and his answer to the committe of one was, that whatever sum could be secured toward putting the grounds in first class condition, building the necessary stabling, houses, fencing, etc., he would give half as much as could be collected. If the committee can secure $10,000, the Senator will give $5,000; if they can get $20,000 he will give $10,000, and so on in proportion. Another good and generous offer.

Mr. Hobart was about to start on his trip to Europe, so he was seen, and at once expressed a desire to contribute $10 for each acre he owns in that vicinity, which as he owns a 250 acre ranch will amount to the modest sum of $2 500.

A large number of other gentlemen have been interviewed on the subject, and they have all expressed a willingness to subscribe liberally toward the object. Mr. Burke will make a proposition to the Directors of the Pacific Coast Trotting Horse Breeder's Association at their next session, that they go on with the project, and he is willing to become one of a committee to gather in the amount of coin necessary for a successful completion of the project. In addition he will also pay $1,000 a year toward the ground rent for the term of ten years.

Complaint has been frequently made that the two tracks as now situated are exposed too much, the cold air preventing the working out of horses in a proper manner. The fog also retards work at times, but it is claimed that if a new track is built on the site selected, all the past troubles will be obviated. Whether the Directors of the P. C. T. H. B. A. will see fit to accept the trust is of course a question, but the plan is, on the face of it, such a good one, that there is a strong probability that they will enter into the scheme heartily.

At the Napa Track.

What a great pity it is that Napa is so far from San Francisco, for most assuredly if it were within easy reaching distance, there would be no necessity building a new one in this vicinity. The track as it is at present, is as fast as any in the State, if not the very fastest. The committee who have the track under their management, have taken the utmost care of it all winter, and now it is the opinion of all horsemen who have visited it since the spring rains closed, that it is the track par excellence. The consumate ease with which Marion gained her record of three heats under 2:30 week before last, is a big feather in the cap of the Napa Association, as the game little daughter of Piedmont was unable to come anywhere near the same time on the Sacramento track.

The surroundings are beautiful and whatever may be lacking in the way of accomodations at present will be erected before the fall meeting begins as the outlook for an enormous attendance is very flattering. On the occasion of our last visit there were races held at the track and consequently a number of prominent horsemen put in an appearance from various portions of the State. Among others seen was Mr. McGraw of Santa Rosa, who was over to take a look at his black stallion Silas Skinner, who as a three-year-old was given a trial in 2:28. Mr. McGraw says he does not want to start his horse in a race until he is sure of beating 2:20, and from present indications he need have no fear of starting him this fall, for although have done heavy service in the stud, he can trot in 2:24 to-day. "Mac" is an old timer on the trotting circuits and richly deserves such a priceless gem as he now possesses. This son of Alcona Jr. promises to give his sire a great name ere many moons pass, which will be a pleasure not only to the friends of Mr. McGraw, but also to the friends of Mr. Loeber, the owner of Alcona Jr

J. F. Maguire, who has been all winter at the Oakland track, is now situated at the Napa track, with a string of ten horses from the stables of D. M. Reavis, Esq., of Chico. He has among the number colts and fillies by Blackbird, Director and Munroe Chief, and also one by a son of Steinway. When we were there Mr. Maguire had only just received the horses and consequently had not their pedigrees as perfectly as he now has. A very beautiful mare called Vic R. gives exceeding great promise, and although only just taken up, seemed to relish her work immensely. A three-year-old by Director moved at better than a 2:30 gait, and although not driven out a full mile will be able to go three full heats before many days. Several yearlings are also under the charge of Mr. Maguire from the same stable, and he is developing them slowly for the work they will have to do either this year or next. Mr. Reavis could not have secured a more careful or conscientious handler of stock than Mr. Maguire, and we fully believe that the home of Blackbird will have additional honors showerd upon it this year.

A look was next taken at the stable, presided over by that knight of the sulky, Harry B. Starr. It seems but yesterday that Harry was head groom at the Farm of Mr. Loeber, but a close application to business has put him in the forward ranks, and many a race Harry has snatched from some faster horse, simply by good generalship.

Mr. Starr stands very high in his profession among the residents of Napa County, and as a consequence has all he can attend to. He has altogether sixteen head, which are all under his personal supervision, and it is no uncommon thing to see him in the sulky from morning to night.

Among the best of those now in training is Flora B. by Alcona 730, dam Fontana by Almont. This speedy mare already has a record of 2:29¼, and when she gets down to work this fall will materially reduce her present record.

A mare who shows that she can trot as many heats as necessary in a prolonged race is Cora C. by Whippleton, dam by Naubuc. She is only four years old, and although not yet within the charmed circle, can get the credit mark whenever she is sent for it.

Another Whippleton with a good turn of speed is Black Prince, whose dam is also by Naubuc. He will require a deal of work to bring him to his limit, but he is a glutton for exercise, and should give his sire another one in the great table.

A fine youngster called San Diego is two years old, and is an excellent mover. He is by Alcona Clay, dam Fontana by Almont.

Another of Mr. Starr's pets is Oakville Maid, 3 years old, by Whippleton, dam unknown. This is a filly of great promise, and will do well.

The pet of the stable, however, is Coronada, a yearling by Stamboul, dam Dolly McMahon, the dam of Lillie Stanley, 2:17½. He is the prettiest trotter on the track, and his owners the Coombes Bros., fancy him highly. Coronado is entered in several yearling stakes, but whether he will start or not is yet a question. There is no denying the fact that Mr. Starr is handling one of the best and one of the fastest yearlings in the State.

Answer.—A sweepstakes for two years old, foals of 1888 by subscription of $25 each for mares covered in 1887, and of $50 each for the produce of such mares, unless struck out by July 15th, 1889; or $100 unless struck out by July 15, 1890. All starters to pay $250 additional, all of which shall go to the second and third horse, as further provided. The Coney Island Jockey Club to add $12,500. The second to receive $2,000 of the added money and two-thirds of the starting money. The third $1,000 of the added money and one-third of the starting money. The breeders of the winner and of the second horse, namely, the owners of the mare at time of foaling, to receive $1,500 and $1,000 of the added money respectively, whether they be the owners of the horse when the race takes place or not. Colts to carry 118 lbs; fillies and geldings 115 lbs. Winners when carrying standard weight for age, at the course where the race was run, of $3,000, 3 lbs.; of two such races of $3,000 or of one such race of $5,000, 7 lbs.; of two of $5,000; or of one of $10,000, 12 lbs. extra. Maidens allowed 10 lbs., which allowance shall not be cumulative. Mares may be entered by persons not their owner, the owner having the prior right. If a mare entered in this stake drops her foal before the 1st of January, or if she has a dead or more than one foal, or is barren, the entry of such mare is void, and if the entrance money has been paid it will be returned. By filing prior to July 15, 1889, with the Coney Island Jockey Club, an accepted transfer of the produce with its engagement for the Futurity Stakes, the original subscriber will be released from any liability as to the engagement of the produce, leaving the purchaser liable for the same unless duly struck out, remaining himself liable for the subscription of $25 for the mare only. Should a subscriber or transferee die before the race, the entry shall not be void, provided it be assumed by the then owner of the horse; notice in writing to that effect accompanied by the payment of all accrued liabilities for such horse in the stake, being given within three months after such demise. In such cases the entry shall be independent of all other racing obligations or entries of the original subscriber or transferee. 915 entries. Three-quarters of a mile.

J. G. K. Lawrence, Secretary, 5th Avenue and 22d street, New York.

that I said it ought to kill 60 out of 100 best blue rocks, at 35yds. rise. This bit of boast was at once snapped up by an English sportsmen, who laid £100 to £50 on the birds.

I finally agreed to make the attempt. All previous attempts had been to kill only 50 out of 100, and every attempt had been a failure, the men who backed the birds being heavy winners. The birds in my race were specially picked out of a choice lot, and were all ring-tied; that is, each bird was put through a ring, the size of the ring being a standard for the very best birds, such as were noted for speed and courage. The boundary of this race was 60yds. from the traps, and the wind was with the birds. The betting was £5 to £1 on the birds, and there were not many takers. I was so confident that I would accomplish the feat that I put up all the money I had on it, and the walking was not very good either. It never is in England. Well, I killed 41 out of the first 50, and still the betting was against me. I closed the race on the 81st bird, having killed 19 out of 31, and scored a win. Final score: Killed 60, missed 21. I thus established a new world's record at the distance and on the number of birds. I never shot in better form or with more confidence, and although I did not win much money, I did something to make my countrymen feel proud of me. In this race my loading was as follows: In each barrel 4 drams Schultze wood powder, 1¼ oz. Newcastle chilled shot; Eley's improved paper shell, with specially strong primer. The kills were in nearly every case made with the first barrel, although the second was occasionally used as a precaution, rather than a necessity.

In all English pigeon shooting matches the birds always have the benefit of the wind. Indeed, a match with the wind against the birds is seldom, if ever, allowed in England, the traps being managed promptly, in accordance with the direction of the wind. The general rule that governs all the shooters in England is to load over 4 drs. powder and 1⅛ oz. shot, and to hold the gun just as the shooter pleases. This is susceptible of explanation. The shooter goes to the traps, has the privilege of taking aim, and can hold the gun to his shoulder or not, as he pleases. This rule is followed everywhere, and the idea of holding the gun below the elbow until the bird is on the wing, is laughed at by English sportsmen. The gauge of gun is limited to a 12, and any weight not over 8 lbs. I did not see a 10-gauge gun in use, and only a few at the gun stores, where I was told they were used for duck shooting. I told them that tens were used a great deal in the United States, not only at the trap, but in the field, and that many sportsmen thought that eights, sixes and fours, were the proper things for ducks, at which much surprise and amazement were manifested, and the expression was made, "We would call that punting!" The punt gun is a big gun mounted on a swivel, and used principally by sailors who hunt ducks, and want to get enough game with one or two discharges to last for a week!

The Texas Field is the style of a nicely made little journal which comes to us from San Antonio, Texas, in its second issue. It is devoted to field sports, and we trust will be accorded the appreciation to which its brightness and newsiness entitle it.

On June 13th two young ladies of Sacramento, who were camping near Bolinas, in Marin County, encountered a brown bear while they were blackberrying. One of the ladies, an expert at rifle shooting, chanced to have her rifle with her, and at once shot the beast through the head. The carcass was taken to San Rafael and distributed by a butcher of the town.

We commend to the Secretaries of other shooting clubs and, in fact, to the Executive officers of all organizations, official reports of the doings of which should appear in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN the example set by the Secretary of the Gun Club, Mr. John K. Orr, whose report appears elsewhere. Mr. Orr's familiarity with trap shooters in California for thirty years make his reports especially valuable.

Mr. Walter E. Bryant, Curator of the Academy of Sciences, and the most prominent naturalist of the Western States, was recently sent to Baja California, on a collecting tour, and on Monday evening last lectured to the Academy about his trip most entertainingly. Several discoveries were mentioned, among them being the nest and eggs of Beldings warbler, the latter being like those of the yellow-throated warbler, white with black and brown spots. A curious fact mentioned by Mr. Bryant was that in very dry seasons the California quails do not pair, the probable reason being an instinctive knowledge that food for the young will be scarce.

ATHLETICS.

California Athletic Club Grounds.

The California Athletic Club has leased Harbor View Park, at the end of the Union Street cable line, and will fit it up as an exercising ground for the use of its members.

The park will be arranged for sprinting, walking, weight and hammer throwing, vaulting, and all other out-door sports. A much needed addition to the athletic resources of the city.

Olympic Out-Door Grounds.

During the incumbency of the Board of Directors which served the Olympic club last year, a movement to procure grounds for the use of the "out-door men" was initiated, but as that board also began the new building scheme and was hard worked in carrying the project through to a point where its success was assured, the exercising grounds were suffered to lapse for the time. Several desirable tracts were offered either under lease hold or for purchase outright, what seemed most desirable being a piece of four blocks, just south of Golden Gate Park, an option on which was secured through the efforts of Mr. L. R. Fulda, a member of the club. The purchase of land at San Rafael, near Sausalito, in Alameda County, and on the peninsula, toward San Bruno, was thoroughly discussed, and several most excellent places were examined by the Directors, but when it became necessary to invest some thousands of dollars it was wisely decided to bend all energies to the perfecting of the new building, after which grounds and other adjuncts could more easily be secured. The new building is secured, on an accessible site, and so perfect in all its appointments as to insure its being the best club structure of the sort in the world, whether for size, facilities for exercising, or provision for social enjoyment.

Having accomplished so much, it is but natural that the out-door enthusiasts should revive their pet project, and the present Board of Directors is now casting about for a site upon which to construct a complete exercising ground. Certain features are indispensable, such as accessibility at slight expense in time and money; protection from fog, wind and drifting sand; immunity from subsection by the city authorities for an extended period; ample water supply of good quality.

It is not easy to select a plot of sufficient size that will combine all these qualities, but a close examination of outlying lands is being made by the Directors, and the coming year will probably see the club in possession both of a magnificent home and a well fitted resort for its field days.

If ever there was a cosmopolitan Board of Directors, that now in office over the Olympic Club may be so styled. Its personelle is unexceptionable in every respect, social, business, and athletic, and the members combine in a rare degree the attributes which go to make men effective in leading their fellows to higher planes. Just now the Board is somewhat disintegrated. Its President, Mr. William Greer Harrison, strong, self-contained, enthusiastic, capable and popular, is about to visit England. Its Secretary, Mr. W. E. Holloway, urbane, distinguished, full of executive ability, is in Australia. Director Barry Baldwin, fond of a dry joke, but always ready for any good endeavor, is doing England and the Continent, Vice-President R. P. Hammond, the highest type of Native Sons of the Golden West, and that means the best sort of man, has but just returned from an exhaustive visit to the great athletic centers of the Eastern States.

If the coming months, when these travellers return to club duty, do not produce plenty of surprises in the way of new ideas, it will be something extraordinary.

Stanford.

Stanford, a four-year-old stallion that won a couple of races at the recent meeting in New York city, in one of them making a record of 2:30, says the Breeder's Gazette, is liable before the season is over to give his sire, Piedmont, a good deal of advertising and prove that the men who bought the latter's colts at Senator Stanford's sale in the spring were wise in their generation. This colt Stanford is out of Irene by Mohawk Chief, and although he has had but little work can step a mile close to 2:25, which is certainly a good showing for a colt of his age and experience. It has been said by some people who did not know what they were talking about that the Piedmont colts were not given a fair chance at Palo Alto, but this is all nonsense, as the policy there is to develop the best ones on the place, irrespective of their sire, as all the animals from which the youngsters come are owned at Palo Alto, and hence there can be no chance of booming somebody else's stallion by developing a good young trotter. That this rule has been in force a good many years is shown by the fact that when the four-year-old record was temporarily snatched from California by the Kentucky filly Elvira the animal that regained the laurels was Sallie Benton, a daughter of General Benton, which showed that something besides the Electioneers were in training. Piedmont's colts seem to be rather slow in coming, there is no denying that, but it has been the rule that sons of Almont sire speed when the conditions are favorable. They certainly have been in Piedmont's case, as he was a trotter himself, and was out of a producing mare.

She Does Not Like Balky Horses.

"What are we stopping for?" said the lady. "Balky horse on the track," answered the gentleman. "He won't move for whipping, or pelting, or whispers in his ear, or—anything." "Did I ever tell you," she asked, "about my experience with a balky horse? No? Well, it was out on Colorado plains. The most elegant young eligible of our set had invited me to take a ride behind a high-spirited, fine-blooded horse. I got myself up to do justice to the occasion. All went delightfully until, when we were on the open plain outside Denver, that valuable animal concluded to pause in his rapid motion and meditate. My escort shook the reins, chuckled persuasively, remonstrated encouragingly, gave a touch of the whip, at which the horse reared and kicked viciously, but still we were stationary out on that lonely sandy level. My elegant escort grew red in the face with mortification, and clenched his teeth so as not to let slip any regrettable words. 'If you will allow me to get out I could start him,' he said. 'Oh, by no means,' I rejoined; 'I could never hold him. Let me get out, and try putting sand in his mouth. I've been told that worked like a charm.' And so it did. I clambered out of the buggy, grabbed a good fist full of fine sand, opened the jaws of that horse and threw it in. The astonished horse tore off like a flash, and as I stood alone, five miles from home in that solitary place and watched the maddened horse, the powerless driver, and the black buggy grow a mere dot in the distance, I decided the experiment had been a perfect success as far as the starting of the horse was concerned.—Chicago Journal.

The McCarty Stable.

We have received a letter from D. J. McCarty, Jr., in which he says that his father sold the following horses in Chicago:

To J. Stinson the black mare Linda by Sidney, dam Flight by Buccaneer for $5,000; bay mare Diana by Berlin, dam by St. Clair, $2,400; gray mare Maud Medium by Milton Medium, $2,000; bay mare Mabel by Alexander, dam by Hambletonian, $1,000; chestnut yearling colt by Sidney, dam Miss Gift by Wildidle, $2,000.

To Job Travers, Chicago, he sold the chestnut mare Sunflower, five years, by Elmo dam Ella Kellogg, by Chieftain Jr., for $4,500; bay mare Nellie Irvington by Arthurton, dam by Gen. Taylor, $1,000.

To James Murphy, Chicago, two thoroughbreds, chestnut gelding Tom Daly by Kyrle Daly, dam Columbia, $750, and chestnut gelding Harry Mack by Hyder Ali, dam Madame Rowett, $1,500.

He arrived at Fleetwood with the bay gelding Wally by Electioneer, dam by Norfolk; brown gelding Garfield, 2:29¼, by Gen. He also says that Hidalgo, Bedford, Kitty Wilkes and Charley D. were all going well, and the whole stable was in good condition after their trip.

Yolo Maid Sold.

Some months ago, Mr. Hoppin, the owner of Yolo Maid, notified us that he intended to sell his fast pacing mare, if he could get his price for her. It took some time for him to make up his mind to do this as he had bred the filly and coached her all through her fast work and finally saw her work a quarter last fall in less than thirty seconds, proving to him that Yolo Maid was the fastest pacing mare in the world. Several persons on this coast have tried to negotiate for her purchase ostensibly for Eastern parties, but Mr. Hoppin would not recede from the price he asked $9,000, and they failed to come up with the amount required. B. C. Holly has had his eye on the mare for some time, so about two weeks ago he went up to Yolo County and took another look at her and finally concluded to take her at Mr. Hoppin's price. Wednesday of last week, she was taken to Mr. Holly's place at the Fair Grounds, Vallejo, where she arrived safely. Prior to making the journey she was driven a mile, the first quarter being made in 29½ seconds, the half mile in 1:04 and the circuit of the track in 2:14½. The Maid is still heavy in flesh and needs considerable work to reduce her to proper racing condition, but Mr. Hoppin is confident that she will be able to beat Johnston's record of 2:06¼ when at herself. Mr. Holly on being interviewed stated that he would take Yolo Maid to Salt Lake City first and enter her in the free-for-all there, after which he will make the rounds of the Montana Circuit with his stable, returning in time to meet the cracks at the State Fair. Mr. Holly has undoubtedly secured the fastest pacing mare in the world, but he will have to meet some very fast sidewheelers on the trip which he proposes to take. However, he will have the best wishes of his California friends for his success.

Poscora Hayward.

Pilot, in the N. Y. Sportsman, says: Poscora Hayward is a gray horse by Billy Hayward, 2:31¾, son of Geo. M. Patchen Jr., 2:27, out of Lady Poscora by Young Poscora. He was bred by Allen H. Mayhew, Niles, Cal., and trotted his first race at San Francisco as a three-year-old, where he defeated Belle Davis and Gracie D. and made a record of 2:42½. The following week, however, he finished second to Belle Davis, and was then retired until 1878, when he won a four-year-old stake at Sacramento and trotted a heat in 2:37. As a five-year-old he saved his entrance in a race won by Belle H. at Oakland, and finished second to Santa Claus at the same meeting.

Poscora Hayward trotted his next races in 1882, when he opened the season at Santa Cruz by defeating Frank Moscow and Blackmore in 2:31, 2:28½, 2:29¾. A defeat by Sweetness at San Francisco followed this event, and then others by Albert W. at Santa Rosa, Petaluma and Oakland respectively. Poscora Hayward inaugurated the following season at Santa Cruz by winning two races in one week. He was then shipped to San Francisco, where he finished third in a race won by Manon. At Oakland he started against Magdallan and Del Sur, and won after a seven-heat race, the deciding heat being trotted in 2:25. The following week at Sacramento the tables were turned, Magdallah winning after the gray stallion had landed two heats in 2:23½, 2:17½.

After a retirement of three years Poscora Hayward finished fourth in a race at Denver, Col., during the fall of 1886, and was also defeated by Spinella, Lady Bonner, Rolla and Superior in 1887. Last year he won a race at Eureka, Cal., defeating Idaho Patchen in slow time. In his twenty-one races, of which he won seven, was second in eight, third in two, and unplaced in four. Poscora Hayward trotted eighty-six heats, winning twenty-six, one-half of which was finished in 2:30 or better.

Roaring Horses.

All horsemen are familiar with the trick of punching, or at least feigning to punch, a horse in the ribs to try him for roaring, but some may be unaware that this becomes a much stronger test if the horse's nose is pulled in toward his chest toward his right side. Some practice, again, will enable a veterinary surgeon, or even a layman, to extend a horse's head and neck and feel the dilator muscles of his larynx. If the horse has been a roarer for any length of time the left muscle will have become flatter than the right through wasting. "A slight amount of pressure with the index finger on the left arytænoid cartilage" will then "cause a loud noise in resperation, as if the animal were galloped, but there is little, if any distress." If, on the contrary, the right arytænoid cartilage is pressed hard, although little noise is caused, "symptoms of asphyxis are quickly manifested, owing to the complete closure of the glottis through the immobility of the left cartilage." This is a valuable test at auctions, where horses cannot be galloped for "wind," as it is called. Dr. Flemming believes that a close stable aggravates roaring, and he quotes the saying of Admiral Rous to the effect that many roarers might be improved a stone if they were trained from an open shed, sheltered from wet and rain, kept warmly clothed, and always in the open air. It has been asserted over and over again that roaring is unknown at the Cape of Good Hope, and that if a roarer is taken out there he invariably recovers. According to the evidence collected by Dr. Fleming this statement, although not very far from the truth, is a little too sweeping.

We may add that the story of Belladrum's cure after his arrival at the Cape had been denied of late, although with what truth we unable to say. It is well known, again, that roaring is uncommon in most parts of India, but Dr. Fleming quotes one authority who says that it is very prevalent in Calcutta. Arabs are supposed to be nearly exempt from roaring, but this rule, it seems, is by no means universal, especially among the larger and coarser horses. If native Egyptian horses are seldom, if ever, roarers there are plenty of imported horses that are roarers in that country. A military veterinary surgeon, according to the author, stated that at the end of the Egyptian campaign of 1882, out of 185 horses under his care 33 had become roarers, 13 broken-winded, and several others more or less affected in their breathing. He does not hold the common theory that mares are less subject to it than geldings; but he admits that it is commonest among stallions. He appears to doubt whether the setting on of the head to the neck or any other external conformation has much to do with the disease, and he thinks it questionable whether it is ever produced by a bearing-rein. Like most authorities on the subject, he observes that ponies and very small horses are rarely afflicted by it, and this, he says, may go some way toward accounting for the comparative immunity of certain breeds of small size in southern and eastern countries, on the other hand, he points out that light cavalry more often becomes roarers than heavy artillery horses, and that, as a general rule, light, moderate-sized horses are more subject to the complaint than large and heavy ones.—[The Saturday Review.

REMARKS.

The intention of the Directors of this Association is to make this place a central point for racing in California. They recognize the fact, that in order to do so, they have got to give large purses in order to get first-class horses. Knowing they have as well-appointed grounds and as good a track as there is in California, having first-class stabling and the best Club House on any track in California, and plenty of fine grass for horses the whole year, and by dealing justly and fairly with the horsemen, we hope to receive their patronage. We are situated about half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles, which makes it an accessible point for the patronage of the whole State.

Being aware that the responsibility, to a great extent, of the Association, is not known outside of our own State, we herewith at ach a certificate, signed by the Banks of this City, as to the responsibility of the Association.

We, the undersigned, do certify that the Fresno Fair Grounds Association is perfectly responsible, and its statements are reliable:

LEWIS LEACH, President Farmer's Bank.
O. J. WOODWARD, President First National Bank.
LOUIS EINSTEIN, President Bank of Central California.
H. D. COLSON, President Fresno National Bank.
W. H. MCKENZIE, Cashier Fresno Loan & Savings Bank.

GUARANTEE PURSE - - - $2,000.

It will be seen by this that the nominator has almost a sure thing of getting his money back.

Any nominator failing to make payments when due forfeits all money paid in, and is held responsible for whole amount of entrance money. First payment must accompany nomination, or will be considered no entry.

The 2:30 Class previously advertised will be trotted the first day of our Fair—Tuesday, October 1, 1889—thus giving nominators a chance to trot the same horse in both races.

W. T. Withers, the well known Fairlawn breeder, had for several years been gradually failing in health, and despite several winters in Florida, died last Monday. He was popular, genial, kindly, and as a successful trotting horse breeder, his name was known all over the world. All Californians will recollect that it was from him that Silas Skinner, of Napa, purchased his celebrated stallion Alcona 730.

Says Fiat Justitia: Build your pedigrees upon the solid rock of truth and you need have no fear that they will turn out to be such exceedingly ephemeral structures that you may not "suffer the winds of heaven to visit them roughly." Nothing that is founded upon truth need have any fear of the fullest discussion. It is only shams and humbugs that shun the light of day. The sooner we get rid of these the better.

Valuable, the famous Harper mare, whose running qualities were leased to the Beverwyck stable, broke down completely last week and was shipped back to Kentucky. Mr. Harper has offered Campbell the running qualities of Annie Blackburn, a three-year-old, by Ten Broeck—Bell Knight, who performed well at Lexington, but was a disappointment at Louisville.

MEMO.
The Fast Trotting Stallion, the Best Son of Sidney.
Will make the Season of 1889 at the Oakland Trotting Park.

He was bred by G. Valensin at the Arno Stock Farm, Sacramento County, California; foaled spring of 1885.

PEDIGREE.

By Sidney.
First dam Flirt by Buccaneer.
Second dam Mohaska Belle by Flaxtail.
Third dam by John the Baptist.

Sidney by Santa Claus, 2:17½, his dam Sweetness, 2:21¼. Strathmore, the son of Santa Claus, has 22 of his get which have trotted in 2:30 or better, up to close of 1887, several having entered since, and Volunteer, the sire of Sweetness, has 26 in the same list. Buccaneer is the sire of Shamrock, two-year-old record 2:25, and of Flight, 2:29, and in him are combined the strains of Long Island Blackhawk, Vermont Blackhawk, and the dam of Ryedyk's Hambletonian. Flaxtail figures prominently in both pacing and trotting descendants, and is the sire of the dam of Apex, 2:26, Flight, 2:29, J. H. McCormack, 2:29, and Shamrock, 2:25.

PERFORMANCES.

Memo only trotted in public in his two-year-old form, obtaining a record of 2:49, though he was close to Grandee in a race on the Bay District Track, the second heat of which was made in 2:31¼, the first in 2:32. He exhibited phenomenal speed when three years old, and had it not been for a slight strain of his fore fetlock there is little question that he would have shown in public very close to the best record. On the Oakland track he was timed a mile in 2:20½, and frequently trotted quarters in from 32½ to 34 seconds.

DESCRIPTION.

He is nearly if not quite sixteen hands high, and of powerful build throughout. His color is a glossy black, with both fore-feet white and a touch of white on his off hind quarters. His disposition is all that could be desired, and his action superb.

TERMS: One hundred dollars the season.

WILKES PASHA.
STANDARD 2618.

Dark bay with white hind feet, 16¼ hands high, bred by R. P. Pepper, of South Elk Horn Farm, Frankfort, Kentucky, sired by Onward, 1411, record 2:25¾, trial 2:17. He by George Wilkes, 2:22, sire of sixty-five horses in the 2:30 list, ten of them with records below 2:20. First dam Fisher (dam of Clara Wilkes, 2:29¾, trial 2:25) by American Clay, 34, sire of Granville, 2:28; Maggie Briggs, 2:27; Ella Clay, 2:27½; and the dams of Executor, 2:24¾, Ranchero, 2:23¾; Judge Hawser, 2:21¾; Ambassador, 2:25, and nine others in 2:30; second dam by Wilson's Snow Storm, sire of Jim Irving, 2:2 , third dam by Paddie Burns, thoroughbred.

Onward, 1411, is one of the noted sires of to-day. In 1887 he placed seven performers in the 2:30 list, including Hourl three-year-old record 2:19¾; while in 1888 he still further sustains his reputation by adding nine of his sons and daughters to the list. Onward combines the blood of the two great trotting families, Hambletonian 10 and Mambrino Chief 11, and derives his speed inheritance direct through the greatest son of the one family, and the greatest daughter of the other.

Onward's dam was Dolly (the dam of Director, 2:17, and Thorndale, 2:22½), by Mambrino Chief. Dolly was one of the greatest speed-producing brood mares that ever lived. George Wilkes stands at the head of the list of sires of fast trotters with 65 performers with record of 2:30 or better, and the combination of these two great producers will breed on with absolute certainty.

WILKES PASHA will make the season of 1889 at the stables of the undersigned, at the Trancas Bridge, two miles north of Napa, on the Soda Spring Road.

TERMS,

For the season ending July 1, 1889, $35 in U. S. gold coin.

Alfalfa pasturage $1 per month; natural grass $2.50 per month.

Every attention and care will be given to mares, but no liabilities assumed for accidents or escapes.

GROVER CLAY,

Bay Stallion, bred by Hon. W. W. Traylor, San Francisco. Foaled 1883.

By ELECTIONEER.

First dam MAGGIE NORFOLK by NORFOLK, son of Lexington.
Second dam by BILLY CHEATHAM.
Third dam by DORSEY'S GOLDDUST.

GROVER C is a very handsome shade of bay, 15¾ hands high, and showing as much quality as a majority of thoroughbreds. He is as square-gaited a trotter as can be, and has shown a great deal of speed for the amount of handling. Has been worked very little, though he can show a thirty gait or better whenever called upon.

TERMS.

Fifty dollars the season, payable at time of service. Proper care will be taken, but no responsibility incurred for accidents or escapes. Mares will be pastured inside of the Oakland Trotting Park, which is especially safe, having two fences which give ample security against escape. There is a never-failing stream of water which runs through the field, and the food is good.

Season commencing first of January and ending the first of July.

This is the only son of Electioneer standing in Alameda County, and the high breeding on the side of his dam is a guarantee that his colts will inherit qualities already made famous through the mixture of Electioneer and Lexington blood. Ansel, 2:20, is from a Lexington mare, and Sunol's granddam, two-year-old record 2:18, was by Lexington, both Sunol and Ansel by Electioneer, Lexington the sire of Norfolk.

The Thoroughbred Stallion
Judge McKinstry,

Will make the Season of 1889, from March 1 to July 1, at San Felipe Rancho, near Gilroy.

PEDIGREE.

Foaled 1879, by Grinstead or Thad Stevens, dam Katy Pease; second dam Minnie Mansfield by Imp. Glencoe; third dam Allegrante by Imp. Young Truffle.

DESCRIPTION.

JUDGE MCKINSTRY is a bright bay with black points, 15¾ hands in height, of a conformation combining power and speed. His breeding is one that cannot be excelled. The families on both sides being noted for their gameness and fleetness. Speakin of JUDGE MCKINSTRY, Matt Storm, the well known trainer, says: "He is the fastest race-horse I ever saw on the Sacramento track. He has shown me trials that were marvelous, one especially of a mile and a quarter that was ahead of the present record." He was started in several races when not in condition to run, and even then developed an amount of speed that is characteristic of the noted families from which he descends. His performances are too well known to need repetition here. Good judges of horses state positively that there can be no doubt of his sire, as he is a perfect picture of Grinstead, but rule compels us to name both sires.

TERMS: $75 payable when the mare is moved from ranch, or, $100, with the usual privilege. Good pasturage, $3 per month. Mares at owners risk. All communications must be addressed to

OSSIDINE

Results obtained at the well-known Kalamazoo Farm.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Price $3.00 per Large Bottle,

Owner of Eole, St Saviour, Eolist, etc., says; I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

Never before were 100 live pigeons killed straightly in a similar match under same conditions, until the L. C. SMITH GUN was made and did it. Petaluma and Its Race Track.

BY GRIM.

During the "back end" of last week a visit was paid to the prosperous little city of Petaluma, the main object being to find out how badly Mr. Whitney's fast stallion Dawn, 2:19¼, had broken down. In the early portion of the week the various resorts patronized by horsemen were filled with rumors anent the breaking down of the chestnut horse, and one of the daily papers even went so far as to say that Lee Shaner was authority for the statement.

An early start enabled us to reach Petaluma shortly after 10 A. M., and as we jumped off the hotel bus in front of the "American," the first salutation we received was, "Hurry to the track; they are working out Dawn" In a few minutes we were at the scene of action, some half a dozen horses being hard at work.

A look around showed many familiar faces, some there out of curiosity, but the large majority watching horses that they were interested in. Among those better known were J. H. White, President of the P. C. T. H. B. A., Dr. I. M. Proctor, Dan Brown, of Volunteer fame, A. L. Whitney, owner of Dawn, Dr. Maclay, President of the California State Veterinary Society, Wilfred Page, Secretary of the P. C. T. H. B. A., Martin O'Reilly and L. McDonald.

Sid Sperry, Lee Shaner, Jim Corcoran, Steve Crandall, A. N. Burrell, Maddox, Frost and others, were driving the trotters and pacers, preparing young and old for the arduous work which many of them will have to undergo when they meet their rivals on the circuit. Of the seventy-five or a hundred who were present, at least one-half had watch in hand, intently inspecting the time made by the various performers in which an individual interest was felt. It would have been hard work indeed to keep a record of all the horses, for the quiet of the grand stand was constantly broken by remarks which were being jumbled in together:

"Up, and the quarter in—"

"2:56 is pretty good for a—"

"Running horse would have made his—"

"Five-eighths in 1:39, and the mare—"

"Never had a harness on before—"

And so it went, each one recording the doings of his favorite, so that it was impossible to accurately get the time made by any of them, but there are many that show signs of great speed.

An inspection was made of the stables, the first string being that of Lee Shaner's. It is only natural to suppose that the Petaluma favorite Dawn, was the first to be criticised. He had bandages on his legs, after a fairly fast mile, the first and last quarters being very speedy even for this great son of Nutwood, the middle half being done easy, still the mile had been compassed in 2:24. I must confess that Dawn's legs do not suit me, to use an English expression they look "dickey," if, however, he stands the preparation, look out for a fast stallion record. As yet he has shown no inclination to shirk his work, and owner and trainer have every confidence that he can be brought to the post in condition, and I only re-echo the sentiments of every Petaluma resident in saying, here's hoping that Dawn may appear on the day of the stallion race fit and well.

The next stall contains a yearling filly by Dawn, dam Pacheco, by Hubbard. She has a big open gait, a good head, splendid legs and Mr. Shaner says is very promising.

Little Joe is a light bay gelding by Junio, dam by a son of Whipple's Hambletonian. He is the property of Mr. Alfred Gonzales, of San Francisco, as are also Lot Slocum 2:17¼ and Kate Ewing both of whom are under the charge of Mr. Shaner. While looking over Slocum, the trainer was asked if he had any objections to meeting Favonia 2:15, in the free-for-all field, and his answer was "not at all, the more the merrier, and I firmly believe that Lot can beat her, at least we are willing to give her a trial and let the fastest horse win." Slocum has only received easy work as yet, 2:21½ being his fastest mile, but he has gone a quarter in 33 seconds, showing that he has lost none of his old time speed. Kate Ewing is also being gradually prepared for her work and has not been pushed, but she shows as speedy as ever.

A yearling colt by Sidney was much admired; his dam is by the Grand Moor. He is a pacer and no mistake, an eighth being covered at a 2:20 gait. Very fair for a California yearling.

Another very fine Sidney colt is out of Young Countess, by Sam Patchen, 2nd dam Countess, the dam of Dawn.

We next are shown a muscular youngster, two years old by Dawn, dam Mollie Offutt, by Gen. McClellan. This one is very promising and shows up well.

We now come to a yearling by a son of Carr's Mambrino, which should prove a good one, but he is a little undersized, and will want time to grow.

Mr. Shaner also has a pacer eight years old by Marin, dam by Abdallah, which is being conditioned, but this one will want a lot of work to earn oats.

I was particularly well pleased with a beautiful young stallion called Oaknut by Dawn, dam Miss Brown by Brown's Volunteer, 2:27; second dam Maggie Dale by Owen Dale. He is as pretty as a picture, and from all accounts will get a record as a first class producer. His trainer feels sorry that Oaknut had not been placed in his hands sooner, as he will require plenty of work in order to give him a low record, and the prospects are that he is very fast if properly handled. In Oaknut his owner has a trotter of which he may well feel proud.

Mr. C. C. Bemis, of San Francisco, has had sent to Mr. Shaner the seal brown stallion Lancelot. He is by Electioneer, out of Lizzie Harris by Comus; second dam by Arnold Harris. Comus is by Green's Bashaw, dam Topsey by Prophet, son of Hill's Black Hawk. Mr. Bemis has also had put in training Cora B. by Saladin. She moves in perfect style, and should give her sire one in the 30 list before being sent to winter quarters.

Cleveland is another of the get of Dawn, and tolerably fast for a yearling. This completes the list in Mr. Shaner's stable, but he informed me that the fast stallion Junio, 2:22, owned by Mr. Gonzales, would be sent up this week, and is probably there by this time. He is entered in the 2:20 stallion stakes, and will make some of the entries hustle to beat him.

The next stable was in charge of George Martin, but the reception was not a cheery one, as George had just received news of the death of Mr. E. Giddings, of San Rafael, who owned the horses under his management. In the first stall was a yearling named Alta, by Duke Almont, dam Queen by Hinman's Consul. He is a very large yearling, with plenty of bone and muscle, and can trot very fast. There are many who have seen this colt move that claim he had a mortgage on all the stakes in which he is entered, but the decease of the owner will make the entries void.

In the adjoining stall is found Edwin G. by Sidney, dam by Dashaway. He is a light chestnut, three years old, and moves just a trifle better than the average colt. He has made several quarters in 38, 39 and 40 seconds.

Captain Ben Harris, of San Francisco, has quite a number here under the supervision of John Blue, who is watching the colts improve from day to day, and consequently feels happy. In the first stall is Lorena, two-year-old, black filly, by Jim Mulvenna, 2:27¾, dam by Elmo.

We now come to Harry Mac by Alexander Button 1997, dam Young Rosedale, Harry being a full brother to Rosie Mac, 2:20½. Although five years old he has never been worked, but Mr. Blue fancies him very much.

A three-year-old, Clark Chief, by a son of Kismer, dam Lady Clark, is a very fine colt, with a lot of "go" in him.

Brentwood is a son of Dawn, dam Sweetwood by Nutwood. This colt is a perfect doll, kind, gentle and tractable, and if the inbreeding does not act as a bar to his speed, will be a good one.

Another engaging yearling is a filly called Starlight by Dawn, dam Lena Bowles by Ethan Allen Jr. These five should amply repay Captain Harris for the outlay he may be at, as they are all good individually, and loook like bread winners.

James Corcoran is a careful and attentive driver, who has handled many horses in his day, but he thinks he now has the best string ever placed in his care. Delmass is by Al Moon, dam Queen by Geo. M. Patchen Jr., and is the property of C. B. Harris, Esq., of Brentwood. He is a long, rangy colt, fine open gait, and has great individual merit.

Rollie H. is a beautiful stallion, four years old, by Anteeo, dam Humming Bird by Geo. M. Patchen Jr. This is a grand cross, as both families are great speed producers, and there surely can be no reason why Rollie H. should not be a great success in the stud. He is being worked quietly and gives satisfaction to his trainer, who predicts that he will be a success on the track. Mr. N. R. Harris of Brentwood is the fortunate owner of Rollie H.

The b g Cyrus next claimed attention, and although his dam is not traced, he evidently gets speed from somewhere, for there are very few green horses that can pace his gait. His sire Beecher has not secured much renown as yet, still Cyrus is likely to get a credit mark that will redound to the sire.

Julia is two years old and claims Electioneer as her great grandsire, being by a grandson of that noted horse. The dam of Julia is Miss Hellen by Gen. Benton, 2nd dam Nettie George by Norfolk. Walter E. Dean, of San Francisco, is the owner of Julia and has great hopes of her.

Mr. Whitney has a two-year-old bay filly by Dawn, dam by Hubbard, that has been very mixed gaited, but is now trotting as true as steel. She has not been named yet, but if her performances equal her promise, Mr. Whitney says he will name her on her first win.

Rowena is seven years old, by Echo, dam a thoroughbred mare. Mr. Corcoran says Rowena suits him very well, and is moving to his entire satisfaction. Mr. Pacheco, of Pacheco, is the owner of Rowena.

A two-year-old by Abbottsford is the counterpart of the old horse, the dam being Dolly by Carr's Mambrino. This beautiful horse is owned by J. M. Donohue.

John Harrison, of Petaluma, has in the care of Mr. Corcoran, a yearling named Dusk, by Dawn, dam by Arthurton; 2nd dam by Whipple's Hambletonian.

Whaler is a yearling bay colt by Whalebone, dam by Gen. McClellan, and claims as an owner Mr. Edwards, of Penn's Grove.

We were next shown a colt which is a grand trotter, but his blood lines would indicate that he might make a first-class runner. He is by Anti-Pat (whose dam is a thoroughbred mare) out of a thoroughbred mare. Anti-Pat was by Anteeo, whose grand dam was a thoroughbred.

Mr. Hinkle was seen driving his well-known stallion Whalebone, by Inca, dam by Henry Belmont, and it is no wonder that he thinks so well of his horse, for it would be hard to find one with more style. Whalebone had been away for some time, and we saw the old gentleman driving him for the first time in many weeks.

Mr. A. N. Burrell is the trainer and manager for J. H. White, the wealthy mine owner and farmer, who of late years has turned his attention to breeding the highest grade of trotters. In Hernanni, Mr. White has a magnificent son of Electioneer, but not wishing to restrict himself to the one line has also an unnamed four-year-old by Director, dam Helen Benton by Gen. Benton; second dam Nettie George by Norfolk. The boys around the stable call him Peter Jackson, and "Pete" answers to his name readily. He is a very level-headed stallion, but has been at the track such a short time that he is in no fix to show how fast he can go. The best mile so far this season for Peter is 2:44, which he made extremely easy, and there is every liklihood of Director having another in the 2:30 list before long.

Marco is another rare, good entire, by Elector, 2:21¼, dam by Gen. McClellan, his grandam being a full sister to St. Helena, 2:27½. He was brought to the track at the same time as the other horses, and has had but little opportunity to show what he can do, his best quarter being 39 seconds. Marco likes his work and is improving every day.

Princess is a bay mare, no white, by Hernanni, dam Susie by a son of Gen. McClellan. She has only been given a half mile at any speed, and the distance was negotiated in 1:23.

Dot is one of the largest and best two-year-olds that I have seen this season. She is by Hernanni, dam Kitty Almont by Tilton Almont. The mare is a perfect model, chestnut in color, and a conformation that will please the most fastidious. She has completed a mile in 3:15, the last half being finished in 1:21. She is well formed, splendidly muscled, and developed enough for a three-year-old.

In the next stall is Kitty Almont, dam of Dot. She is by Tilton Almont, dam by Hamlet, and it is easy seen on examining her where Dot gets her great power and muscle from. Kitty is put up on beautiful lines and has speed enough when she receives a careful preparation, to warrant her being considered fast. She has already shown a mile in 2:35.

Mountain Quail is a fine appearing filly by Hernanni, dam Annie by Gen. McClellan, 2d dam by imp. The Lawyer.

Alice is a four-year-old, full sister to Mountain Quail; she trotted last year in 2:34½, and has already shown a quarter in 35½ seconds.

Joe is a two-year-old bay colt by Marco, dam old Kate by Millimen's Bellfounder. He was sent a mile while we were present in 2:54, the last quarter being his fastest, in 40 seconds. Mr. White is confident that Joe can keep up his end against anything in Sonoma county.

Another of the get of Hernanni is Henrietta, whose dam is H. D. by Gen. McClellan. This mare has the same easy gait that made Nellie R so famous, and several persons made the remark that it was impossible to tell any difference between the two. This filly is very fast as her opponents will discover when they start against her.

John L. by Billy Lyle (he by Elector), is out of H. D. by Gen. McClellan. This colt was given to Mr. Burrell's son by Mr. White, and the young owner has entered him in the two-year-old stake at Petaluma.

Another by Marco in the same stable is Straight-Edge, dam Fanny by Gen. McClellan. He is a two year-old and shows strong pacing proclivities.

On leaving Mr. White's string we found a chance to shake hands with that old knight of the whip, Sid Sperry, as busy as ever, and waiting for the day when another Nellie R. will fall his way. He has strong hopes that the time is not far distant as he now has in his stable, a half brother to that noted trotter, called Dandy, by Gen. McClellan Jr., dam by Bayswater; he is a light chestnut, four years old, and has a good turn of speed. He is owned by Mr. Ferris, of Sonoma County.

Clara Z, an iron gray, is by Capri, dam by A. W. Richmond. Mr. Zane, of Healdsburg, owns this mare and if not disappointed, will win a lot of money with her this season.

The light chestnut mare, Lela was alluded to in the Breeder and Sportsman when she trotted at Napa, on the 8th of this month. She was then not far enough advanced in work to show her best form, but is coming too rapidly. She is by Rustic, dam by imp. Eclipse, and is owned by Mrs. Bliss, of Petaluma.

We now come to another Anteeo filly, this one being Rosie S. whose dam was by Sultan. Rosie is two years old and has the appearance of a racer. Mr. Sperry owns this promising youngster.

Kate Hinkle is a six-year-old mare by Grey McClellan, dam by King Philip, he by Whipple's Hambletonian. This mare belongs to Mr. Maynard, who is having her trained, not to race, but for a road horse, as he wants to drive a good one.

Mr. Sperry also owns another that looks well, Poco Tempo by Anteeo, dam by Joe Daniels, 2nd dam by The Moor.

Boss is the last in the stable. He is aged, but has all the vim of the more youthful ones. He is one of the get of Gladiator, and can show a clean pair of heels to many of the others at the track.

Still further along the immense line of stables Dan Misner has his quarters. Mr. De Turk's Anti Coolie is the principal one of the string, and is rapidly getting down to work. He is a very fast horse when at himself, and will be given a chance on the circuit to distinguish himself.

Mattie P. is a clever mare who had her first race of the year at Napa. Like many others who appeared there, she was not in condition for hard work and lost her race, but showed that she could do much better if given the necessary amount of exercise.

David S. is owned by Messrs. Misner and Waugh. He has a good open way of going which leads the partners to fancy his chances when pitted against those of his class.

A yearling by Dawn completes the Misner stable, but this well known driver has had applications from several other parties asking him to train for them.

Mr. A. J. Zane, of Healdsburg, has a few of his own which he is paying particular attention to, among them being his well known stallion Capri. This handsome horse is only seven years old, and already has quite a reputation, as Clara Z. made a yearling record of 3:05, and a two-year-old record of 2:45. She was started in five races, winning four of them. Captor, another of his get, was beaten as a yearling at Sacramento last fall in 2:58, but is showing up well this year. Capri is a beautiful dark grey, of exquisite proportions, his action and style being of a high order. He was bred by Daniel Cook, at the Cook Stock Farm. Capri is by James Lick, by Homer, dam Lady Budd by old Belmont.

Mr. Zane also has Coustall, a two-year-old colt by Capri, dam Fannie by A. W. Richmond. This colt is being prepared for the colt stakes, in several of which he is entered.

Captor, who is spoken of b fore, is a grand appearing three-year-old. He is by Capri, dam Fanny, being a full brother to Coustall.

The irrepressible James Maddox is attending to the wants of Ike Button's colt, Royal, by Bonanza. If this youngster is any criterion to go by, Dick Havey's stallion should have a full compliment of mares, as he is a perfect little beauty, and Maddox says can go very fast for a yearling. Royal is entered in the Vallejo Colt Stakes.

Topsey is a mare by Echo, dam Miss Brown by Volunteer. Dan Brown is the owner of this one, and claims she is as good as any man's.

James O'Neil, of Petaluma, has in Maddox's care the seal brown horse Frank O'Neil, who has made a trial of 2:30, and can lower that mark considerably. The trainer seems to feel sure he will come near touching the 20 mark. Frank O'Neil is by Whippleton, dam Flight by Eclipse.

Maddox also has one of his own, a two-year-old called Mystic, by Rustic, dam Nellie by Gen. McClellan, Jr., 2nd dam by Billy Cheatham. Mystic will not be sent for a record this year, as he is growing very rapidly; but even so, he moves quarters very handily in 40 seconds.

Mr. McDonald has a couple of good ones, which he is gently exercising. The first is Novato Chief, a four-year-old by Warwick, he by John Nelson, dam Mollie B. by Norfolk. Mr. McDonald has no trouble in sending this beautiful bay a quarter in 40 seconds, and it will not be long before he will show a much faster gait.

The other one is Lillie Mac, three years old, by Auctioneer Johnny, he by Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., dam by Belmont. She is very high behind, giving the spectator an idea of Sunol.

We now come to the last stable, presided over by Walter J. Frost. Gen. McPherson is seven years old, a dark chestnut, by Gen. McClellan, Jr., dam Susie R., who is a full sister to Nellie R. McPherson has never been trained, but Mr. Frost is going to see this year what the stallion can do.

Josephine is an old mare, eleven years of age, by Gen. McClellan, Jr., dam by Bay State Champion. She is a nicely proportioned mare, and shows up well on the track.

Minnie B. is the last, but far from being the least, of the large number of horses we have looked at. She is by Gen. McClellan, Jr., her dam an Ulster Chief mare. Minnie R. is extremely large and fat, and needs any quantity of work, but Mr. Frost will see that she gets all she requires.

In company with Dr. Maclay, a drive was taken through the handsome city and the various points of public interest pointed out. Petaluma is particularly fortunate in having so many manufactories, which give constant employment to a large number of hands. Flouring mills, woolen mills, an incubator factory, fruit packing firms and large wagon and cart factories go to make up the source from which thousands of dollars are expended weekly for wages.

In the great strife for wealth the town itself has not been forgotten, and beautiful buildings are everywhere visible.

The Masonic fraternity have erected a commodious building on one of the main streets at an expense of $40,000, and not to be outdone the Odd Fellows have had put up, an elegant iron front block. The banking institutions, of which there are several, are noted for their wealth and standing, being rated as high as those in many of the larger cities. The New City Hall is justly considered one of the finest municipal buildings in the interior of the State, and is a credit alike to both the architect and the enterprising citizens who have engineered the movement for a Town Hall. When speaking of the enterprise displayed by citizens I wish to say a word in commendation of those who have so successfully managed to have the track fixed up in decent shape. The new Board of Directors have worked with might and main to make the association grounds second to none in the State, and at present there is no one can find any fault with the Petaluma race track. A new covering has been put over the entire circuit, making it very fast, and it is the generally expressed opinion of those working horses there that it is the peer of any in the State. I sincely trust that Petaluma will fall to my share when Mr. Kerr makes out the "details" for our corps of reporters during the circuit, as the many warm friends I have in that little Burg, makes me wish that I could shake hands with them oftener than I do.

The Royal Commission on horse breeding in England has undertaken investigation of the diseases and defects in horses which are hereditary and impair the vitality and value of the horse to greater or less degree. The Royal College of Veterinary Surgeons has supplied a report upon the subject. In it the following are named as faults and diseases which unfit stallions and mare alike for stud purposes: roaring, whistling, side-bone, ring bone, curb, bone-spavin, bog-spavin, shivering, cataract and navicular disease. In certain cases these are also blemishes not to be disregarded; splint, stringhalt, contracted and week feet, bursal enlargements, such as wind-gall and thorough-pin. The soundest breeding standard is the object aimed at in the investigation.

A Visit to B. C. Holly's.

Situated some three miles from the old town of Vallejo, is the race track now owned by B. C. Holly, whose name is known to all breeders from the Atlantic to the Pacific, as the gentleman who lately sold Woodnut to Robert Steele, of Philadelphia, for $20,000, and is now sorry that the sale was consumated, for, if in this State his service fee for next season would be higher than that of any stallion that ever stood in California and his book would have been filled before the first of next January. However, be that as it may, the celebrated horse has gone, and Mr. Holly has done the next best thing, purchased the very best stallion procurable in the East.

Having been invited to take a look over the horses now being prepared for racing at the "Fair Grounds" (as Mr. Holly's place is called,) a call was made there a few days ago, by a representative of the Breeder and Sportsman. The proprietor was away on business in the southern portion of the State, but Mr. J. W. Walsh, the foreman, was kind enough to bring out the racers for inspection, and a treat it was to see the highly bred animals as one after another was brought from the stalls It is only natural to suppose that the head of the harem was the first to call for criticism. He occupies the large box stall which was occupied by Woodnut so long, but he seems just as much at home as the old tenant did. His hind legs were closely bandaged and a slight swelling was noticable just above the hoof, which Mr. Welsh explained was caused by an accident since his arrival, while doing service in the stud. A question as to his speed elicited the reply that Mr. Holly had only given him slow general work, with a few fast eighths and quarters the best of the latter being finished in 35½ seconds to an exercising cart. When it is considered that this has been accomplished in the midst of a heavy season, the time is most remarkable. Mr. Holly has made a good investment in buying Mountain Boy, for already applications are pouring in from all quarters of the State, asking for terms for next year. It will not be out of place to give the pedigree of this new acquisition, as many of our readers will be interested in knowing how this pearl of great price is bred, and also what has been produced from the blood that flows in his veins.

Br s Mountain Boy, 4841, bred by Charles Backman, Orange County, New York, foaled 1882, sire Kentucky Prince, dam Elsie, by Messenger Duroc; grandam Green Mountain Maid, 3d dam Shanghai Mary.

Speed Elements.—Kentucky Prince, 2470, trotted a public trial at Fleetwood in 2:28, and is sire of Guy 2:12, Spofford 2:18¾, Company, 2:19¾, Fred Folger, 2:20¼, Bayonne Prince 2:21¼, Cypress 2:22, Sweepstakes 2:24¼, Problem 2:24½, Compeer 2:25¾, Jersey Prince 2:27¾, and Stevie 2:29½; he also got the sire of J. Q. 2:17¼. Elise is full sister to Elaine 2:20 (dam of Norlaine 2:31½, fastest yearling record), Prospero 2:20, and Dame Trot 2:22. Clark Chief, 89, was sire of Croxie 2:19¼, Woodruff Chief 2:22½ at five years, Blanche Amory 2:26, John E. 2:28¾, and two others in the list. His blood is found higher in the records than that of any other son of Mambrino Chief, and appears in three trotters with records averaging 2:14. Messenger Duroc, 106, got Elaine 2:20, Prospero 2:20, Dame Trot 2:22, Charley Champlin 2:21¾, John D. 2:23½ Troublesome 2:25½, Star Duroc 2:25¾, Hogarth 2:26 at four years, and eight others in the list, and the dams of Spofford 2:18¾, Company 2:19¾, Femme Sole 2:20, Fallis 2:23, Invincible 2:23, and six others in the list. Green Mountain Maid was dam of Elaine 2:20, Prospero 2:20, Dame Trot 2:22, Mansfield 2:26, Storm, 2:26¾, Antonio 2:28¾, and Electioneer (37 in the list). Harry Clay, 45, record 2:29 in 1864, was sire of Surprise 2:26, Shawmut 2:26, and the famous Green Mountain Maid, dam of six in the 2:30 list. He also got the dams of St. Julien 2:11½, Bodine 2:19½, and other fast ones.

Where is there another stallion in the State that can show such speed lines? Now as to the individual himself; he is a beautiful brown, with fine head, combining strong marks of intelligence, a shapely neck, set in a sturdy pair of shoulders, great depth from the withers to the elbow, a splendid body, heavy quarters, and plenty of muscle. His bone might be a trifle heaver without detriment, but still, taken all in all, he will be eagerly sought after by those of California's breeders who wish a first class out cross for the choice mares, of which there are so many in this State.

Mr. Holly also has a number of other stallions at Hollywood Breeding Farm, from which the seeker after variety may take his choice:

Ch s Happy Prince, 16 hands, sire Bayonne Prince, 2:21¼, dam Belle Medium, full sister to Mott Medium, 2:29½, by Happy Medium, sire of Maxey Cobb, 2:13¼, with 39 others in the 2:30 list; second dam Belle Vernon, dam of Mott Medium, 2:29½, by General Mott, who showed a mile in 2:20; third dam by James K. Polk, thoroughbred; fourth dam by Highland Laddie; fifth dam Conover Mare.——Belle Medium is a rare combination of the breeding of Hambletonian, Princess, Sherman, Black Hawk, American Eclipse and Grey Highlander.

B c Kafir, sire Alcazar, 2:20½; first dam Flower Girl by Arthurton, sire of Arab, 2:15; second dam Flora, double team record 2:33, by General McClellan 144, sire of three in 2:30 list; third dam by Langford, he by Williamson's Belmont.

Ch c Woodside, sire Woodnut, 2:16½; first dam Veronica by Alcona 730; second dam Fontana by Almont 33; third dam Fannie Williams by Alexander's Abdallah 15

B c Headlight by Alcazar; first dam Young Signal by Arthurton, sire of Arab, 2:15; second dam Lady Signal, 2:35½, by Signal 3327; third dam by Bundy's Rob Roy.

B c Mart Boorhem by Sydney, 2:19½; first dam Towhead by Echo; this colt is a full brother to St. Nicholas, who showed a mile in 2:27½ at three years old.

After the stallions had been inspected, the queen of the pacing world, Yolo Maid, was brought out of her comfortable stall, and what a difference from last year; she has grown and expanded wonderfully since last seen on public exhibition, and is the beau ideal of what a great race horse should look like. The young man in charge of Yolo Maid has looked after her since she was first broken, and it was with every feeling of confidence that he said: "She can beat any on earth pacing, sir;" and the writer is inclined to believe the statement. That she has lost none of her last years speed is an assured fact, and probably no one but Mr. Hoppin, her late owner, and Mr. Holly, really know how fast she is this year. Her performances in the past are of too recent date to summarize them here, as all frequenters of the track have seen the marvelous mare in some of her victories.

San Diego, the converted pacer, came in for a due share of attention, and it can all be summed up in the few words, "he looks splendid." His pacing record is 2:22, and it will not surprise any one who saw him at Napa to hear that he makes a trotting record equally low. Mr. Holly has nursed him with great care, and deserves immeasurable credit for the success he has attained with this son of Victor. It is rather strange that Wallace's year book gives his dam as untraced, when it is known to almost every one that on the maternal side he is a descendant of Dietz's St. Clair.

Vesolia is an exceedingly fine bay filly, three years old, by Stamboul, dam Inez, by The Moor. At Stockton last year she gained a record of 2:29½. Mr. Holly started her at Napa, and although she won two heats in 2:31½ and 2:32½, she was not equal to a hard bruising race so early in the season, and was beaten out by Cora C. This promising young filly will be taken on the Montana circuit, when it is to be hoped that she will be better prepared to meet her competitors.

A very fine yearling by Woodnut, dam by Gen. Taylor, made an excellent appearance and is possessed of much speed.

Woodside is usually called the Skinner Colt, as he is owned by Mrs. Silas Skinner of Napa. He is by Woodnut, dam by Alcona Clay. He is the perfect image of his sire, and can beat three minutes all to pieces.

Wood Tick, by Woodnut, is another of the get of that celebrated sire, and moves with splendid gait, going very free and easy.

Running in a paddock by himself was a yearling called Vernon, by Mount Vernon, 2:21, dam Brown Bess, by Clifden, son of Iowa Tuckahoe, 2nd dam Poughkeepsie Girl, by Hambletonian 10. It was worth all the journey to see this little one start off at a good square trot when a noise was made behind him. A beautiful and fast colt, he is bound to make his mark, bar accident.

From the stables a walk was taken to the large enclosure where the brood mares are kept, and the very first to come forward to meet the visitors was Lisette, four years old, by Abdallah Wilkes, 7562, dam Musette, by Startle, 2:15. She is a very dark brown, two white feet, star in forehead, and stands 15¼ hands in height, Lisette was purchased at one of the Eastern sales by Mr. Holly, and has been bred to Mountain Boy.

Economy, by Echo, has a suckling foal at her side by Woodnut.

There are quite a number of Mr. Holly's mares in the large field, representing the get of Gus, Albert W., St. Elmo, Echo, Geo. M. Patchen Jr., and Mambrino Eclipse, in addition to the thoroughbreds: Ninena, by Jim Brown, dam Nannie Hubbard, has a good foal at her side by Ironclad; Fusilade's Last has been bred to Sid. The last of the colts worthy of notice is "John Mackey." He is now a yearling and can show a good gait, although the viciousness of his family deters many from examining his legs, which are rather slim for a trotter, and it must be confessed that his feet are much smaller than those usually seen on the trained youngsters. When the dogs bark at him he starts off at a 2:40 clip and soon distances his pursuers. This trotter is a mule. Next week we will tell what was seen at Capt. Drakes' farm, the home of old Admiral.

Shoeing Horses.

Advice That Every Blacksmith Should Carefully Follow.

Year by year the number of farmers who do their own blacksmithing, or at least their horse shoeing, increases. As the safety and comfort of the horse are the two main objects to be gained by shoeing, the following extracts from an article by Allan Eric, in the Ploughman, will be suggestive to those of our readers who personally shoe their horses, or wish to know that it is done rightly by their blacksmith. He thinks that the ordinary system of horse shoeing is rude and irrational, and is the main cause of most lameness, and of the majority of falls in riding and driving. Chief among its faults are the attempts to fit the foot to the shoe, instead of the shoe to the foot. After the cautious removal of the old shoe, the crust on which it rests generally requires to be pared down with a parer or drawing knife, and its edge afterward rounded with a rasp. Any ragged portions of the frog should also be taken off; and this, I believe, should include all of the allowable paring or dressing of the horse's foot.

The horny wall intended as a covering and protection of the sensitive parts beneath; the tough, elastic frog, an insensible pad which obviates concussion, and preserves the foot wide and free from contraction; the bars, an involution of the crust, which helps it to support weight and give it lateral support, are all too valuable and necessary to be ruthlessly cut away, and in all ordinary cases should be scrupulously preserved from both knife and rasp. For sound, healthy feet treated as advised, a plain shoe is preferable for saddle or harness horses. The web need not exceed three-fourths of an inch, and should fit the crust closely and accurately all the way round to the heels, where its inner edge will rest upon the strong and uncut bars. Nowhere should there be any overlapping, for it only renders the shoe more apt to cut the opposite limb, and be torn off on heavy ground. To lessen the chances of tripping, and make the shoe wear equally, it should for the fore feet be turned up slightly, and its ground surface hollowed out a little at the toe, so as to present the appearance of an ordinary shoe which has been worn for a fortnight or three weeks, and which, as everyone knows, is thereby rendered more safe and comfortable. By turning up at the toe, these advantages are secured at once. For saddle or light harness work, three nails on the out and two on the inside will firmly secure any well-made, well-fitting shoe.

The nail holes should always be counter sunk; by this I mean carefully and sufficiently counter-sunk, and be nearly in the center of the web, and pass straight through it, thus giving the nails a firmer hold of the firm, unrasped crust. The points of the nails, when driven home, should be broken over and laid down with the hammer, but not touched with the rasp. The rasping of the crust, which blacksmiths fondly regard as their finishing stroke, is very injurious, as it removes the unctuous, protected portions of the crust, and renders it weak, brittle and liable to crack. Shoes should be replaced every three weeks, or month at the longest.

In shoeing the hind feet the outside web should be turned slightly down behind, while to give an equal bearing the inside heel should be thickened. For heavy draught, both hind and fore shoes should have moderate tips and heels not too prominent, as of course these enable the horse to exert his full power without much risk of slipping. Instead of the five nails used for the lighter horse seven or eight should be used in this case.—(Horse and Stable.)

BASE BALL.

At the Haight St. grounds on Saturday, the San Franciscos and Stocktons played a fairly good game for two innings, and then gave as poor an exhibition as has been seen on the grounds this year.

Neither pitcher was very effective, the San Franciscos getting 12 safe hits off Baker, and the Stocktons 13 off Meegan's delivery. Van Court umpired the game and his decisions were very unsatisfactory to the majority of those present. The San Franciscos had the best of the game throughout, defeating their opponents by a score of 15 to 6.

The San Franciscos added another victory to their score on Sunday, defeating the Sacramentos by a score of 15 to 8. Ziegler, Sacramento's new twerler, was away off, judging from his performance of last week, and the San Franciscos found no difficulty in batting his delivery when they wished. Perrier and Donahue did the best playing for the home team, and Powers distinguished himself by the amount of kicking he did. Shea led the battery for the home team, and Krehmeyer did some good stroke work for the Sacramentos. The score:—

Colored Ball Players.

The Enterprise Club, composed of the colored employes of the Palace Hotel, turned out Sunday and played a hotly contested game at the Center-Street grounds, Oakland, Cal. Few errors were made, and the San Franciscos seemed to have the best of the game, but did not win on account of the rank decisions of the umpire, all of which favored the Oakland players, who won by a score of 10 to 5.

A Pacific Coast Association.

In answer to the letter sent out to prominent horsemen, Re, a Pacific Coast Association, the following letters have been received in reply:

CHICO, June 24, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Your circular letter of the 19th is at hand. I desire simply to say that in my opinion, if those interested on the Pacific Slope can act unitedly, we would be better served by having a society of our own. I have been connected with the association at this place for twelve years, and have not always been satisfied with the treatment which we received from Hartford, and am in favor of having a meeting sometime this fall or winter, that the matter may be intelligently discussed. I am truly yours,

C. C. MASON.

NAPA, CAL., June 24th, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In my opinion the formation of a Pacific Coast Trotting Association, on the same plan as the National and the American Trotting Associations, is practicable and advisable. Respectfully,

L. L. JAMES,
President Solano and Napa Agricultural Association.

LOS ANGELES, June 22, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Yours of the 19th concerning a Pacific Coast Trotting Association at hand. I have had pleasant business relations with both of the Eastern Associations, but I must say, that this Coast derives less benefit, with greater expense since the formation of the new association than before, purely owing to the failure of each to honor or enforce the penalties of the other.

A Coast association that will establish a rule agreeing to sustain the action of all Eastern trotting and racing associations, will surely be a success. An important after-consideration will be the membership of the Pacific Blood Horse Association. Count on me to further a Coast association every time. It is economy. Yours,

E. A. DECAMP.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., June 21, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Your circular letter under date of June 19th, asking for the personal opinion of all interested in the subject of forming a Pacific Coast Trotting Association on the same plan as the National and American Trotting Associations, has been received.

In answer thereto would say, that at one time I gave this subject considerable attention, and, at first thought, concluded it was both proper and feasible that we should have a distinct organization on this coast. I believe I wrote an article for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN on this subject, and was enthusiastically in favor of such an organization, and straightway began to build up hopes.

The sources for its support was the first question at issue. I referred to a list of associations in California, Oregon and Nevada, and found there was but twenty-eight in these States that had taken membership in the National (at that time the National was the only trotting association in existence).

The assessments of these members were classified at from $25 to $150 each; of the latter amount there was but one paid that. A fair average would probably have been $75, making an income from assessments $980 per annum. In addition to this each member was charged $6 for the necessary equipments, embracing judges and member's books, copies of rules, etc., making $168, or say a total—providing all would join—of $1,148 per annum to maintain the institution; the only other probable resource would be fines and penalties, which you know would be very small for this number of members.

From this income must be paid the salary of secretary, office rent and printing. We all know an organization of this kind would require the constant attendance of an official that is thorough in every way, otherwise any laxity on his part would ruin the object of the association. In my opinion the list of membership that an organization of this kind would be likely to get, would not warrant the employment of a competent officer, that should be peculiarly fitted for this position, one that would see to the enforcement of all rules and to the proper keeping of records, etc.

If this were not done, and by inattention, or any other cause, the records were once found incorrect, would it not cast a reflection upon our stock and cause us to be charged with "running a side show" for the benefit of the few, by those whom we expect to sell our produce?

As the custom now prevails, we have a Court of Appeals, presided over by a tribunal who have no particular locality at heart, and are prepared to pass upon all questions without regard to section or state, and as it is the hope of our breeders to supply the nation, let us maintain and support a national tribunal to pass upon our actions and the records.

Local organizations are proper enough upon some subjects, but upon this question, which to my mind concerns the breeding interests of the United States, I say, let us maintain a principal organization, and let that be a national one.

Some will, no doubt, say this organization could be managed by some one engaged in other business, but I have always found complicated duties akin to the "Jack of all trades" proposition.

Organize, if you will, an association open to all, and strive for membership throughout the United States, but I am opposed to sectionalism upon a national issue, and were I a breeder of trotters, should certainly want California set in the galaxy of stars, and there to be the most brilliant one.

Respectfully,
EDWIN F. SMITH.

CHICO, CAL., June 24, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Replying to your circular letter of the 19th concerning the organization of a Pacific Coast Trotting Association, I will say on behalf of this Association, that while I have not had an opportunity to obtain the views of all the Directors, those I have consulted are unanimous in their endorsement of the scheme, and I have no doubt the others hold the same views.

The benefits to be derived are innumerable. The principal, and one that should be conclusive being, that there might be an opportunity sometime during the natural life of a Board of Directors, to get a settlement with the head office, provided it be located at some point where a personal interview would be rendered practicable.

The situation as it now stands, with two associations and the California tracks divided about equally between the two, affords little, if any, protection to the subscribers to either.

We belong to the National, and horses and owners suspended on this track are racing over every American track in the State, and we are powerless to help ourselves. I presume the reverse of this is the case in many instances.

Yours truly,
JO. D. SPROUL.
Secretary 3rd Dist. Agl. Asso.

SAN FRANCISCO, June 24, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Answering your inquiry as to my views of the subject of forming a Pacific Coast Trotting Association, I would say that such an association might be of some advantage to the trotting interest of the Pacific Coast, provided the different district associations west of the Rocky Mountains would give it their support, and men could be enlisted who were competent and willing to discharge the duties of the several offices.

At the present time the Pacific District Board of the National Trotting Association is disposing of all cases as promptly and satisfactorily as would be done by the proposed new association, but it is claimed that since the formation in the East of the American Trotting Association, a divided interest and conflict of authority prevails, which might be avoided as far as we are concerned, if the Pacific Coast would unite and form a separate association for their own government.

Without united and harmonious action on the part of the district associations, the conflict would be only increased instead of diminished. The success of the new association will depend upon a unity of the districts, a competent secretary and a liberal support.

At present there are twenty-three district associations west of the Rocky Mountains members of the National Trotting Association to-wit, nineteen from California, two from Nevada, one from Oregon and one from Washington Territory. I do not know how many, if any, from this coast belong to the American Trotting Association.

The whole expense of supporting a Pacific Coast Trotting Association must be borne by the members from the Pacific Coast, and it will be quite an important factor to know what it will cost to equip and run a separate association; for, unless we are determined to run it well, it should not be undertaken.

My opinion is that to secure good service and management, the cost of membership will be no less than it is at present, but we would be free from the conflict of the Eastern Associations, and the prospect of increase of the number of district associations on the Pacific Coast might in time warrant our being separate and independent.

The National Association has acquired an authority and power over matters within their jurisdiction which is supreme, and this authority is firmly and fairly exercised. It was incorporated by an Act of the State of Connecticut, giving it power to make laws and regulations, not inconsistent with the laws of the State, and to enforce them by fines and penalties, which it shall have the right to collect and enforce by suit, or by suspension or expulsion. Its management is intrusted to men of experience and influence, and its rules have become the law of the trotting world.

It is an important question to consider whether we shall form a local organization and become responsible for its management or remain with the old association and strengthen its National character by giving it our support.

I should like to see the National and American Trotting Associations amalgated into one. One association well managed, with a National reputation, would be more to the advantage of the trotting interest than a division of strength and conflict of authority.

If the association on the Pacific Coast are resolved to have a separate organization, they must determine to meet the expense and enter into the spirit and responsibility of its management with sufficient zeal and interest to insure its success. Yours truly,

N. T. SMITH.

Ergotism.

At the California State Veterinary Association meeting a very interesting lecture on the above subject was read by Dr. Spencer, of San Jose, and as there has lately been a good deal of discussion about ergot and the results therefrom we print the article in full, especially as it contains a variety of valuable information from such an eminent practical authority as the Doctor.

Mr. President and Gentlemen:

Those members who were present at the last meeting will undoubtedly remember that I made a few remarks bearing upon the disease known as "Ergotism." Our President evidently deemed the subject of interest, and requested that I introduce it at our next meeting, and while it affords me great pleasure to comply with his request, I sincerely wish it had fallen into abler hands. Any failure on my part I trust you will attribute rather to the lack of ability than to want of inclination, or opportunity to acquire the information.

The term "Ergotism" has been applied to the poisonous effects of ergot in rye.

History tells us that this affection made its appearance at a very early date, and from time to time it has manifested itself in epidemics since the days of Claudius Galinus, commonly called Galen, and who was celebrated as a physician in Rome about A. D. 160.

In A. D. 992 there was a wide spread and deadly epidemic in France. Two years later it again appeared in the same territory, and in 1041 it was prevalent in England, France and Germany. Then forty-eight years later, in 1089, it was rife throughout the Continent, and especially was it prevalent in the western parts of Lorraine, where many persons (so says an old author) became putrid in consequence of their inward parts being consumed by St. Anthony's fire. Their limbs were rotten and became black, like coal. They either perished miserably or, deprived of their putrid hands and feet, were reserved for a miserable life. Moreover, many cripples were affected with contraction of the sinews (nervorum contractio). After an absence of ten years, and covering a period of more than a century, it was more or less prevalent in France and Spain. In 1598, in Germany, and at numerous dates from 1694 till 1754 it appeared in various countries in Europe.

In America reference is made to it about 1820; and in March, 1884, you may remember there was an outbreak of it among the cattle, near Neosho Falls, Kansas, which created not a little excitement in its having been at first pronounced foot and mouth disease by a number of veterinarians, and confidence was not re-established until extended investigations were made by the Bureau of Animal Industry, through Dr. Salmon, its veterinary in chief.

NATURE AND ACTION OF ERGOT.

The substance known as ergot is one of the stages in the growth and maturity of a fungus, which has been named Claviceps purpurea, and the term ergot was applied to it by the French from its fancied resemblance to the spur of a cock. The first botanical writer who notices ergot is Lonicerus. Chambers says it begins to show itself on the germen of grasses when it is young. Different parts of the flower assume a mildewed appearance and become covered with a white coating composed of a multitude of spore-like bodies mixed with delicate cobweb-like filaments; a sweet fluid, at first limpid, afterwards viscid and yellowish, is exuded; the anthers and stigmas are cemented together; the ovule swells till it far exceeds the size of the natural seed, bursts its ligaments, is enlongated, and is often curved, sometimes carrying on its apex a cap formed of the stigmas and anthers agglutinated, and assumes a gray, brown, purple and finally a black color, as the viscid exudation dries and hardens. The structure differs very much from that of the properly developed seed. The qualities are not less different; nearly one-half of the whole substance consists of fungin; and the cells contain, instead of starch globules, a fixed oil (oil of ergot). Ergot appears to have been first discovered on rye, in which it is very conspicuous for the large size it attains, though it very frequently makes its appearance on other cereals, particularly on barley, wheat and maize. It was supposed to be a disease occasioned by wet seasons or other climatic causes, but it is now fully determined to be due to the presence of the mycelium of a fungus, the spores of which may be carried to the flower through the juices of the plant, for there is reason to believe that ergot in a field of grain may be produced by infected seed; and this is undoubtedly the reason that the fields of which I shall presently speak are affected year after year.

THE ACTION OF ERGOT ON THE ANIMAL BODY.

According to Diez, the principal effects of poisonous doses of ergot are in the lower animals profuse salivation, vomiting, dilation of the pupils, hurried breathing, frequent pulse, cries, trembling, staggering, paraplegia, sometimes diarrhoea, sometimes constipation, thirst, convulsions and death.

Mr. S. A. Wright, in a series of experiments (Edinburgh Medical and Surgical Journal) noted when the medicine was given by the mouth symptoms similar to those just spoken of, the paralysis was much more marked than the spasms. Late in the poisoning the heart's action became irregular and intermittant, and the pulsations, which had been rapid, grew slow and feeble. In some cases special senses seemed to be destroyed, and coldness of the surface was a marked symptom.

Fleming, in his Manual of Veterinary Science and Police, says: "The ergot of rye, wheat, etc., has given rise to extensive disease in man, animals and birds, marked by convulsions, paralysis, dry gangrene of the limbs, loss of hair and horn, and other strange phenomena."

The above summary of the general symptoms caused by poisonous doses of ergot show that the phenomena are mainly paralytic in their nature, and, on the whole, it is probable that the chief action of the drug is upon the nerve centers. Now, Mr. President and gentlemen, as it would occupy too much of your valuable time for me to give you a description of the many experiments and observations that have been made with this drug, both in this and other countries, I will proceed to give you a concise report of the disease as brought under my notice in Santa Clara County, this State.

The animals that I have been consulted about have been fed on hay grown on a ranch near Santa Clara. Said ranch is on rather high ground, the soil being of that rich black character known in this country as adobe. It is extremely productive, and in no way distinctive from adjacent places, where a superior quality of hay has been produced annually for more than a quarter of a century, and the use of which has never proved deleterious to horses, cattle, sheep or hogs; but when forced to eat the hay grown on the ranch in question the loss of hoofs, horns, manes and tails is by no means an unusual occurrence—horses and even cows exhibiting all the symptoms of acute Laminitis and shedding, as before stated, their hoofs or horns, as the case may be.

The following symptoms are as exhibited by the animals that came under my observation: Tenderness and heat in the feet; swelling at the coronet; great disinclination to move; temperature considerably elevated for the first few days, but gradually subsiding; secretions normal; appetite voracious. At the expiration of a week or ten days the lameness somewhat subsides and remains so until immediately before casting the hoof, when the animal can scarcely be induced to move. However, as soon as the old horn is cast they at once assume their natural vigor. In milch cows the secretion of milk is usually suspended.

There is undoubtedly a great deal of difference in these symptoms as compared with those observed by Prof. Salmon during the outbreak in Kansas; but we must not forget that the disease manifested itself there at a time when the weather was very cold, and I think cold has a tendency to aggravate the symptoms. Further, we must remember that insufficient doses or a poor quality of the agent in question would modify the symptoms very much.

The treatment I have found most beneficial is a radical change of diet, fomentations of the feet for the purpose of allaying the primary inflammation, then blistering the coronets to stimulate the growth of new horn.

In the course of my experience I have never known an animal to be permanently injured by the malady. On the contrary, I know of several horses that were accidentally ergotised by the use of the hay in question, who had been sufferers from contracted feet and corns, and who, when recovered from the effects of the ergoted hay, had very good and well-shaped feet. And I think that perhaps the fodder that has proved so baneful to so many innocent victims might be turned to good account in the treatment of seedy-toe and other diseases afflicting the horny structure. This is a point I hope will be discussed.

Before closing I wish to relate an instance of a mare with foal in utero. The mare became afflicted with ergotism, but carried her foal full time. When born, however, it was without any horny covering to the feet, except a narrow band of apparent new growth at the coronets. The foal lived and thrived for a few days, but the owner, thinking him a helpless case, destroyed him. This I regret very much, as I think the growth of horn over the apparently withered parts would have proved interesting and instructive.

Horses and Accomplishments.

There was solid sense in the remarks of the farmer who said that his experience had taught him that he could raise a good horse at as little cost as he could raise good cattle, good sheep, good swine, and he did not intend to raise any of either kind unless the good—the best he could breed from. He estimated his live stock by kinds, by expense of raising, and by profit from sales. He could get so much per pound for his cattle, for his sheep and for his hogs. With his horses he had learned that he could get twice and quadruple per pound, for his ordinary quality, and that for an extraordinary colt or horse he could name no figure, because all estimated figures had been surpassed at sales. There is no lottery in breeding, as values go. Yet there is the more attractive quality of the lottery in breeding horses. One splendid colt, the product of intelligent breeding, may enrich the breeder. The farmer who breeds a favorite and valuable mare to a noble and famous sire—no matter as to the cost—finds himself the happy owner of a colt who shall prove a beater of records. That colt makes the farmer a rich man, should he sell; a richer and more prideful man should he refuse to sell and put the horse in proper hands, for the turf or for the stud, or both. Pedigree, breeding and speed are the commanding qualities. The limit cannot be told in value. But this limit is itself a fortune to the breeder, beyond the wealth reckoned as a competency forty years ago. Values have advanced with other progress in everything desirable by wealth.

Doubtless the Spokane, now the most famous of the American racing turf, could have been bought as a colt for less hundreds of dollars than he now can command in tens of thousands of dollars. He is the beater of great Proctor Knott, the pride of Kentucky, the favorite of the foremost in rank of the American turf. It is phenomenal, yet it is possible to every intelligent breeder in the country, whether he reckons his acres by thousands or by tens. The richest may not breed the champion colt to prove the world-beater. Upon some secluded, small farm the colt may be bred, if the farmer is intelligent and breeds his horses on an intelligent system. His horse at once makes the farmer rich and famous. The winning of the capital prize in the lottery cannot so much exalt and honor him. His intelligence, and not his luck—which the idiot may have—has enriched and celebrated him. He becomes great because he has manifested wisdom in his management.

California now possesses the finest breeding farms in the United States—in thoroughbreds—runners and trotters. The best blood of England has its representatives here for the running turf; no country can equal our own in the quality of trotters, and with Electioneer and Wilkes, Stamboul, and the blood of Clay, Patchen, Mambrino, Abdallah, and the mighty Hambletonians, the world is safely challenged on this side. Yet the California farmer can secure any of this regnant blood to sire his chosen mare at much less cost than their richer brethren in the East can secure breeding to the mediocre class. Here is opportunity. It is exceptionable. Why go to Kentucky for a sire when in the great annual sales in New York, the metropolis of horse sales—as it is of finance, commerce, enterprise and fashion—the California bred horses and cattle oversell any from Kentucky? Charity begins at home; why should not judgment and the elements of business—which lead to the source of supply of all countries, as exampled in their contributions to those upon whom charity comes as the dew from heaven descends upon the craving earth—likewise have root at home? This coast is producing the best horses. Shall the generations now coming into activity recede and produce inferior grades of men? It is the repetition in this nineteenth century of the ancient puzzle of Parmenides, of Achilles and the tortoise—if Achilles run ten times as fast as the tortoise, yet as the tortoise has the start, Achilles can never overtake him. Ergo: because the Atlantic had more than two hundred years the start of the Pacific, the people of the greatest ocean of the world, of the greatest vigor of this Western shore, can never overtake or excel the people of that smaller ocean, of their slower methods.

It was the gold dug out of California which gave impetus to the energies of the Atlantic. They were the pick of the Atlantic, bravely adventuring to the Pacific, who dug and broad scattered this illimitable wealth of gold. Enterprise blossomed and the fruits are still in reaping. It was a California company of mighty enterprise who banded the continent with iron rails and made transportation expeditious—from the space of months to the space of days. They are California breeding farms which are sending to the East, the winners of the turf. There are domains yet to conquer. In agriculture these have been conquered. In the breeding of superior horses, the end is not yet. It is the pleasant contemplation of every California farmer that it is within his means and province to produce the world-beater in horses. To this determination the farmers of California should come. There is great profit in it; there is State pride; there is the pride of the crowning breeder. It is in the line of horses and accomplishments. In "Eureka!" every California breeder can imagine himself the modern Archimedes.

What the Sidneys are Doing.

It is just four years ago since the first of Sidney's progeny were foaled, and there were seventeen of them to make a name for their sire if possible. That he has demonstrated his ability to produce speed goes without saying, as Adonis and Gold Leaf made a reputation for him last year that enhanced the price of the colts sold by Mr. Valensin at the New York combination sale, held in the early part of this year. Asking Mr. Rowen a few days ago how the horses at the Oakland track were doing, he spoke very flatteringly of Mr. Dietz's pair. One is a pacer called Longworth, who gives every indication of being as fast as the balance of the family. As yet he has been given but little work, still Johnston, the driver, has taken him a quarter in 34 seconds, and an eighth in 15 seconds. As a three-year old Mr. Rowen drove him a full mile in 2:25, and feels confident that with any sort of fair luck he will make a mark far below 2:20. Longworth is by Sidney, dam Grey Dale by American Boy Jr. Grey Dale is the dam of Silver Threads.

The other four-year-old belonging to Mr. Dietz is Ringwood by Sidney, dam Alma by Dashaway. Last Saturday Johnston trotted Ringwood a first mile in 2:31 and a second one in 2:26¼, the middle half being completed in 1:12. These two, in conjunction with Adonis, 2:14¼, Gold Leaf, 2:15, Memo, trial 2:20½, St. Nicholas, trial half mile 1:10, and Sister V., whom no one but Mr. Goldsmith knows how fast she can go, not forgetting Sid Julien and Highlander, makes a showing for Sidney's first foals that any one might well feel proud of. There is every reason to predict that at least one-half of his get of 1885 will be in the 2:30 list before the end of this season.

San Simeon Breeding Farm.

Although Senator Hearst has been indirectly connected with the turf for years having owned Jim Brown, King Fox and other well known performers, they were always run in J. B. Haggin's name, until about two years ago when Mr. Hearst started out on his own account. One of his first purchases was Surinam who won several good races in the Hearst colors at the Blood Horse Meeting last spring, winding up his three-year-old career by winning a handicap sweepstakes at Monmouth Park in August. Gorgo was leased from Senator Stanford and though she was unlucky, picked up two good races, one at Monmouth and one at Sheepshead Bay during the season. This year Senator Hearst's two-year-olds will have to do most of the bread-winning, as Gorgo is lame, having wrenched her shoulder in the preliminary canter last Thursday week, and according to later accounts will probably not race again. The two-year-olds are said to be wonderfully smart and considering the prices paid for them, especially those bought at the Haggin sale, they ought to turn out a clinker or two among them. King Thomas the high priced brother to King Fox, is said to be as good as his celebrated brother was, if so the St. Blaise's will have to look out.

The Senator's breeding Farm is in San Luis Obispo County. For several years Mr. Hearst has had a large ranch of 50,000 acres at San Simeon called Piedra Blanco, formerly the property of the Pachecos. Cattle raising and dairying were the principal uses to which the land was put, but gradually a few thoroughbred mares were sent down, and then Jim Brown (Foster—Flush) took up his residence as lord of the harem, and more mares were procured at the Winters and Hutchinson sale. At the former Nellie Collier, Laura Winston (dam of Snowdrop), Chestnut Belle, Sister to Lottery, Abbie W. (or Abbey as she is called in the stud book); at the latter Vixen, by Saxon, dam Coquette by Lexington, Mercedes, by Lodi, and Mistletoe by Thad Stevens, were obtained. Imp. Fun (Fiddler—Amalia) was bought from Senator Stanford, and half a dozen Australian fillies were imported. With this good foundation Senator Hearst has a splendid prospect of success as a breeder.

A year ago last spring the broodmares and Jim Brown were removed to another ranch of Mr. Hearst's, about fourteen miles further down the coast, where a fine lot of stables, loose boxes, etc., had been erected, and about 1,500 acres of land fenced in and prepared for their reception. At the same time imported Cheviot, the property of Dr. Ross, was leased for a term of years to join Brown, and this magnificent brother to Sir Modred will undoubtedly stamp his progeny with true racing instinct. Already several of his get have won in Australia, and his fame has increased so much that Palo Alto sent six mares to him.

The ranch itself is nicely situated in a wide canyon about a mile from the road, with plenty of running water and good feed, the only drawback being the fog which sweeps in every afternoon. At San Simeon there is a very good three-quarter mile track, with stabling for twenty horses. All good, roomy box stalls removed from the Hacienda, and there the colts will be educated for their future work.

Better Skill of Trainers and Drivers.

Written for the Breeder and Sportsman.

In the breeding and management of trotting horses there has been marked and very great improvement during the last half century! Likewise has there been notable and very great improvement in the skill, knowledge and tact of the trainers and drivers of trotters, in the same period. It used to be the custom to train and race trotters under the saddle, the same as running horses. That practice has long been discarded as an error in bringing the trotter to his best speed and performance. The old sulky was, in comparison with the sulky of this day, a coarse, heavy and clumsy vehicle. Similarly was the old wagon for track use. The same can be said of the harness and all else—the training, the management in the stables and upon the track, and the rules of racing. The trotter could scarcely be said to be bred—he was discovered. The skilled trainer was not known or expected. The riders and drivers were merely clever in the art, and depended upon their tact for every occasion, with little care for active, systematic course towards thorough accomplishment. Driving has now advanced to the condition of a profession—as jockeying is in England. Wells, Archer, Barrett and Watts, famous among English riders, have elevated jockeying to the degree of high art—themselves as honorable and as intelligent in it as the professors of the learned professional rate in public estimation. In this country, Murphy and Garrison, McLaughlin and Fitzpatrick and others have won their promotion to fully equal rank as riders. The drivers of trotters enjoy still more favored position on the American turf.

Fifty years ago the breeding of trotters was followed by only a very few in the Northern States; in Vermont and New York mostly, and the Morgan and Blackhawk stock was most favored. In the South and West turf sports were confined to running horses, and care was devoted only to the breeding of racers from English imported lines. Trotters were not bred. They were discovered as roadsters to trot well, to possess speed, and from this they were matched and entered for track performance. There was no approved or accepted method of training and working the trotter for regular place upon the turf. There were few race tracks and racing was held in low estimation—trotting matches lower than running races, and about on the low level of quarter racing. The Union Course, Long Island, and the Beacon Course, Hoboken, New Jersey were the most noted for occasional trotting. It was on Long Island the great four mile race was won by Eclipse against Sir Henry in 1823; and on the same course the Jersey mare, Fashion, with young Jo Laird up, in 1842, won the race against the great Virginia stallion Boston, the veteran Gilpatrick the rider, reducing the record from the 7:37½ of Eclipse to 7:32½. Two years subsequently, on the same track, Fashion was defeated by the great Southern mare Peytona, but her record was not lowered until 1855, by Lexington, at New Orleans. The Beacon track at Hoboken was mainly for trotters and pacers, but it was indifferently supported, and before 1850 it was abandoned and finally closed.

Hiram Woodruff was the acknowledged authority on trotters and trotting. His opinions were debatable, but his judgments were final. He had no rival, and comparatively few to encounter as drivers of trotters on the track. Lady Suffolk ranked the peerless queen of the trotting turf—a small gray mare, docile as a kitten, the squarest of trotters, and never known to break. She was owned by a rough and uncouth farmer, Dave Bryant, who was unable to state her pedigree. He was accustomed to drive her on the road to a common wagon, and would rattle her over the cobble pavements of New York as market men daily drive in their trade wagons. He insisted on driving her in every engagement when she went to a wagon or sulky, and would not allow any other to drive or handle her. When she was to go under the saddle he confided her to the care of Al. Conklin, one of the best horsemen of the period. Woodruff, Conklin, George Spicer and Jake Somerindike were the most noted drivers of that time. Confidence, Americus and Ripton ranked next to Lady Suffolk as trotters. Oneida Chief was the greatest pacer. In public he never made a record so low as the 2:26½ of Lady Suffolk, under the saddle, and he rarely defeated her in a match race. It was said that Oneida Chief had made the mile in 2:12 in private trial, but the story was not generally accepted as authentic.

The most prominent blood from which to breed fine and fast roadsters that might develop into trotters for turf engagements was that of the Vermont Morgan. The Blackhawk line, or cross with the Morgan, was favored by many. Breeding trotters from thoroughbreds, sire and dam, was not thought of. There was not a trotter in the country valued at above $2,000, and it is doubtful if even Lady Suffolk could have commanded so much as, or to exceed $1,500. The average valuation for trotters of sound condition and at their best was between $300 and $500. Old Bellfounder sold for $325, and Screwdriver for $300—both three minute trotters, then accounted fast. Ordinary roadsters sold for from $150 to $250. There were no breeding farms for trotters, for the track or stud.

From that condition, since 1850, the trotting turf has advanced from Lady Suffolk to Flora Temple, Princess, Lady Thorne, Goldsmith Maid, Mountain Maid and Maud S., from Confidence and Oneida Chief to Dexter, Rarus, Occident, St. Julian, George Wilkes and Jay-Eye-See, to James K. Polk, Pocahontas and Johnson. Records have been lowered from Lady Suffolk's 2:26½ down—from Flora Temple's 2:19, Dexter's 2:18, Occident's 2:16, Goldsmith Maid 2:14, Rarus 2:13½, St. Julien's 2:11½, Jay-Eye-See's 2:10, to the still unrivalled 2:08¾ of Maud S. The advancement has been famous in breeding and training and handling. The glisten of Woodruff and the noted drivers of his period—Conkling, Spicer, John Murphy, Jo. Daniels, Pat Hunt and John Crooks, is paled by the real lustre of Doble, Marvin, Splan, John Goldsmith, and others of this period, the most accomplished in the art of training and driving trotting horses. Instead of the small breeding farms of the Morgans and Blackhawks in Vermont, there are great farms of high reputation in New York, in Ohio, in Kentucky, and throughout the West, devoted to trotters; and here in California are the famous breeding farms of Palo Alto, San Mateo, Rosemead, Rancho del Paso, Santa Anita, with others, on which are produced horses of great worth and high value—the most promising trotters known in the world, which command prices from $2,000 to $50,000, and are held at even much greater sums.

To the superior intelligence brought into the breeding of horses by men of wealth and character in the preparation and management of breeding farms in the East and on this coast must be attributed the very great improvement in the American trotter and the latter development of the horse in every degree. These breeding farms have enabled the people to gratify their fondness for superior horses, for pleasure and for the turf; and in this the price is of least consideration—thereby assuring profit to the noble industry. The improvement in training and care of the horse is the legitimate consequence of this superior development of the horse. Training has risen to the quality of a profession, in which the best of qualifications are required. A thorough knowledge of the horse, an aptitude to estimate and judge the nature and powers of the horse, and equally the keen perspicacity, and deep, full comprehension of men upon the turf, of the intricacies of racing and racers. Natural inclination, studious application, fine discernment, integrity and the qualities of good manhood, are essential. These constitute the degree of honored professorship in learning, in the arts, in the sciences. Pope well wrote "the proper study of mankind is man."

What better, what more humane, what more useful to man is the study of the domestic animals closest, fondest, most useful and most profitable to man? The horse is foremost and most valuable of all domestic animals—the most tractable, useful, spirited and intelligent. His training for excellence should be committed to a humane, sensible, patient, good man of intelligence, tact and firmness to bring out and render valuable his best qualities. The old discipline of the spur and the whip, by rough, ignorant, brutish natures, with less intelligence than the horse and more of the brute in their composition, is of the past on breeding farms, in the stables, and on the turf. To preserve the spirit, cultivate the mettle, and develop the powers of the horse, as a colt he must be studied and understood. This is the curriculum of the modern trainer. The teacher trains and educates boys to become worthy and good, and fit them for the matriculation of the finishing studies of manhood.

The trainer's process with the colt is similar—onward to the perfection of the turf and for every use. One is called professor—the other is as deserving of the title upon his proven merits. Likewise is the veterinary surgeon duly qualified, entitled to rank with the member of the faculty whose practice is with mankind. The quack or empiric in either is to be abhorred. The true gospel of the horse and his usefulness to man is now better taught and better practised than ever before, and the excellence of the horse and his greater profit to man are the enlightening and gratifying consequences.

A Fast Quarter.

It is now the time to hear reports of fast quarters, halves and miles, but thus far these annual reports have not been numerous. And this, as "Knap" McCarthy would say, "reminds us." Not many months ago a few lovers of good movers visited a track one morning. Among the horses worked was one of the quartette of three-year-old pacers that created such a furore last year. After being warmed up, her driver, formerly an eastern knight of the ribbons, asked them to catch the last quarter, as he intended to cut the filly loose and see if she had any of last year's speed left in her. Jogging slowly to the half he opened her out, and as the filly's nose flashed the three-quarters, four watches clicked, and the little lady flew for the wire. She came along easy and it seemed no exertion for her to go faster. As she reached the wire four watches clicked again, and one looked at his timer and then quietly slipped it into his pocket. As the filly came back to the wire, her driver called out: "How fast did she come?"

"You paced the last quarter in 0:28½," replied the driver addressed.

Then out came the timer that was slipped into the vest pocket at the conclusion of the trial, and the four watches showed 28½ seconds flat. This was the fastest quarter ever paced, and it beats Mike Wilkes' famous quarter in 0:29½.

Spokane's Sire.

The following interesting account of Hyder Ali has appeared in several Eastern papers:

The recent performance of the crack three-year-old Spokane in vanquishing Proctor Knott and winning the Kentucky Derby and the rich Clark stakes within a week recalls an amusing error of judgment that F. A. Blades made when he was appraiser of customs at Detroit. The sire of Spokane, Hyder Ali, after a successful career on the Kentucky turf, broke down and was bought by a Toronto (Ont.) breeder. A few years later Gen. Rowett, of Illinois, purchased the old campaigner for his stud. When put in a car at Toronto consigned for the United States, he hadn't the remotest idea that anybody would say that a son of Lexington and grandson of Leamington, two of the greatest sires in the history of the Kentucky turf, as Hyder Ali was, did not come within the provision of the law which says that all stock intended to be used for breeding purposes shall be admitted free of duty. He had a long, gaunt neck and an ungainly appearance generally.

Elder Blades, whose duty it was to appraise horses coming from Canada, looked over Hyder Ali as soon as the horse was brought over from Windsor. He looked the old racer over carefully, and then said to Gen. Rowett: "I can't pass that old plug, General. There doesn't appear to be anything about him that makes him valuable for breeding purposes or anything else. Upon what do you base your claim that he should be admitted free? There certainly are no fine points about him, and then, too, he is deformed. Notice the ewe neck of him."

The bluff old General, who was in the habit of using very forcible language, was unable to find words for a few moments to express himself, and when he did, he chided the appraiser mildly for his lack of knowledge about race horses. He then recited the famous racing strains that coursed in Hyder Ali's veins. The appraiser would not be convinced that the horse was not what he had called him, an old plug, until Gen. Rowett hunted up a volume of the stud book and showed him the old racer's pedigree. The appraiser admitted that there might be something in the horse, after all, and so he did not collect any duty. After General Rowett's death Hyder Ali was purchased by Armstrong, of Montana, and bred to the dam of Spokane.

Of course it makes a nice fairy tale but a little more accuracy would not have spoilt the fable. Hyder Ali is a son of Leamington and a grandson of Lexington. Interpose (Spokane's dam) was put to Hyder Ali when both were the propty of Gen. Rowett. "Hyder Ali's long gaunt neck (afterwards called a ewe neck) and ungainly appearance." He was seen at the Rancho Del Paso a month ago, looking like a picture. His neck is very good and instead of being ungainly he is a beautiful mover and thoroughbred every inch, magnificently proportioned; could the writer have meant Stratford.

Grim's Gossip.

Pete Brandow's Sol Wilkes is moving in good shape. The other day he easily went a mile without a skip in 2:28¾.

N. T. D. Soloman, the owner of Ed. Rosewater 2:20½, pacer, and also a well known trotting horse breeder, died at his home in Omaha, after a long illness.

It may be interesting to Mr. Holly to know that the intelligent reporter for the Associated Press has wired East that San Diego has been purchased for $25,000.

Old Beaconsfield is said to be rounding to in good shape, and should before long show some of the form that he so often exhibited here.

The pool rooms here, after holding all bets on the Redlight Baggage fiasco, until Monday eventually paid on Baggage in accordance with the judge's first decision.

Alexander Button is said to be moving very rapidly and there is no doubt of his being capable of lowering his record, 2:26½. I heard the other day that he had already gone one heat in 2:14.

Commotion, 2:30, by Electioneer, once owned by George Fuller and Charles Marvin, and sold at the Fasig sale in May to Henry Hawes, of Johnstown, Penn., for $1,200, was lost in the recent Johnstown disaster.

John Murphy was last week taken down to Hiram Howe's well known hostlery on the Coney Island Boulevard. It is hoped that the cool invigorating ocean breezes will bring the Red Prince back to his pristine strength.

Ernest Benzon, the jubilee plunger or jubilee juggins, is writing his autobiography. The advance copies are all sold at ten shillings and six pence each. The ex-plunger should at that rate make more money than he did on the turf.

Senator Hearst and Jack Follansbee left last Monday night for New York. They will see their manager at Chicago, and may possibly stay over for a day or two. The Senator will take a more personal part in his racing stable in future.

R. W. Rideout, Secretary of the Eureka Jockey Club, is sparing nothing to make the meeting which takes place next week at Eureka a success. The track under his supervision has been carefully levelled and improved in several places.

Horse nomenclature is studied a good deal about this season and brains are puzzled to find a happy name for colts. One of the best I have come across lately is Lord Dudley's Present Alms by the Miser out of Salute, does not that look a very pretty witticism.

The San Leandro Reporter says that "Modjeska" one of the entries in the late San Leandro Sweepstakes was sold this week to Mr. Sumner DuBois. Next year she will endeavor to make a record, when it is expected she will be able to pace a mile some where about 2:20.

Last Monday, Joe Courtney, one of the many cracks in the Winter's string came within three-quarters of a second of beating the record for 7½ furlongs, and had he been pressed for the last furlong would undoubtedly have made a new record for the distance.

Notwithstanding the statements in the Examiner and Chronicle, Dawn has not broken down. I saw him last Saturday work a very nice mile, and he is rapidly returning to his old form. Why is that these irresponsible reporters break down horses, and make them win races at will.

Dick Havey gave Shamrock, who is now under his care, a fair mile with Griffin's bay pacer last Wednesday. The full distance was trotted in 2:29, the last half in 1:08. The black son of Buccaneer with a little more work should beat his two-year-old record of 2:25 easily.

Bay Rose, under Orrin Hickok's able tuition, should before the year is out, lower his record a notch or two. At present he is rather low in flesh after his stud duties; by the way, he is not bay, being a decided brown. His present record of 2:20½ was given him by Johnny Goldsmith.

August Belmont is said to have won $20,000 on Raceland, Garrison $5,000 and MacMahon, the crack jockey's father-in-law, $10,000. But on the whole day probably John L. McGrath, the veteran caterer, must have done as well as anyone. Twenty thousand dollars is the lowest estimate of his sales of edibles.

Jimmy McLaughlin will after this season train Pierre Lorillard's thoroughbreds. The popular Rancocas breeder has been a heavy buyer at most of the yearling sales this year, and it is hoped that the cherry and black will once more be seen in the van, as it was when game old Parole, Wanda, Dewdrop and Iroquois carried it to many a well earned victory.

Mr. W. T. Walters called at the office yesterday and wishes me in his name to thank everyone, newspapers included, for their assistance and kindness during his late difficulty in the Al Farrow case. He says that he has severed his connection with the whole crowd, and has hopes of having his horse reinstated shortly.

El Rio Rey is running up to his best form and in the earlier part of the week at Chicago, after being practically left at the post he was in the lead before half a mile, and won hands down in 1:08; distance 5½ furlongs. The Chicagoans are dead struck on the colt, and I hear, thinks he is better than the Emperor ever was.

Hanover has the credit of lowering the record for five furlongs and a half, which last week was credited to Torso, with 1:09. Hanover galloped the distance in 1:06 2-5, which goes to show that Torso's performance on a straightaway course, even if a record, was nothing very wonderful. In the following race Burlington lowered the record at the same distance for two-year-olds, as his time was 1:08 3-5.

Sorrento, with a good jockey up, would have made Spokane stretch his neck. Taral has lost his courage since his severe injury a year ago. The St. Louis Republic also says that those astute trainers at Chicago who agreed that Spokane was lame, but could not agree whether it was in front or behind, can now have the floor.

Mr. S. N. Straube is going to dispose of a great many of his surplus stock in order to give his whole time to improving and developing his trotting stock. Amongst other stock to be disposed of are his splendid herds of Shorthorn and Polled Angus. They ought to be invaluable to all cattle men for crossing and improving their herd.

Almont Patchen was worked out four heats Wednesday, the last heat in 2:19½, the first half in 1:07½, and was then slowed up. Mr. Corey his owner was present.

T. G. Jones takes Applause on this morning's boat to Eureka. McManus has also taken on the steamer the trotter Perihelion. Both are in the pink of condition.

Jimmy Dustin drove Maggie E. a very fair mile a few days ago at the Oakland track in 2:20. Evidently she is rounding to in good shape, and if her back does not trouble her, should go a few good heats this season.

Lou Myers, the champion foot racer, has added to his string of thoroughbreds Cara Mia, a two-year-old filly by St. Blaise, out of Carita. What relation does she bear to St. Carlo? he is by St. Blaise, out of Carina by Kingfisher, out of Carita. Guttenberg is waiting and watching for signs of pace. Mr. Belmont would not have sold if there had been any form shown.

Mr. John Hunter, whom all old turf men recollect so well in the good old days when the orange and crimson were carried to many a victory by Kentucky, Rhadamanthus and Buckden. At the Belle Meade sale he was one of the most extensive purchasers, and will probably be to the fore at the Haggin sale on Monday.

Caliente, Lucky Baldwin's three-year-old son of Rutherford, upset every calculation when he beat little Minch at Washington Park. Mr. Baldwin and Californians in general were the only winners. The California pet, Geraldine, left everyone broke when the bush mare Irene easily beat her in the six furlong sprint on Thursday. The Maltese Villa run of bad luck was continued, when Flood Tide found the weight too much for him in the last race.

The California Contingent have done very fairly back East so far. At Jerome, J. B. Haggin has won $8,465, with Aurelia $5,770, Firenzi $2,280, Fitz James $220, and Mirabeau $192. At St. Louis, Theodore Winters heads the list of winning owners, with $9,840 to his credit. He won the Chicago Horseman Stake with Don Jose, the Stallion Stakes with El Rio, and the Directors' Stakes with Joe Courtney.

J. A. McKerrson, the well-known harness and horse outfitter, is doing a tremendous business at high pressure. Everyone who requires boots, harness or anything in that line before the fairs start should at once notify the firm, and their orders will be promptly attended to and they will be supplied with the usual excellent class of goods furnished by them, and they cannot be surpassed by anyone in their own line of business.

The coast was inundated with telegrams to back The Gloming (a two-year-old filly of Senator Hearst's) on Saturday. Probably her fast trial did not do her any good. Why is it that men will run their races a day or two previous. If a trainer knows he has a good horse it is not necessary to give him a public or private trial for every race. If it is a cast iron horse it would probably be more suitable.

Gabe Caldwell has discovered a new mode of punishing owners of unruly horses. When Umpire was put up for sale in accordance with the rules, Gabe raised the price $5, saying it will cost you $10 Mr. Street for his behavior at the post. Mr. Street gave the extra $10 which of course was divided between the fund and the second horse. Mr. Caldwell would perhaps not have relished his joke if Umpire had been left on his hands.

The following members of District Boards of Agriculture have been appointed by the Governor: District No. 19—Tuolumne and Calaveras counties—D. R. Oliver, T. C. Birney, D. W. Berger, J. A. Goodwin, Otto Lolling, F. J. Solinsky, Lewis C. Honey and Adam Kelibar. District No. 24—Santa Cruz county—James Waters, George W. Sill, A. P. Rorche, A. N. Judd, H. S. Stipp, J. A. McCune, H. L. Jessen and P. J. Thompson.

A prominent breeder of high class trotters in Rutherford county, Tenn., agitated the breeding of pacers. He says: "It is obvious to every thinking breeder that the breeding of pacers is a large and growing interest in our State; that we have more reputation away from home with the pacing horse than any other; that the pacing strain is well up in some of our fastest and gamest trotters; too numerous to mention; and that some of our fastest pacers are trotting bred. The interests are identical and hard to separate.

The Chicago officials got into a regular muddle last Saturday. They placed Baggage first, although Senator Hearst's colts was palpably a long way in the rear and Redlight won. The mistake was not rectified and all bets were paid on the decision there. On Monday they rectified their mistake, as far as lay in their power, and out of their (the Association) own pockets paid all the Redlight tickets and credited him with the value of the purse, the contretemps cost them $12,000.

The Grants Pass Driving Park, Jacksonville, Oregon, will have a good day's racing on the Fourth of July. The following races will be run for:

Race No. 1—Ponies, 300 yards; purse, $15.

Race No. 2—Trotting, four-minute class, 2 in 3; purse, $30.

Race No. 3—Running, 600 yards and repeat; purse, $30.

Race No. 4—Trotting, Free-for-all, 3 in 5; purse, $50.

Race No. 5—Running ½ mile and repeat; purse, $30.

Nominations to be made to the committee on or before the Fourth.

The new Duchess of Portland has persuaded the Duke to give up all his winnings on the turf to the poor. They have decided to build and maintain at Welbeck a sufficiency of almshouses for the local poor people. This is as it should be, for charity begins at home. After Donovan's success in the Derby, the Duke gave George Dawson his trainer and Fred Barrett who rode the colt, $5,000 each, also donating $2,500 to the Rous Memorial Hospital, and $1,000 to the Bentinck fund.

The Futurity course, which has been the especial pride of Secretary Lawrence has, by force of circumstances, been practically ruined, unfortunately for those who desire three-quarter mile straightaway races. Owing to some flaw in the title to the land acquired at the upper end of the course, its owners have taken possession of the land and will not give it to the club except at an exorbitant price. So hereafter three-quarter mile races run over that course will require a finish some distance below the judges' stand, which will make the finishes as awkward as they now are at Jerome Park in short races.

In our notes last week on the Santa Rosa track, the printer caused us to credit the ownership of Zeno and others to Mr. C. C. Beamish, when we should have said C. C. Bemis.

D. S. Quintin's entry in the Breeders' Association three-year-old trotting stake, is as blue blooded a representative of Eastern lines as our coast breeders could ask or wish to compete with. Prodigal is by Pancoast 2:21¾, out of Beatrice by Cuyler 100, or in other words he is a full brother to the mighty Patron 2:14½, who tied Hinda Rose's three-year-old record of 2:19½, and yet holds the five-year-old record for stallions at the figures set opposite his name.

Neither Anteeo, 2:16¼, Antevolo, 2:19½, nor Dawn, 2:19½, has a single representative in the colt stakes offered by the Breeder's Association. This is not as it should be; at least two three-year-olds by the first named proved themselves last year worthy to go in any company of their age. The owners of such colts do justice to neither themselves nor their horses in reserving them solely to win district races.

We have received from a friend and well wisher a full account of the Jockey Club meeting "in Re" the Chetwynd and Durham dispute, and while thanking him for his attention, the article is necessarily so voluminous that we cannot print it in full. Sir George and Lord Durham both sent in their resignations as members of the club, but as the case had not then been settled, the stewards, according to precedent, refused to accept the resignations. Further developments in the case should be on hand before long, though it is almost hopeless to expect that the scandal will ever be thoroughly sifted.

John W. Martin, of Yolo, has taken to the race track at Napa, his stallion Clay Duke 2757, by Alcona 730; dam Metamora, by Duke of Orange Jr., also Del Rey, by Clay Duke, dam Madonna by Cassins M. Clay Jr. 22; and the brown three-year-old Alexander Button Jr. by Alexander Button, dam by John Nelson. A two-year-old owned by the same gentleman, is by Clay Duke, dam by Hercules. Del Rey is entered in the three-year-old stakes at Napa and Santa Rosa, and promises to be a success if present indications do for anything.

Henry Vaughan, the well known stock importer, informs me that on his last trip he secured for Mr. Andrew Smith, the best Berkshire Boar he could procure. $750 cash was given for Model Duke 17393, who last fall at St. Louis defeated his sire Longfellow, who up till then was deemed invincible. Mr. Smith ought to be proud of his high priced animal, which is said to be unequalled. Mr. Vaughan goes East shortly to procure horses and cattle for several well-known California breeders. Everyone, who wishes, as they ought to, to improve his herd, should not forget that they have an exceptional chance to get a really good horse or bull at a lower rate than they otherwise possibly could.

"It is interesitng," says a writer, "to note the contest of the sires and families for supremacy. Some sires we see make a great push forward in a single year, and then fall back, just as a race horse may make one desperate rush in the stretch and die away, unable to sustain the pace. Other sires we see make gradual progress toward the front every year, coming fast and steadily, as it were, with every indication of staying to the finish. Again we see sires great in themselves, but seemingly unable to perpetuate their greatness to the second and third generations, and under the test of breeding-on capacity they fall away like sprinters racing at cup distances."

In a case before the Court in London, the status of a bookmaker was questioned and an English paper says:

Dulce est desipere in loco, and Mr. Justice Hawkins asking one day last week, "What is a bookmaker?" is a beautiful example thereof. The particular Knight of the Pencil to whom his lordship administered this bland interrogatory replied to the effect that "a bookmaker is a banker." Possibly. But, fortunately, a banker is not necessarily a bookmaker.

Witness: "Yes; and if the horse wins they get their money."

Whereupon Ermine-clad Innocence murmured gently, "Sometimes."

A short while ago J. H. Simmons of this city bought Harry Velox, 2:24½, Velox-Ariosa, from G. Vignalo, Los Angeles, He is a bay gelding, foaled in 187–, bred by Mr. Strand, Evansville, Ind., and made his record in 1884 at Council Bluffs, Iowa. The Rural Spirit of Portland says, "For several years the bay gelding Harry Velox, record 2:24½, by Velox, dam Ariosa, has been stabled in this city by one Mr. Fields, and going under the name of Pat Ryan.

Since the above went into type it is learned that this horse has been entered in the free-for-all at Spokane Falls, to be trotted on the 25th inst. This horse has, we are informed, been trotting races north of here under the name of Pat Ryan.

Of the 83 races run during the Jerome Park meeting Mr. Belmont was easily the largest winner. He won eight races in all, a majority of which were stakes. Mr. Withers also won eight races—not a bad showing, considering the inexperience of his trainer, owing to the illness and death of his regular trainer during the meeting. The next in the number of wins were Capt. S. S. Brown with 7, A. J. Cassatt with 6, J. A. and A. H. Morris and B. A. Haggin with 5 each, W. Lakeland 4, J. E. McDonald, Geo. Forbes, W. B. Jennings and the Hempstead Stables with 3 each; W. L. Scott, W. Gratz, F. Gebhard, Madison Stable and Ramapo Stable with 2 each; C. Cornehlsen, La Masney Bros., Davis & Hall, F. Taylor, M. T. Donovan, S. W. Street, W. Jennings, J. Hyland, J. M. Jeffcott, H. Bondy, C. J. Donovan, the Castle, and Excelsion and Auburndale Stables one each.

It is not a little remarkable that we are indebted to Terentius Varro, who wrote about the year 70 B. C, for a description of the horse which, in the opinion of so excellent a judge as Mr. Youatt, has scarcely been surpassed in modern times: "We may prognosticate great things in a colt," he says, "if, when running in the pastures, he is ambitious to get before his companions, and if, on coming to a river, he strives to be the first to plunge into it. His head should be small, his limbs clean and compact, his eyes bright and sparkling, his nostrils open and large, his ears placed near each other, his mane strong and full, his chest broad, his shoulders flat and sloping backwards, his loins broad and strong, his tail full and bushy, his legs straight and even, his knees broad and well knit, his hoofs hard and tough, and his veins large and swelling over all his body."

THE KENNEL.

Los Angeles Bench Show.

[By Our Special Reporter.]

Some five or six weeks ago the Los Angeles County Poultry Association began preparations for a poultry show to be given in June, and several meetings were held, the date settled upon, hall engaged and every essential detail attended to. Thirty days ago it occurred to a thoughtful member of the Poultry Club that the addition of a dog show might be productive not only of added interest, but also of material increase in the box office receipts, and at the instance of said member, Mr. H. T. Payne, business manager of the Los Angeles Tribune, a thorough man of affairs and also a thorough sportsman and admirer of dogs, was invited to organize, conduct and judge a bench show in conjunction with that of the poultrymen. Mr. Payne plunged in medias res, as might have been expected, but his efforts had that peculiar method which makes everything he does so effective. He at once called the sportsmen of Los Angeles together, and proposed the organization of a Kennel Club. The idea "caught on," and the Southern California Kennel Club was the result. The club was organized with the following officers: H. T. Payne President, J. J. Hanford Secretary, E. B. Tufts Superintendent; show committee, R. H. Gray, W. H. Wilson, J. E. Preston, J. J. Hanford, H. T. Payne; and it is not saying too much when the impression is conveyed that the best possible men were chosen. The club immediately joined the American Kennel Club, and thereby put itself upon a plane with other organizations all over America. A proper premium list was sent out all over the coast, and the result has been a very large, well conducted and excellent bench show in Los Angeles. The show began on Monday last in Hazard's Pavilion, a large, well situated, well ventilated and in every way suitable building. It was expected that about fifty dogs would be entered, but the managers had not probably estimated the number of owners of good dogs, and ninety entries were sent in, among them some very fine animals and many good ones. Mr. E. B. Tufts, a genial gentleman, acted as superintendent, assisted by Mr. W. H. Wilson, and both received many compliments about their efficiency. Mr. Wilson acted as ring steward, and kept things moving. The judging was done by Mr. H. H. Briggs, and as he is writing this report, the lack of any opinion about the judging may be condoned. The show has been a paying one, a good one and a satisfactory one, and each year hereafter will see a show of dogs in Los Angeles. A fairly good mastiff dog, Amado, received first, second going to Imperial Arno, weak in head and not better otherwise than the winner of first.

In mastiff bitches a good little one, Lelia M., was shown and got first.

A lot of Harlequin Great Danes were catalogued in a special class, first going to Tiger, not large, and coarse. In bitches of the same class Clio, roomy, but smallish and not well colored, got a first.

In St. Bernards but one was shown, Shield, lacking character but well marked and receiving first.

Baron Rogniat showed a goodish small Great Dane in Monteballo, and received a first, the same award going to a brindle Dane puppy of no marked excellence, named Strogoff.

The greyhound exhibit was weedy as a rule.

A good native foxhound was shown in Jack, belonging to Mr. C. S. Campbell-Johnston.

In light pointer dogs a grand good young one was given first, Kan Koo.

Patti Croxteth T., well shown, had a walk-over in light weight pointer bitches, but could have won in a hot class. Second in the same class went to a bitch, Nell, very fine except in head and stern.

The English setter class was a strong one, unexpectedly strong. The winners of the three prize cards were sorty, of the closely built, well ribbed kind, with plenty of substance and strong setter character. First went to Tom Paine, a very clean built dog. Second to Royal Sport, very like Bergundthal's Rake. Third to Trifler, rather sour-faced and not so good behind as the others. In English setter bitches Princess Claude had an easy win, a typical, roomy bitch. Peerless won in dog puppies, very fine drawn, lacking substance.

Mike T. won easily in Irish setters, elegantly shown, second going to Duke Alexis, not typical. In bitches Lady Elcho T., queenly as ever, was alone.

The Gordons were very fine, much better than have ever before been shown in California.

Mr. and Mrs. Rennie won in cockers, with Giffee and Woodstock Belle, both very fine. In bitches Woodstock Belle met a worthy competitor in Lady, shown too fat.

The fox terriers were good, but too leggy, the best being Miss Susie, G. Patton's Don Carlos and J. B. Martin's Golden Patch.

Miss Julia M. Taylor won first with a very nice pug dog, Pat, and in bitches Mrs. W. H. Locus received a like award.

A peculiarity of the Los Angeles show was the number of good dogs shown by ladies and the delightful tolerance with which they received the awards. Another peculiarity was the number of ladies in attendance at the show, and in a visitor from the frozen North a little enthusiasm about willowy forms, magnificent sun-kissed cheeks, gossamer fabrics and all the graces of Venus Aphrodite may easily be pardoned. Two San Franciscans attended the show and sustained the reputation of their town for general eccentricity and liveliness. They were Messrs. A. B. Truman and H. P. Rennie.

A resume of the awards is appended:—

Mastiffs—Dogs.

First—Amado, light fawn; whelped May 7, 1888; breeder, Richard Gird. Sire, Chino Lion; dam Chino Beauty. Value $100. Wm. Piuti, Ontario, Cal.

Mastiffs—Bitches.

Roderigo.

The Memphis and Avent Kennel of Memphis, and Hickory Valley, Tennessee, sends this week the finest portrait of a dog that we have ever seen. It seems to be a solar print, retouched in oil, and is a tribute to the genius of the artist, Mr. J. M. Tracy of Norwich, Conn. The picture is of Roderigo, at the head of the stud of English setters which has made the kennel famous and placed it at the head of that fancy. Roderigo in breeding is unexceptionable as will be seen by study of his pedigree subjoined.

RODERIGO..... 3514 A. K. C. S. B.	Count Noble....	Count Wind'em..	Count Dick.
			Phantom.
		Nora.....	Dan.
			Nelly.
	Twin Maud.....	Gladstone.....	Dan.
			Lill II.
		Clip.....	Leicester.
			Dart.

Rod was bred by Messrs. W. B. Gates and Arthur Merriman of Memphis, was whelped on April 12th, 1883, is black, white and tan, and the best English setter alive. He won the all-aged stake at the National Field Trials in 1885, and on the bench won third, St. Louis, 1885, and V. H. C, Cincinnati, 1885. Roderigo stands alone in several respects. He is not of the type to please those who go in for delicacy of form and extreme finish. The dog is a sturdy, rugged, muscular animal of immense vitality, the utmost stamina, and marked prepotency. He has a rather plain, brainy head, fine eyes, full nostrils, rather short neck, wonderful shoulders, perfectly sprung ribbing, strong stifles, well-bent, perfect legs and feet, and is covered by a coat that is of good texture, but rather too wavy. He looks the workman, and is the fastest, longest staying, gamest, most brilliant performer among the English setters that has ever lived, unless his grand sire, Count Wind'em, was his equal. The dog is not a chance-bred creature, but is the result of exhaustive study of blood lines, performers and performances by his breeders, than whom no brighter, more capable or more esteemed setter men live. Rod was broken and run by Mr. J. M. Avent, also an owner in the Memphis and Avent Kennel, and the best trainer and handler in the world. Avent, a curious combination of stern virility and womanly tenderness, develops his dogs in accord with the most rational system, which is to make a study of each dog, encourage the timid, direct the willing, curb the headstrong, and in all cases foster natural predispositions.

We are pleased to receive the picture, and could only be better pleased by an opportunity to receive the royal owners of the kennels and to see them put famous Roderigo through his paces on California quails.

The Black Pointer Old Joe.

To the Editor of the Shooting Times—

DEAR SIR: I am on my way to my shooting, to start salmon fishing, and am not very well, having met with a bad accident last year whereby my leg and hands were badly injured, so cannot write much. My son writes me that there is a report in the Shooting Times from an American paper that I had lost Mr. Watson some prize (or something of that sort) because I had not sent him the pedigree of the black pup I sent him. Now, sir, before I sent the pup, I told him that I could give him the history of my pointers, but that I had no records of pedigrees. Therefore, I could not send that. I, however, sent him the correct age of the dog and filled up the printed form he sent me. The dog will be about two years and two or three months old now. I shot over the same litter last August, and they would be about 16 to 18 months old then. I only sent the dog out because the party was so urgent. He gave me the large price of £8 for pup about six or seven months old, and it cost me in keep, carriage, and searching for ship to take it out fully that sum.

No more pups from me to oblige such people as these again.

I have only sent four of those pups to America, and two have won first at field trials.

I shall not allow another pup to go to America again.

W. R. PAPE.

[The excerpt is taken from the London Shooting Times, and is as inaccurate and unsatisfactory as need be. It establishes but one fact clearly, viz., that Mr. Pape knows as little of the amenities as he does of dog breeding. The "history of my pointers" is of slight moment to any but the shrewd trafficer who cannot answer a simple query without exacting recompense from his editor in the way of a free advertisement, vide: "I have only sent, etc." American fanciers, of the sort who go in for shooting and who sustain field trials, have no use for black pointers, and particularly when bred by Mr. Pape, of whom one who lives in Newcastle, Tyne, says, "He is quite unknown in Newcastle, and is not recognized as a breeder of pointers or anything else." Some consideration may be due the fevered sufferer by reason of his infirmities, and he is dismissed with no other feeling than one of contemptuous disregard.—KEN. ED.]

The only dog ever shown to Queen Victoria by royal command was the greyhound Master McGrath. That august lady also requested the presence of the thoroughbred Ormonde, and the horse shares with the hound the honor.

The Texas Field Trials Club sends the announcement of its fourth annual meeting to begin near Marshall, Texas, on February 11, 1890.

A Derby for dogs whelped since Jan. 1, 1888, entrance $5 will be run; $50 to first, $25 to second and $10 to third. Retrieving required. Entries close Feb. 10, 1890. Also an All Aged Stake, open to all. Entrance $5. $100 to first, $25 to second, $10 to third. Entries close February 10, 1890. Prizes will be paid in cash, or silverware at option of winners.

For particulars and rules, the Secretary, Mr. W. L. Thomas, may be addressed at Marshall, Texas. Both stakes are open to amateurs only.

ROD.

The Philosophy of Fishing.

It is the art or the trick of every pursuit to ground it in the remote and very ancient ages of the world. Very good. What is the matter with fishing? The art, and not the manner of advancing and improving centuries are not to the test. The rose by any other name would smell as sweet. The fish caught by any method is still as good to eat. The ancient Arians of Hindoo cast moulded their motto that "the tree doth not withdraw its shade from the woodcutter." Nor doth the placid pool withhold its reflection in imagery from the contemplative angler. The shades of the forest are to him and the sportive trout, as the sun beams mellow the scene and cheer the fisher as they delight the beauteous game.

The Buddhists agreed with the Brahmins in that doctrine of Quietism which denotes to the experienced angler in the chosen secluded nook of shade overhead and the deep pool below that the trout are still there. The disciples of the Vedas and the devotees of the Puranas could alike worship as they caught the food from Nature's softly running waters which was not flesh of grass nor meat of airy flyers, but yet was mighty good, as old Samuel Pepys would have bespoken the sentiment of palate gratification. It was under the grateful shade of umbrageous Indian growth that Gotama was born—the Penitent of Chakia, the similitude of the Christian Redeemer, except wherein he was adored as "he who kills the senses"—the preparatory ordeal to that nirvana which is absolute annihilation, and therefore supernatural bliss eternal, for it is complete nothingism, without sense of anything. The ego of Christians, the imperishable love of the individual self, was to Gotama a nonentity—as a grain of salt cast into boundless ocean.

The Egyptians worshipped the heavens and the waters Sirius, the Dog-star, brightest of heavenly splendors, was as a deity to them, and the inundation of the Nile brought them crops and fish. Their celestial trinity, Osiris, Pthah and Anum, were as the sun, the moon and the stars, and these wrought the mastery of the floods whence their earthly subsistence flowed. Floods and fishes are as rains and crops.

The earliest Grecian philosophers had their strange theories; but they neglected not the praise and appetite of fish. Anaximines embraced the sea in his philosophy that the earth itself floated upon it as a broad leaf—and there are always fish in the sea, and fishers where waters flow. The suspicion reasonably lurks that Anaximines had his own keen appreciation of the trait of fishers, as his theory developed in maintaining that air was the first principle. George Alfred Townsend, by his sobriquet "Gath"—the lisping pronunciation of gas—is example to the air theory of the old Grecian, and Eli Perkins stands as demonstration. Gas—air cooked, as fish ought to be, except one prefers, the Hawaiian style of diet, and eats fish raw with poi. Diogenes of Appollonia had a more acute and refined theory of air as the first principle of nature than Anaximines. He held that that which men call air prevades all, regulates all, governs all. Manifestly he spent much of his time in listening to the tales of fishermen, and the scales were regulated to the occasion. He could weigh and go away as he enjoyed his treat, and retreated to con the marvels of fire and his entertainers.

But Diogenes, broader in conception than Anaximines, embraced water in his theory of air as controlling elements. This is proof of thought of fish. Thales and Heraclitus of Ephesus were in accord with Diogenes in this. Heraclitus was the most practicable, however, for he insisted that fire was an essential in the order of the commanding elements. There was no Polynesian habitude in Heraclitus. He did not want his fish raw—they must be cooked, and fire is the everlasting champion cooker.

Democritus, the laughing philosopher, disdained earthly fire, and as a prime joke burned out his eyes with a glass, but then he was always a funny fellow, and one of great wit, with madness near allied. Whether he tried his burning glass on his mess of fish or took his glass as he feasted upon the fish as the moderns do, his biographers omit to mention. The World, the Sun, and the San Francisco dailies throw no light upon the subject. Curious annotators think that Heraclitus is somewhat at fault. He was called in his generation "the obscure," and his axiom that "all is ordered by reason and intelligence, though all is subject to fate," it is by these critics contended contains an error of his careless type-writer—that for "fate" the sentiment should read "fish"—else, why did he hold that a "moist soul" was mellow, and a "dry soul" was proof of patriotism, conscious as he must have been that the congenial fisher is ever dry, a thirsty soul that loves a drink divine.

Anaxagoras was evidently of the fisher class. He gave himself dead away in his maxim that, "together all were infinite in number and smallness; nothing was distinguishable before they were sorted; while all was together there was no quality noticeable." Had he just returned from a day's fishing out of luck, with "many a mickle to make a muckle" in his basket, and the catch of all sorts, he could not have more clearly expressed his feelings. His bites were nibbles, and he had the chagrin of one mindful of suckers and regretful of a day wasted. He had, too, missed the companionship of famous Jim Baker, gifted with that luxuriance of the narrator which neither hesitates nor quibbles at the unusual vision of a truth.

We may set him down as a raw and inexperienced angler. Pythagoras was better in the view. He sagaciously expressed the ruling sentiment "Not unto all should all be made known." That's business! the genial and indulgent angler will exclaim.

It has its equivalent in the Irish saying, "ask me no questions and I'll tell you no lies." It is courteous, non-assertive, diplomatic and, as the ritual of E Clampsus Vitus has it, eminently "satisfactory." We shall place the name of Pythagoras on the roll of honorary members of our Piscatorial Club. Zenophanes shall also have place for his "all revelation is pure fiction." Lord, how fine he struck it! He surely had been listening to the stories of the fishers, and was in the mood of the late Gilbert A. Grant, after he had sat out the swap of facts by the late Jo. Grant, Old Clarkson, and Truthful Jeems, as he rubbed his bewildered head and soliloquized "There's nothing true but Heaven."

Parmenides, Zeno and Protagoras were likewise in the list, with fishing smacks to their conduct and conversation. The Eleatic doctrine that time and motion and space were mere phantoms, vain deceptions, is convincing testimony to the accomplished and enthusiastic angler. What had any of these qualities to do with veracious Tom Merry, sufferer from hesitation of speech and gifted with the chosen weapon of Samson, when he sat on the damp bank of a hot sulphur spring till midnight, in the clear starlight, casting his line for trout all the while under the impression that the glistening water was a stocked pond, and never discovered his amusing blunder until the hotel boy told him it was a hot bathing pool, when he gathered his rod and reeled to his quarters. Time, motion and space were to Tom deceptive and as phantoms of the night. He reflected upon the queer adventure as his generous host provided solace and cheer, commingling fluids in a sort of milky way to Tom's supreme abandon, and he took it all in.

Empedocles was another of the typical fishers of those long ago ages. He distrusted the senses—he had heard too much. He believed in air, water, earth and fire, and at last left the earth for fire, in his leap into Ætna. He wished to die, cowboy style, with his boots on. In his period sandals were the foot agony, and he had a pair of brass. It was an impertinence that Ætna would not allow; brass foot wear was spouted up and out—there was no uncle with bowels of compassion in those depths to tolerate the intrusion of his brazen brogans. There has been no fishing in Æ na since.

It is hardly necessary to adduce further proofs that the ancients of profane history and myth had in them a good deal of the fishing fancy and habit. A careful reading of that which has come down to us will supply the searcher after the truth as to the testimony. The angler's recreation has classic example, ancient and fishlike smell, and is fragrant with the wrappings of Father Time, who reaps in all as they ripen. Therefore it is advised—all that are lovers of virtue, be quiet and go a-angling. Scripture warrant is to the fishing; all ages example the manner of the narration of trophies and of incidents.

Indianapolis Fly-Casters.

The second annual fly-casting tournament of the Fly-Fishermen's Club of Indianapolis, Ind., was held at Broad Canal on the canal May 31st. Secretary J. D. Blair writes:

"The weather was very disagreeable to say the least, still there were seventeen entries. The card gives the order in which they cast. The wind was strong all day, making it very difficult to get the line out on the back cast. Better records might have been made all around. The inclosed taken from the Indianapolis Journal will give further particulars:"

A stiff northwester that carried with it a cold rain was blowing yesterday morning, but not strong enough to prevent the members of the Fly-Fishermen's Club from holding their second annual tournament. Before 9 o'clock the scientific anglers, wearing rubber boots, and coats of like material, and with heads protected by proof hats, began gathering along the banks of the canal at the St. Claire street crossing, where the little steamer General Morris was waiting to convey them to Broad Cut. Many were late in reporting, and it was after 9 o'clock when the start was begun with about 100 members of the club and their friends on board. The stars and strips floated from the little steamer, which, with the jolly crowd aboard, attracted much attention as she steamed up the narrow waterway. The bad weather was a great disappointment to those who had anticipated a day of such enjoyment that only a fly-caster can appreciate. It was expected that not less than 500 people would be present, as many fishermen from various parts of the State had signified their attention of witnessing the sport. Nearly all the participants in the day's sport had made arrangements to bring their families with them, but the miserable weather defeated all their plans. Even the brave fishermen, who are prone to expect bad weather when they have planned to go out with rod and line, were almost tempted to turn back when they reached the Cut, and postpone the contest until they were assured winter was over. The success of their first tournament had been marred by unfavorable weather, and it was fondly hoped that the elements might be more favorable this year. It was finally decided to go on with the contest, notwithstanding the wind was blowing crosswise of the canal, making it impossible to attain the best results.

At 10 o'clock the judges, who were Judge Byron K. Elliott, Dr. L. D. Waterman and Capt. De Witt Wallace, shielded from the rain by immense rubber coats and umbrellas, took their place along the bank, ready to pass upon the merits of each contestant's skill. There were 18 entries for prizes, as follows: A. C. Jameson, G. A. Millard, A. B. Prather, Q. Brown, B. B. Dildine, M. D. Butler, Gen. Geo. F. McGinnis, Ed. H. Neumeyer, C. L. Hanford, George McDougall, Geo. Powell, B. G. Fisher, F. T. Holliday, Dr. P. G. C. Hunt, B. C. Wright, J. H. Blair and James Isgrigg. All but Mr. Powell were members of the club and residents of Indianapolis. Mr. Powell is from Shelbyville. The rules allowed each one ten minutes in which to cast for distance, and he then stood aside until called in his turn to cast for accuracy and delicacy. No single-handed fly-rod exceeded 12 feet. When every thing was ready Ray Williams, the time-keeper, called the first contestant to come forward, and Alexander C. Jameson, the oldest fly-fisherman in Marion County, stepped out on the barge. There was a drizzle of rain, and a wind blew directly across the direction in which the lines were cast.

Mr. Jameson used a slender rod 11½ft. long and weighing 8½oz. The wind was so strong that it was several minutes before he could make any headway with his line, but after several attemps he laid the fly out 59ft. Considering the wind, he showed great skill. G. A. Millard came next with a rod 9½ft. long and weighing 7¾oz. After fouling his line several times he made a distance of 54ft. A. B. Prather, with a 10½ft. rod, weighing 7½oz., showed considerable skill and reached a distance of 51ft. Ignatius Brown handled a rod 10½ft. 1in. in length and weighing 8oz., and made 56ft. B. B. Dildine used G. A. Millard's rod and cast for the first time. He displayed the skill of an old-timer, and made 57ft. M. D. Butler, who tied with H. S. New for first place in last year's contest, next came out on the barge. He handled a rod 11½ft. long, weighing 9oz. He displayed remarkable skill and outdid all those who had preceded him by putting the fly out 62ft. 6in. He dropped the fly 60ft. out on the first throw he made. General George F. McGinnis, another veteran fisharman, used a rod 11½ft. long weighing 9oz. The wind was blowing harder than ever when he began casting, and when eight minutes of his time was up it was raining so hard that time was called.

After dinner General McGinnis used up two minutes due him, and succeeded in getting the fly out 58ft. Ed. H. Neumeyer followed General McGinnis, with a rod 10½ft. long and weighing 7oz. He reached a distance of 42ft. Then came C. D. Hanford, who showed great skill. He had a rod 11ft. long and weighing 9½oz. He outdid all the preceding contestants, except Mr. Butler, and made a record of 60ft. George P. McDougall followed with a rod 11ft. long, weighing 9½oz. He displayed skill, and succeeded in getting the fly out 53ft. George Powell, of Shelbyville, came next. The members of the club were anxious to see what an outsider could do, and they were greatly surprised when Mr. Powell came close up to Mr. Butler by dropping the fly out 61ft. He was applauded. B. G. Fisher, with a rod measuring 11ft. and weighing 9½oz. reached 46½ft., and F. T. Holliday, with a rod 12½ft. in length and 8½oz. in weight, made a record of 56ft. When Dr. P. G. C. Hunt came out to cast the rain had ceased, and the wind was lighter. He used a 9oz. rod 11ft. long. He handled the line gracefully, and made one of the best records, 57ft. B. C. Wright made 56ft. with a rod 11½ft. long and weighing 9½oz., and J. H. Blair, with an 11½ft. rod, 9oz. in weight, made a distance of 50ft. The last man to cast was James Isgrigg, who used a rod 10½ft. long weighing 7oz. His distance was 55ft.

The contestants were then recalled in turn, and contested for delicacy and accuracy in the following manner: Each contestant was allowed twenty casts at an object in or on the water, 40ft. distant from him. He who reached a point nearest the object was adjudged superiority in delicacy. He was judged to be the superior in accuracy who on an average of all his casts, placed his stretcher-fly nearest the mark. This contest was fully as interesting as the casting for distance. C. L. Hanford made the best average, while that of M. D. Butler was not so good, which greatly reduced his general average. The score of the contest tells the whole story, as follows:—

	Rod—Length. Ft. In.	Rod—Weight. Oz.	Distance. Ft. In.	Delicacy.	Accuracy.	Total.
A. C. Jameson	11 06	8½	59 00	16	17	92

A strong breeze from the northwest was blowing during the casting, with occasional rain. Inspector of tackle, G. H. Hull, Lafayette, Ind.; timer, M. R. Williams, Minneapolis.

In the consolation match there were four entries. Casts were for distance only. Dr. P. G. C. Hunt scored 59ft., B. B. Dildine 54ft., Ed. H. Neumeyer 47ft., J. H. Blair 45 ft. A strong wind prevailed all the time of this casting. The trial ended at 3 o'clock.

The final scores of the contestants were determined by adding to the distance in feet cast each had been adjudged the score of points assigned for accuracy and delicacy. The prizes were awarded in accordance with that aggregate as follows:

First, C. L. Hanford. Record: distance 60ft, accuracy 18 points, delicacy 19 points, total 97.

Second, George Powell, Shelbyville. Record: distance 61 feet, accuracy 15 points, delicacy 19 points, total 95.

Third. M. D. Butler. Record: distance 62½ft., accuracy 17 points, delicacy 15 points, total 94½.

Fourth, Gen. Geo. F. McGinnis. Record: distance 58ft., accuracy 18 points, delicacy 18 points, total 94.

Fifth, Alexander C. Jameson. Record: distance 59ft., accuracy 16 points, delicacy 17 points, total 92.

Sixth, Frank T. Holliday. Record: distance 56ft., accuracy 18 points, delicacy 16 points, total 90.

Seventh, G. A. Millard. Record: distance 54ft., accuracy 16 points; delicacy 18 points, total 88.

Eighth, James A. Isgrigg. Record: distance 55ft., accuracy 17 points, delicacy 15 points, total 87.

The ninth prize was awarded to George P. McDougall. The consolation prizes were awarded to Dr. P. G. G. Hunt and B. B. Dildine. Considering the extremely bad weather, the records made were excellent. The club has decided to hold a tournament in September or October. But one prize will be offered, and that will be a medal offered by Bingham & Walk, jewelers. Mr. Walk's proposition is that when the medal has been won twice in succession by a contestant it shall become absolutely his property. The medal will be given to the person attaining the highest points for all-around excellence. The club also voted to admit to membership fly-fishermen of the State not residents of Marion County, upon the payment of one-half the regular initiation fee and annual dues.

The Complete Angler.

So long ago as A. D. 1724, the qualifications of the angler who would be considered a type of the guild were thus enumerated:

"First, let us consider what are the qualifications deemed necessary in an angler, by which term our guide and philosopher means one who fishes for sport and his own amusement, not one who seeks to make a profit by his fishing. Imprimis, he must be a man of leisure, whose time is at his own disposal, and he should be possessed of private means. For he considers it most unbecoming in a man of business to neglect that business and spend his days on the banks of the river trying to catch a gudgeon, when he ought rather to be employed behind the counter, like John Gilpin, or else in the counting-house endeavoring to provide his family with the necessaries of life. Sport, when pursued under these circumstances, is unworthy the name—nay, it becomes actually a vice, and is certainly a breach of good morals. Moreover, it is not everyone possessed of a competency who is fitted by Nature to become an angler. The man who would excel his fellows must have his passions well under command, and his temper governed with an absolute sway, so that the mind may be enabled to bear up against the trials and disappointments which are too surely part and parcel of the 'joyous' fisher's lot. No 'melancholy' man need ever attempt to become an angler. He is not to be trusted with 'an angle rod' on any pretext whatsoever. For how would such an one comport himself if, having played a fine fish, and brought it with great dexterity to the landing-net, he found it suddenly shake itself clear of the hooks, and regain its liberty when, as it were, in his very hands? 'If this angler,' cries the excited Saunders, 'does not stamp and stare, swear an hundred oaths, or pull the hair off his head—nay, if he does not throw himself into the very river after it,' it will indeed be most surprising, and he must be adjudged to have 'the command of himself to a wonder. What were Job's trials when he lost his children by the fall of a house, compared to the loss of a 4lbs. trout? Now, your true angler, one to the manner born, he wastes no time in idle imprecations or bewailing his hard luck, but just puts on a fresh bait with ineffable sweetness and serenity, and throws it in again—though if he be wise he is careful to select a different spot. As Cotton justly observes:—'O, sir, this is a war where you sometimes win, and must sometimes expect to lose.' The novice is, however, cautioned against being over cautious or timid. 'For he that fears wetting his stockings is no man for the sport, but should stay at home, and only wait for some of the fish he would not take the pains to fish for.'"

A Chapter on Black Bass.

Among the gamest and choice food fish, the black bass belongs in high rank. Some prefer the black bass to trout; tastes differ. But to one accustomed to trout and of fine palate, the occasional change to black bass is gratifying. In the briny waters of the North, on the coast of New Jersey and New York, where the kingfish is regarded much as the pompano and red-snapper are in the waters of the Gulf States, the black bass is held in second place, superior to his striped brother, and for the pan better than the sheepshead, which is unequaled for a chowder. The blue fish comes next to the sheepshead for this use, as the two are of larger size and boil better than they fry or broil. The black bass is a habitat of fresh waters, inland lakes and rivers, as well as of coast bays and brackish streams. In full condition it is as good in the one as in the other. Still it seems to have more vigor and is gamer in waters not entirely fresh, of swift current and occasional turbulence. Living or active bait is required. Black bass will dart and bite at live bait—either minnow or worm, at the spoon in trolling and at the fly skillfully cast. The accomplished angler prefers the rod and the fly. He angles to catch the fish he prefers, and he enjoys the exciting sport of the difficult catch. The black bass supplies the artistic play and the epicurean feast. The fish is attracted by bright colors and goes for the gaudy as bait, for the shiny in trolling. They are as the red rag is to the Spanish bull.

In trolling one has to be an expert as in hauling in the blue-fish, lest it swims ahead and releases itself from the hook; in hook and line fishing it will call in play the skill of the angler to make a landing. Finesse, skill and the patience of diplomat, are the insuring qualities. With a bass worthy of the exhilarating sport, the reward at table is ample. Sometimes it is an encounter, tournament style, and unless the angler be wary and skilled, it costs him rod and line, bob and sinker. Nary bass to his basket—it is disappointing and doleful. Out of some other hole with better luck his destiny of the day depends. His cheerful return home, his joyous meeting with his friends, his hilarious humor at his club are alike involved. The subjunctive mood subjectively wrought is dejective to the spirits, and pouring spirits down can poorly rally spirits up, while next day follows the racking contemplation, in which lost odds and ends do not satisfactorily or intelligibly connect, and between questionable recollection and actual obliviousness garrulity runs when reticence should hold the fort, and the capitulation is mortifying. All on account of the black bass, taking the line the angler confidently dropped, and interpreting self-appropriation in its own scaly way, escapes with what does not enrich itself and leaves the bereft fisher poor indeed, without even the recourse to a whale story in the recount of his day's mishap to many inquiring friends, bent on direct examination till it appears all cross, and exasperates the delinquent in the mesh of confusion worse confounded until peace and extrication flow from the conscious sparkling liquids which see their devotees and pop and pour. He has played and paid.

Beware the black bass when it leaps from its element, your hook in its gills, baited to its tone. It means business then, and will escape unless the angler be watchful and skilled. Be sure of the play of your line; of the firm action of your hand in every motion. It is strong and game and full of strategy. But he is your fish all the time, provided you are master of the situation. No foolishing, no monkeying; be an angler and a captain. Indulge the fish in all consequent antics, but with the firm resolve that that bass is yours by right of discovery. You and it will dine together—after the manner of the lion and the lamb. The bass is found in this State—it is good sport to go for them; they ensure the sport in the fishing; they delight at the table, a sort of salt-water, colored trout—as the natives of Guinea are not of golden hue, shades darker, but worth the taking. The black bass will stand off catfish in any stream or habitat. It is never a mud fish, as the carp is; is not bony as the shad and herring; is better for the pan or gridiron than the pot, and affords the zest in the taking which is the angler's joy and pride. Black bass go well with Bass's best to nourish as it cheers.

The Dragon Fly.

These insects are very familiar to us by means of the numerous dragon-flies which haunt our carp ponds, and which are known to common people by the very inappropriate name of horse stingers. They possess no sting and never meddle with horses. The name of dragon-fly, on the contrary, is perfectly appropriate, as these insects are indeed the dragons of the air in the perfect state. Even in their early stages the dragon-flies preserve their predatory habits, and for that purpose are armed in a most remarkable manner. During the larval and pupal states the dragon-fly is an inhabitant of the water, and may be found in most of our ponds and streams, usually hunting the muddy banks, and propelling itself along by an apparatus as efficacious as it is simple, and is exactly analogous to the mode by which the nautilus forces itself through the water. The respiration is carried on by means of the oxygen which is extracted from the water, and the needful supply of water is allowed to pass into and out of the body through a large aperture at the end of the tail. Such are its means of locomotion. Those of attack are not less remarkable or less efficacious.

The lower lip instead of being a simple cover to the mouth, is developed into a strange jointed organ, which can be shot out to the distance of nearly an inch; or, when at rest, can be folded over the face, much as a carpenter's rule can be shut up so as to fit into his pocket, and can be rapidly protruded or withdrawn, very much like the instrument called a "lazy-tongs." Like that instrument it is furnished at its extremity with a pair of forceps, and is able to grasp at passing objects with swiftness and certainty. The remains for some ten or twelve months in the preliminary stages of existence, and when the insect is about to make its final change, the undeveloped wings become visible on the back. When its time has come, the pupa leaves the water and crawls up the stem of some aquatic plant until it has reached a suitable elevation. It clings firmly with its claws and remains apparently quiet. On approaching it, however, a violent internal agitation is perceptible, and presently the skin of the back splits along the middle, and the dragon-fly protudes its head and part of the thorax. By degrees it withdraws itself from the empty skin, and sits for a few hours drying itself and shaking out the innumerable folds into which the wide gauzy wings have been gathered. After a series of deep respirations of the unwonted air, and much waving of the wings, the glittering membranes gain strength and elasticity, and the perfect insect launches into the air in search of prey and a mate.

There are very many species of dragon-flies, all very similar in their habits, being fiercely predacious, strong of wing, and gifted with glittering colors. Unfortunately the rich azure, deep green, soft carnation, or fiery scarlet of these insects fade with their life, and in a few hours after death the most brilliant dragon-fly will have faded to a blackish brown. A collection of the several varieties will be a source of much pleasure. In the larval form they are very destructive of young fish.

The Southern Pacific Railway Company is, we are informed, willing to transport trout for stocking purposes, free of charge, and those who desire fish should at once address J. Downey Harvey, at No. 4 Hutter St., city. There are some hundred thousands of young trout now on hand, we believe, mainly California and Tahoe, with some New Hampshire fish.

George Peach, J. G Lewis, Judge Hall and C. N. Reed left town at 1:30 last Friday morning on a fishing trip to Butte Slough. They arrived home about seven in the evening with 162 pounds of catfish and carp. Had the bait lasted we believe the party would have captured 500 pounds of fish. It was a jolly gang of anglers and many ludicrious incidents occurred. The judge almost froze to death going and was so sleepy coming home that he was haltered to the seat to keep him from being jolted out. Peach pulled Reed out of the slough by the coattails. Lewis' first bite was caused by him setting down on his hook. The biggest haul Peach made was an old boot full of mud. All in all, the affair was equal to a first-class Sunday school picnic.—Gridley Herald.

Deer Hunting in the Adirondacks.

We arrived in camp about high noon, after a four mile row and an eight mile carry over the mountains, from Fourth Lake, pretty well fagged, which was not at all strange as we had packed a boat, three guns, ammunition and blankets, all of the way, on an empty stomach, only to find upon our arrival, some one had got away with all the grub we had left cached. It was a clear case of hunt or go hungry, and we hunted. I jumped into the boat and rowed for a point about half way up the lake, while Bill, whistling to Yaller, (his pseudonym for our best dog Yellow Lightning) and Old Ben, started back in the woods, calling after me to look sharp as he would put a deer in "bilin" of that thar pint by the time I got thar, and sure enough I had hardly drawn up the boat and sat down when I heard a terrible crash in the flood jam just opposite and about a hundred yards back from the mouth of a small stream that opened into the lake. I crept to the edge of the bank and peered through the bushes just in time to see an enormous spike buck spring into the air from the opposite bank and disappear beneath the water, in a second he reappeared again, and struck out for a point just above me, followed by old Yaller, not more than fifty feet away. I waited until he had gotten well out into the lake, when I shoved off and started after him. He must have seen me at once, as he turned, made a big circle, and swam for a point on the same side he started from. He was in good condition to swim as he had not been running over ten minutes, and his shoulders showed well above the water as he churned it to foam, in his frantic efforts to escape. He was at least one third of a mile distant when I started, and as I glanced over my shoulder (after rowing a few moments), to see if I was gaining, I saw him slightly change his course and make for a spot that would bring him a little nearer to me, but where the water was very shallow for at least two hundred feet from shore, and I also realized that he would reach this shallow place before I could head him off. I redoubled my efforts for the next few moments, and again glanced toward him, and saw that he was but about fifty yards away, so giving the port oar an extra pull to swing the boat around, I picked up my Winchester and began to pump lead at him, firing in all eight shots before he ceased swimming. I attributed the number of shots I had to fire to the roughness of the lake, which kept the boat rocking violently, and also the facts that he was swimming fast and my being unnerved from the hard row, but when I pulled him into the boat I found seven bullet holes in his head and neck.

After picking up the dog I started back to camp, highly elated, with meat enough to last for some time. Although none too young, the spike was in fine condition, and would weigh at least one hundred and ninety pounds, and a thick, juicy venison steak, pan broiled, when you are extra hungry is not to be sneezed at. As I moved slowly along toward camp, smacking my lips in anticipation, suddenly I heard old Ben give tongue back on a long ridge running parallel with the shore of the lake, and knew at once, from a peculiarity in his bark, that he was running close to something. He kept on, down past camp, and I began to keep a lookout ahead, as the deer usually took to water, at that end of the lake, through another small stream just below camp, when all of a sudden I saw Bill run out of the trail back of the cabin, down to the shore, and begin to gesticulate wildly, pointing out into the lake. I stopped rowing, took a careful survey of the water, and saw the bushy antlers of another buck nearly across the lake, at that point a trifle over one-half mile in width, when Bill's "For God's sake hurry up" started me rowing again. The buck had reached the other shore by this time, and was standing just in the edge of the water, outlined against a huge wall of rock that rose forty feet above him, when suddenly Bill rushed into the cabin, and instantly appeared again carrying his large size Remington. Raising it, as he always did, to an angle of about forty-five degrees, he began slowly to lower it, and as I rested on my oars to watch the effect of the shot, he pulled the trigger. The sharp snap of the explosion had scarcely reached my ears when the buck bounded into the air, ran around and up the cliff, and disappeared in the forest. I felt sure he was badly hit from the way he handled himself, and, pulling to the shore, Bill took the oars, and we were soon across. Jumping out, followed by the dog, he ran up the bank, and just as Yellow Lightning broke loose I heard a splash back of me, and looking around saw the deer in the water. I finished him with a ball from the Winchester, and when we dragged him out on the sand saw where Bill's off-hand shot, with open sights, a trifle over half a mile, had bored him through and through just back of the fore shoulder.

Grass Valley Sportsman's Club Camp Stew.

The members of this flourishing club held their annual dove hunt and entertained their friends in a royal manner at a camp stew on Friday last. The gunners and their guests to the number of about one hundred turned out shortly after day-break for a ten mile spin to the camp grounds on the ranch of Mr. Van Slyke, near Indian Springs. A three-hours' tramp on the ranch sent everybody to camp for breakfast hungry as hunters. The birds were not quite as plentiful as in former years, but excellent sport was had.

After breakfast the monthly shoot of the club took place. M. P. Stone and Doctor Hays tied for first prize, which was decided by a freeze-out, Doctor Hayes coming off winner. M. L. Elliott, who was in excellent form, carried off the honors in the second team. The camp stew took place at four o'clock in the afternoon, George Fletcher presiding with his usual geniality. Geordie Johnson saw that everybody's plate was kept full, and Andy Stokes kept the camp kettle stirred to the proper point with a ramrod. Numbers of the neighboring farmers dropped in to partake of the hospitality of the sportsmen, and the club is to be congratulated on the excellent relations existing between it and the farmers. Many of the farmers are sportsmen themselves; and assist to preserve the game. The club reciprocates by endeavoring to protect the fences and crops from injury at the hands of careless and irresponsible gamers. The weather on Friday was simply perfect, the situation of the grounds exceedingly beautiful and the camp stew voted by all a great success. The only objection to the stew was made by Mr. George Fletcher, who complained because his capacity was only about a gallon, whereas the stew was good enough for a five-gallon man; but as Fletcher has been known to criticise heaven adversely, his carping did not create the discord which he hoped for. Coon Seaman was there, more sly and demure than his namesake, but not less fond of toothsome doves as sent steaming to the table by friend Stokes, in whose fame as a chef the whole region about Grass Valley finds its highest gratification.

Dr. I. W. Hays, Jr., is president of the club, and enjoys certain perquisites which make him wish he was dead—such as the cleaning of game for the stew; carrying of water a block up hill for the —— tails: pulling the traps while Ed. Roberts shoots blank cartridges at Macomber targets and bets on the gun; and other things. The Doctor has his quiet revenge, however, and has been known to win thirty cents in one day from Mr. Mitchell, Jim Shoemaker and other plungers on the blank cartridge proposition. Last year E. L. Craig, Jake Rittinger, Griswold and a lot of other sad-eyed quail shots from Auburn attended the camp stew, to the utter demoralization of all who came under the spell emanating from the jolly fellows. The wrecks left along the line of those who thought anybody could stand off Auburn, were maddening to contemplate. Fine strong men in their prime would wilt under Griswold's stories as emphasized by frequent visits to the club cellar, which by the way, is on the roof of a graceful bough house, like the ice which frigidly virtuous Fletcher claimed to have congealed by breathing upon spring water. Last year's stew was good, even the owl being tender; but that of last week was par excellence, the stew of all stews, as was evidenced by the consumption of a half dozen servings by connoiseur Hopper from Sierra City. The club expected the presence of Ramon E. Wilson and John M. Adams of San Francisco, famous stew-eaters, but neither could attend—there was much more stew than there would have been. Only one adjunct was lacking, and that the presence of some member of the staff of "our" excellent journal the Breeder and Sportsman, by preference the member most epicurean.

Bell Boy Still at the Top.

Bell Boy, the great son of Electioneer, bred at Palo Alto, leads the line in value, at $51,000 as a four-year-old. He now adorns and exalts a Kentucky breeding farm and stable at Lexington, peerless among the grandest of the turf in the famous blue grass section. Lately the sum of $40,000 was paid in Kentucky for Acolyte, five years old, son of Onward, dam Lady Alice by Almont, bred by Col. R. P. Pepper of South Elkington breeding farm. His record of 2:30 at three years is away behind Bell Boy's 2:26 at two years and 2:19¼ at three years. At five years the transplanted son of Electioneer is likely to further astonish the turf. It is gratifying to Californians that the Palo Alto colt leads in value and judged worth the highest priced of the Kentucky favorites.

Statistics and Probabilities.

A compiler of general and special statistics of this country is authority for the statement that the turf investments in the Western States aggregate about $20,000,000—in breeding farms and the value of the stock upon them, together with the value of the race tracks and buildings; and that in all direct employment is made for over 50,000 persons. He maintains that to all this is good profit every year by the increasing demand for fine horses at high prices. Besides, the public are every year more numerously patronizing the turf and its accessories, and devoting time, study and money to the pleasures and pride incident. In all this, perhaps, the statistician is below and not above the actual condition.

In another matter he is unquestionably correct. He predicts that "it is only a question of time when America will supply the world with horses." Yes, and with the best horses.

Europe is a battle-ground, constantly in the condition of a suffused volcano. The eruption and disastrous overflow is likely to happen at any moment, as with a cyclone, a waterspout, the bursting of a reservoir, or a conflagration. Horses for the enormous armies of the great powers of Europe cannot be supplied at home. They must be obtained abroad. The many large ocean steamers that daily ply between American and European ports and the multitude of commercial shipping offers the quickest service, and this country the readiest and by far the best supply. For cavalry the horse must be strong, powerful and of uncommon endurance, of good speed and mettle—of the qualities of the racer and the hunter. The American trotter has no equal in these qualities. The thoroughbreds are superior for officers. The horses for heavy work can be obtained in Europe readily enough; but for the war horse in the field, in regular service, the American high bred trotter is in every respect the best. Every farmer will eventually find greater profit in these horses than in his average crops. He should cease to breed common horses, and exercise discretion in breeding to good and fine blood, which always commands the highest price. The home demand is every year increasing beyond the home supply to satisfy it, and a prolonged war in Europe—likely to be precipitated at almost any moment—would cause a quickened and very profitable market. But even should peace prevail, the influx of Americans in Europe, growing in numbers every year, will create additional demands for the peerless American trotter. The horse market will also grow, and not abate or diminish.

State Fair Premiums.

The arrangements made for the State Fair for this year are very satisfactory. The Board of Directors and officers propose to increase interest in the fair, and have worked in good unison to that end. The fair will open Monday, September 9th, to close the 21st of the same month. The live stock premiums are well graded and liberal, to reward the meritorious and encourage breeders to better efforts. The several classes are well arranged.

Class I. is for thoroughbreds, with Directors Shafter and Boggs as Superintendents—this rule to govern—to-wit:

"In this class none will be permitted to compete but such as furnish a complete pedigree, tracing the entire line of descent to the English parent on the side of both sire and dam. The standard of authority for the pedigree of thoroughbred horses will be the English and American Stud Books."

Class II. embraces exclusively standard trotters, and Directors Hancock and Chase are the Superintendents The rules of the National Association govern, with a waiver for this year as to registration—published in full in the printed pamphlet.

Class III., with Directors Shippee and Singletary as Superintendents, is for roadsters. Horses that have trotted in a race will not be admitted to competition, or any that are entitled to the standard trotting class. All over two years to show in harness.

Class IV., for Cleveland bays and French coach horses.

Class V., carriage teams—none to be admitted of less than 16 hands height and 1,200 pounds weight, to match in style, action and symmetry of form—not necessarily in color; and to be shown to carriage.

Class VI., roadster teams, owned and used as such by one person—standard bred horses not excluded.

Class VII., horses of all work; standard horses excluded.

Classes VIII., IX., and X., draft horses, Norman, Percheron and Clydesdales; and Class XII., draft horses other than these. Class XII., saddle horses.

For all of these classes the premiums are liberal to encouragement and care of display—from $40 down to $5, agreeably to rank, grade, degree and age—enough to attract the attention of breeders and owners from every part of the State.

The speed programme is admirably prepared, from the first day, Thursday, September 12th, to the ninth and closing day, Saturday, September 21st, with ample purses for trotting, running and pacing. Also the following stakes: Trotting—The Occident, Two-year-old, Pacific Stallion, Three-year-old, Four-year-old. Running—Introduction, California Breeders, Daisy D., Capital City, Sunny Slope, Prize, California, Autumn, Shafter, Palo Alto, Del Paso, California Annual, California Derby, Nighthawk and La Rue.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN will devote attention to the State Fair programme every week from this until the close. The outlook is gratifying, with prospect of a very successful Fair time and splendid turf performances all through.

The Two-Minute Horse.

The Indianapolis Sportsman has a correspondent at Connersville, in that State, who seems confident that "the two-minute horse is born," and belongs in that State—a bay colt, sire Anteros, dam Nettie by Blue Bull, and a good line all through. The colt is a pacer. Willing to concede and hopeful of best results for the Indiana colt, the impression is rooted that the breaker of the record of Maud S. is now a California two-year-old, and in good time this State will produce the colt to show the world square trotting of the mile inside of two minutes, by enough to make that the record.

Sunol is yet to further surprise the trotting world. Bell Boy has still to speed his fastest mile; the blood of Stamboul and Wilkes will not sink, and there are others to hear from in appropriate time. It required forty years from 2:26½ to 2:08¾. Two minutes cannot be reasonably expected right away. The editor of the Sportsman remarks that he would rather own the Connersville colt than the best quarter section of land in Indiana. A safer investment would be in a California colt that would command the best city lot in Indianapolis.

As to Park Commissioners.

Generalities are easily commanded. Specialties require special qualifications. The Golden Gate Park has its specialties, its splendid and entrancing generalities. The appointments to the Board of Park Commissioners have been made to the general situation. An especial quality now exists. A corresponding appointment to the Board of Commissioners is lacking. Within two years a speed track has been added to the enticements and delights of the park. It is a new track, exclusive of, and in no respect interfering with the drives and bridle paths and walks of pedestrians. It has been made and paid for by the private subscription of public-spirited citizens. It is more than a mile in length and one hundred feet wide—level and smooth for an even mile, straight and of yielding clay, six inches deep, to assure easy and safe footing for the horses. It is intended solely as a pleasure speeding track for rapid driving, but has none of the accessories of the racing track to which the fastidious make objection—such as betting, track habitues, saloons and gaming. It is as the park of a gentleman to which his worthy friends are admitted, to indulge in the animating sport of the exemplary turf. The requirement is—a Commissioner upon the Board who has aptitude for this pleasing addition to the park drives; one conversant with the requirements of the speeding track, in its preparation and complete equipment, with that inclination and fondness for the sport which enlists interest; and who enjoys the respect and possesses the confidence of the patrons and the public who participate. It happens that among the very worthy gentlemen who are Park Commissioners, there is none thus specially qualified. The time is opportune for an appointment that will suit. It is a fine old maxim—noblesse oblige. It is current with gentlemen. On the commission are two gentlemen, eminently qualified in the generalties, yet somewhat lacking in the special quality. Positions of importance in public employment are not wholly incompatible with popular duties—such as are incumbent upon a Park Commissioner. Nevertheless, the duty is better executed by one who is bound first to acquit the official duties. Then comes the special fitness for the place. Commissioner Hammond is U. S. Surveyor General in this State.

General Dimond has been appointed Superintendent of the Branch Mint in this city. These are very responsible public positions, and absorb the time, as they command the unceasing attention of the incumbents. It is suggested that these gentlemen are likely to retire from the Park Commission, so as to devote their time and attention to their official duties, in order that appointments shall be made, to succed to their places, of gentlemen specially qualified for the new order of things at the Park, with reference to the speeding track. With no word of complaint, without personal feeling in the least, but solely in contemplation of the requirement of means to the end, the suggestion of this order of change and succession is discussed and submitted. The whole matter centers in the fact that on the Park Commission there should be a fitting representative for the new speeding track.

P., San Francisco.

Will you kindly state who is the owner of the filly Gorgo, and settle a wager thereby. A wagered that George Hearst is his owner. B claims that Palo Alto is the owner, and Hearst controls her running qualities. Who wins?

Answer.—B. wins.

A subscriber asks us for the pedigree of a horse called Dixie. His dam was by Bucephalus; second dam by Kentucky Whip. Can any of our readers throw any light on the subject as to the sire, etc.?

R. G.

Please give me the breeding of the Ralston Mare?

Answer.—The Ralston Mare was by Easton's David Hill, out of Dolly McNeil by Hoagland's Messenger. Dolly was also the dam of California Maid and King David.

T. R., Los Angeles.

Is El Rio Rey thoroughbred?

Answer.—The stud book, which is the authority, would show that he is not.

Marion, the dam of El Rio Rey, was sired by Malcolm, a very speedy son of the great Bonnie Scotland; his second dam, Maggie Mitchell, was a daughter of imp. Yorkshire; his third dam was Charmer by imp. Glencoe; his fourth dam was Betsey Malone by Stockholder; his fifth dam was by Potomac; his sixth dam was by imp. Diomed, and his seventh dam by Pegasus. It is through Potomac, however, that El Rio Rey receives his cold blood. Potomac was by imp. Diomed, first dam Fairy by Pegasus; second dam Nancy McCullock by Young Yorick (a cold-blooded horse); third dam by a half-blooded horse called Silver Eye, fourth dam a common wagon horse; fifth dam a common plough mare called the Estray Mare. Potomac was a very celebrated race-horse, but few race-horses descended from him, although he was bred to some of the best mares in Virginia. It is true that young Yorick, who brings the first cold blood into El Rio Rey's pedigree, was many times removed from the great colt, but for all that his breeding is not up to the thoroughbred standard as adopted in this country, and he cannot technically rank as a thoroughbred if the data furnished by the American Stud Book are to be relied upon.

A Subscriber.

Give pedigree of Mambrino Rattler. Has he any produce in the 30 list? If so, who are they? Where was he bred?

Answer.—Mambrino Rattler 1356, foaled 1872, by Ericsson, son of Mambrino Chief, dam by Rattler, son of Stockbridge Chief; second dam by Roebuck, a Canadian pacer; third dam by Halpin, son of Medoc; fourth dam by Seldom; fifth dam by Stockholder, out of a mare brought to Lexington, Ky., by Joseph Boreman. Bred by Richard Downing, Fayette Co., Ky. Last owners Ruberts & Wolcott, Howell, Mich. Has no produce in 2:30 list.

Subscriber.

Will you kindly answer the following: Did Spokane's rider wear a blue jacket in the American-Derby? On what dates do the following horses run next, and in what stakes: Prince Royal, Spokane, Don Jose, Salvator, Los Angeles.

Hope it will not be too much trouble to ascertain these questions in time for your next issue.

Answer.—Blue is the Montana Stable's color, so it is probable that Kiley wore blue. You will have to write to the owners to find out when they propose to start their horses.

Petaluma reader.

If a gentleman nominates a colt in a stake, and should die before the race takes place, can his executor or any other person, start the colt in the same stake by paying whatever balance may be due.

Answer.—Both the American and National Associations have a rule which covers the case. The following is the "National" which is similar to the "American" rule. Rule 10 section 1, all engagements, including obligations for entrance fees, shall be void upon the decease of either party or horse; so far as they shall effect either party or horse; but forfeits, also matches made "play or pay" shall not be effected by the death of a horse.

How To Tell Good Oats.

Good oats are clean, hard, dry, sweet, heavy, plump, full of flour, and rattle like shot. They have a clean and almost metallic lustre. Each oat in a well grown sample is nearly of the same size. There are but few small or imperfect grains. The hard pressure of the nail on an oat should leave little or no mark. The kernel when pressed between the teeth, should clip rather than tear. The skin should be thin. The size of the kernel will be less in proportion as the skin is thick. The color of the oat is not very material, but white oats are generally thinner in the skin than black. Again, black oats will grow on inferior soils. Short, pump oats are preferable to large, long grains. Bearded oats must have an excess of husk. Oats are not necessarily bad because they are thin-skinned or bearded; but they must contain a less amount of flour per bushel than thin-skinned oats without beards.

Raising the Weights.

The prejudices of many of the old-time owners and trainers in favor of light weights has been overcome by a square consideration of facts. Weight never hurt a horse, and under the new schedule, experience on the part of a jockey and the skill which comes with it will no longer be at a discount. At present the mere apprentice for jockeyship honors has the odds all in his favor as against the older man, and thus the spur of ambition to excel, to become perfect, to acquire the mysteries of "hands," judgment of pace, and starting well and quickly, without worrying your horse and the official with the flag till past endurance, was lacking.

The few pounds that have been added all around will confer a positive boon, and in two-year-old races particularly will the good effect soon be seen. There are more two-year-olds ruined by inexperienced boys every year than one has any idea of. Every racing stable can furnish one with a long list of instances where youngsters with undoubted speed had their courage broken, their tempers ruined, their mouths spoiled or their joints wrenched by hot-headed lightweight jockeys. We do not think the new rule will be a panaca for all this, but it will go a great way toward diminishing existing evils, and this, after all, is a great step in the right direction, and if only boys were apprenticed hard and fast, as they are in England, and afterwards had to take out a license, there would undoubtedly be a still greater improvement in both riders and horses.

The American Derby.

Last Saturday the Californians all left the track disappointed and heart-broken, both the Pacific Coast representatives having failed, but though beaten Sorrento made such a gallant fight that the irrepressible Dan has yet great hopes of waving his white hat as a signal of victory in some big race. The start was delayed by Proctor Knott for a short time.

After three false starts they were sent away to a good start, but before they had gone a furlong Proctor Knott had assumed the lead, while Spokane was trailing in the extreme rear. Knott gradually increased his advantage, and at the end of the first half mile, that is passing the grand stand, he was leading by three lengths and yet under a steady pull. The others were fairly well bunched behind, with Spokane still bringing up the rear. These positions were not materially changed until the back stretch was reached, which completed six furlongs of the race. At this time the pace quickened and Riley began to better his position on Spokane. Half way down the backstretch Knott had about two lengths the best of it. Don Jose second, and the others close up, Spokane being now fourth.

Knott's stride was now beginning to weaken, and when the head of the home stretch was reached he was barely half a length in front, Retrieve being now second and Spokane third, but all still pretty well bunched. Before the eighth pole was reach Knott was hopelessly beaten, while the leaders were now Retrieve and Spokane, with Sorrento coming up strong next the rails, on the inside, all the others out of the race. For a few jumps Retrieve had her head in front, but just inside the eighth pole Spokane forged to the front, while Sorrento, coming very strong, passed Retrieve near the string, but could not reach Spokane, who won by a scant length, Sorrento the same distance before Retrieve. Once Again was fourth, Long Dance fifth, Don Jose sixth, Proctor Knott being pulled up inside the eighth pole, a distressed and fagged out horse.

The fractional time was: Quarter, 26¾; half, 52¾; six furlongs, 1:19; mile, 1:45½; mile and a quarter, 2:14; mile and a half, 2:41¼.

The value of the stake to the winner is a little over $18,000. Kiley rode Spokane, Taral, Sorrento, and Isaac Lewes was on Retrieve, who is the full sister of Montrose.

Spokane was bought for $250 when a yearling, being then described as a weak, puny looking youngster. The change in his appearance has evidently been great, for now he is said to be the ideal type of a race-horse. As the thoroughbred is described he is a chestnut, with a blaze face and two white stockings behind. To a trotting horseman he would be a strawberry roan. Nine horsemen out of ten would call him a roan, and that description would perfectly fit his hindquarters. Standing sixteen hands high, possessing a big frame, fine bone, and an abundance of muscle, and being as clean cut as a greyhound from muzzle to heels, at a glance he would fill the eye of a connoisseur. In action he preserves all the beauty he presents in repose.

Our breeders should learn to distinguish between "standard bred" and "standard" animals. No horse (even though he be sired by a 2:08¾ dam) is standard until he be registered. The rules of entry to standard rank may be changed at any time, hence a horse that may be to-day standard bred or standard by performance, if not registered, may be left out in the cold to-morrow.

Cream of Irish Setter Blood.

A high-class champion-bred, thoroughly broken, all red, 3-year-old bitch, litter sister to the well known Birmingham and Crystal Palace prize winner Killaloe, and equally handsome. Also two brace of youngsters by Frisco (the famous prize winner and sire of the Field Trial winner Drogheda) ex Maureen by Chieftain (sire of Killaloe, Kincora, Colonel II, etc.) ex Kathleen by Talmerston II, ex Sal, niece to the once noted Plunket. In these puppies are combined the blood judiciously crossed of the three great families of Irish Setters, whose progenitors have been alike successful on the bench and in the field. Rare in form, grand in coat and color, with absolutely perfect heads, they should prove a desirable addition to the kennels of the West. Particulars, prices, and full pedigree from

CORRESPONDENCE.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The second payment in the following stakes will be due on Monday, July 1st, viz., Palo Alto Trotting Stake, for two-year-olds; Santa Clara County Trotting Stake, for two-year-olds; Garden City Trotting Stake, for three-year-olds; District Stallion Stake, for Santa Clara County. G. H. BRAGG, Secretary.

SAN JOSE, Cal., June 19, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In your last issue you published new 30 list of trotters, giving pedigree of g g What Ho as unknown. He was distinctly entered as g g What Ho, aged, by A. W. Richmond, dam by Overland, which is correct. Yours, etc., E. A. DECAMP.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 18, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Knowing your desire is to benefit the dear public as well as yourselves, permit me to suggest a remedy, to cure the apathy existing among our people towards fairs. My idea is to create healthy, happy competition among the districts, such as we find in Kentucky. The attendance is the key note of success, large gate receipts insure good premiums, and that means good displays. To insure the above results, the people and the directors, or management must become intimately acquainted which can only be done by the community knowing the facts. A common expression has been made: "Oh, you made lots of money last year;" "never were such gates." "I'm busy, plenty without me." Let the Board publish the actual gate statistics, dead heads, employes, etc., such as is done by the St. Louis Fair Association, Cincinnati Industrial Exposition and Kansas City Fair. Then by urging the necessity of at least one holiday during Fair week, we can soon vie with the famous "Blue Grass" fairs of Kentucky.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., June 22, 1889. E. A. DE CAMP.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Let me call the attention of the thoughtful breeder, and sportsman if you like, to the roadster class in State Fair at Sacramento for 1889. See page 27 of the last premium list. First, no animal which has trotted in a race is eligible. If the restriction stopped here, I would say amen! But it does not. It goes on to say furthermore, no animal entitled to entry in the standard class is eligible in the roadster class. Does this last restriction bar the intelligent breeder or does it offer a premium on ignorance? or does it expect trotters from pacers and runners? Is the roadster class formed to spur the intelligent breeder to no longer breed to standard performers, but to "go outside" into the thoroughbred and pacing ranks to get from the first out-cross a trotter and a roadster?

Let us see what you can not enter in this exclusive class (Roadster) because it is standard. Of course a record of any kind is a bar unless gained outside of a race.

Next, no stallion which has sired two 2:30 performers. Next, no stallion which has one 2:30 performer, and is besides the sire of two 2:35 performers, or has a sire or dam that is already a standard animal.

Next, any mare which has produced a 2:30 performer. Next, any of her progeny by a standard horse, male or female or gelded.

Next, the female progeny of a standard horse when out of a mare not herself standard, but one whose dam is standard.

These are the animals you may not call roadsters, nor enter as such.

Now let us see what is a roadster, (lusus naturæ) a freak of nature, an escape from intelligent breeding. 1st: Any stallion or gelding by a standard horse, but not from a standard mare, or any stallion out of a standard mare, but not by a standard horse. Once in a while a trotter is obtained, (it is not the rule, as Scotland by Bonnie Scotland, out of the prepotent standard dam Waterwitch) six in the 2:30 list. 2d: Any female by a standard horse, but not out of a standard mare. The female progeny of a standard horse when not out of a mare whose dam was standard.

Last, but not least, when you turn your back on the intelligent breeding and development of a hundred years, you throw away the experience of all time. If you make up your mind to help the State Fair to create a roadster from the beginning, that is, commence over again, (not throw physic to the dogs, but performance and pedigree). Shall we do this in the light of the nineteenth century? Shakespeare says, "The spirit of the times shall teach us speed." But the roadster class must not have too much speed, and what it does have it must get on the outside of approved courses, because they are standard. It seems to me the premium list in the roadster class at the California State Fair and at all other fairs which exclude standard bred trotters from competition, aim to restore the dung-hill trotter, a barnyard fowl.

The age wants the best. No argument is stronger to breed a trotting stallion to a thoroughbred mare in order to get a trotting colt than that you get the faultless form and high courage of the blooded horse. If the thoroughbred was made standard, as he easily could be, and is by inherent right, where could a breeder go with certainty to get symmetry, speed, courage, and style for roadsters? Why send to Russia for a consignment of Orloff trotters.

OLEMA, MARIN CO., June 25, 1889.

Peculiarities of Pony Racing.

A curious question has arisen in English racing circles in connection with pony racing. In the early part of the year a racing filly, not up to Newmarket form, was let to an undergraduate for pony racing, in which she proved herself to be about the best in England, winning all she started for. Here comes in the extraordinary part of the business. She was entered in all those races as a three-year-old, though as a matter of fact she is only two years old, and the result is that the Pony Racing Club have warned the enthusiastic young owner off, and the mare is disqualified forever. The owner is now breathing law, and he, in turn, is to be made a defendant by the breeder on the score of a breach of contract. It might be urged that there were not sufficient grounds for the warning off, insomuch as though it would undoubtedly be a crime to run a three-year-old in a two-year-old race and thus get a good advantage, to run a two-year-old in a three-year-old race would be to gain the very reverse of an advantage. To this, however, it is replied, and with great force, "Yes; but if the filly had been kept until she was three years old she would probably have grown, and thus, being over the stipulated standard in height, she would not have been qualified to compete." The case is, we believe, before the Jockey Club.

"Over the jumps" will be reintroduced again at Brighton Beach this summer. The sod walls are being put up, and before the season closes many a job will be put up also.

ATHLETICS.

Athletic Sports and Other Pastimes.

EDITED BY ARPHIPTUS.

SUMMARY.

The local athletes are jubilant over the bright prospects in store for them. The Directors of the California Athletic Club have leased, for ten years, the training grounds connected with the park at Harbor View, and are having them fitted up in good shape for their promising young out-door athletes. The Directors of the Olympic Club have purchased a piece of property in the neighborhood of the Haight Street baseball grounds, and on it they will build first class training quarters for their out-door men. The wheelmen are busy getting into trim for the big race-meet which comes off at Stockton on Thursday next. The oarsmen are training hard for the coming regatta, and the professional long distance and amateur short distance runners are practicing daily for the races, which will come off under the auspices of the Scottish Thistle Club on the 4th.

RUNNERS, WALKERS, JUMPERS, ETC.

A. H. Lean has recovered from his recent illness, and will train hard for the initial games of the California Athletic Association. Lean will, no doubt, make good records in the shot-putting and jumping events.

McArthur will try to knock off a few seconds from the coast record for the mile run, on September 9th.

Cooley, the well known amateur long distance runner, it is said, will soon become a member of the Olympic Club. The Directors of the California Club acted a little too hastily in erasing his name from their roll of amateur members.

Young Moffet, of the U. C., with steady and judicious practice should, in the next couple of years, lower the American records for the running high and long jumps, and short distance hurdle events.

W. A. Beatty, of the U. C., states that he intends racing in spiked shoes in future. Beatty has already covered a mile under five minutes, using canvas slippers, and going flat-footed. With proper shoes Mr. Beatty should closely press the coast record.

Two prominent amateur members of the California Club have been notified that their names have been dropped from the membership roll. They were not informed for what reason, but from an officer of the club it has been ascertained that the two athletes in question violated the rules of the club by competing in the late championship meeting held under the auspices of the P. C. A. A. A. One of the two deposed members will, no doubt, be re-instated, as he was ignorant of the rules of the club, but the other one will probably not apply for reinstatement, as the case against him is too strong.

At the Scottish Thistle Club's games, which will take place on Thursday next, the two chief events will be the one mile run for professionals and the half mile run for amateurs. The winner of the former race will receive $50, the second man $30, and the third man $20, making a total of $100. For the amateur race three very handsome medals will be awarded. Doubtless such rare inducements will attract a large field of competitors.

The handicap out-door meeting of the Olympic Club, which will be held at the club's new grounds on Admission Day, will certainly bring out all the available athletes on the Pacific Coast, and a gala day may be looked forward to. The athletes who were shy about contesting for championship honors will enter with the expectation of receiving liberal handicaps, and the scratch men will be kept pretty busy.

The Olympic Club should include a seven mile walk on their programme for that day, in order to afford the ex-English champion, James Jarvis, an opportunity to lower the American record for that distance. Mr. Jarvis feels confident that he can easily perform the task.

John Purcell is seriously thinking about retiring from the athletic world for the present, as business matters render it impossible for him to train. Mr. Purcell felt very much hurt over some remarks that were made relative to his performances at the late championship meeting, and he now vows that he will never again compete in any games unless he has a chance to train before hand. It is a great pity that Mr. Purcell cannot afford time to train, for when in good condition he is an athletic prodigy.

It is high time that the 'varsity boys were holding an open out-door meeting. The members of the U. C. are well able to hold their own against all comers, and should give some attention to the suggestion.

When the new training grounds of the California Amateur Athletic Club are finished periodical handicap meetings, open only to members, will be held, and valuable prizes will be presented to the different winners. The idea is a capital one, and will no doubt help to largely increase the amateur membership of the club.

The half mile record of L. E. Myers has been broken at last. On June 21st Walter C. Dohm of Princeton College covered the distance in 1 minute 55½ seconds. Myers' record was 1 minute 55 2-5 seconds, made at New York October 3d, 1885. Several well-known athletes who saw Dohm run say that in time he will lower the world's record, which is 1 minute, 53½ seconds, made by F. Hewett in New Zeland September 21st, 1871.

The P. C. A. A. A. should compel all clubs within its jurisdiction to hold an open out-door meeting once a year. The inducements that are held out to athletes on the Pacific Coast are entirely too meagre to tempt them to keep in constant practice, and without constant practice, it must not be expected that our athletes can make as good records as some of the Eastern cracks, who are in constant training. If the P. C. A. A. A. would adopt this rule, the athletic meetings would be more frequent and the athletes would find more inducements to train oftener.

The athletes who succeeded in winning prizes at the late championship meeting of the P. C. A. A. A., will be glad to learn that the medals will be distributed on the occasion of the Catch-as-catch-can wrestling tournament which will take place at the Olympic Club rooms the third week in July.

THE WHEELMEN.

Loud and many are the complaints that are being made against the managers of the Haight Street Grounds for their negligence in keeping the track in good condition. Several wheelmen say that if the track was kept in good, or even fair condition, they would be only too glad to pay a liberal fee to be allowed the privilege of training there.

Quite a number of wheelmen are away on their vacation, and in all parts of the country straggling riders may be met with.

The meeting which will come off at Stockton on Thursday next promises to be a big success. It is expected that riders from all over the State will participate in the proceeding. The following officers of the day will serve: Marshall of the day, Edwin Mohrig; Referee, Robert M. Welch; Judges, Geo. H. Strong, C. C. Moore, C. P. Funda; Time-keepers, E. W. Adams, W. H. McKee, Edwin Mohrig; Umpires, B. W. Moore, F. W. Leadbetter; Clerks of the Course, E. W. Pierson, E. Bartholemew; Scorers, C. L. Angell, D. Weaver; Starter, F. E. Richardson.

The next regular meeting of the Bay City Wheelmen will be held on Monday evening next, July 1st. Nominations for the "B. C. W." ticket for League officers will be made, and a full attendance is earnestly requested.

IN THE SURF.

At the different surf-bathing resorts it has been learned that business has been rather dull during the past few months. The weather lately has been anything but pleasant, and the cold and raw air has kept the bathers from indulging in their favorite pastime. However, we may expect a warm spell during the months of August, September and October.

From all accounts Camp Capitola is fast becoming a very popular bathing resort, and persons that have been in the habit of spending their summer months at Santa Cruz, say that they prefer bathing at Capitola in preference to the former place. The surf at Santa Cruz is too rough, and only good swimmers should bathe there.

There are several good swimmers amongst the members of the C. A. A., and when the new training grounds at Harbor View are complete, the New Montgomery street athletes will have an excellent chance to indulge in their maritime pastime.

When the Sutter Street Railroad Company extend their cable line to Black Point it is understood that a corporation will erect an immense bathing establishment on the beach close to where the cars will stop. The bath will be built on the most improved plan, and the smallest child can without danger of drowning derive the benefits of a surf bath.

The proprietors of the Shelter Cove baths situated at the foot of Mason street, will offer some handsome medals for amateur contests some time next month.

HOOK AND LINE.

There was some excellent fishing at Point Tiburon on last Sunday, and several large catches of rock cod were reported.

The number of ladies that visit that favorite fishing place is indeed very large, and the boat men over there assert that the fair sex are just as adept with the line as any of their male companions.

It is very strange indeed that people who visit Tiburon almost every Sunday are not aware of the fact that good fishing may be had within a stone's throw of the boat landing. The majority of the fish seekers imagine that the further they go the better their chance of success will be. This is a very grave delusion to labor under, for within a quarter of a mile of the depot the best fishing may be found. If people would only take the trouble to test the accuracy of this statement, they might possibly save much time and labor.

Fishing at Tiburon and Sancilcto should be good to-morrow, for the tide will be favorable all day.

Bad fishing was reported all along the wharves in this city and at Oakland on Sunday last. To-morrow will, on account of the tide, prove a more profitable day to fishermen.

Anglers who travelled to Crystal Springs last Sunday experienced an unusually bad day's fishing, and many returned home sadly disappointed.

AT THE OARS.

The action of the 4th of July Committee in refusing to allow a sum of money for regatta purposes is greatly condemned. The special committee appointed to solicit subscriptions are meeting with glorious success, and without the aid of the municipal authorities we will have a big regatta after all. Large money prizes will be offered for the professional events, while valuable medals will be given for the amateur races. Several prominent amateur and professional oarsmen will compete in the races, and a fine day's sport may be expected.

Henry Peterson has been engaged as trainer by the Salt Lake Rowing Club.

The oarsmen have been very busy through the week getting up their muscle for the coming Fourth.

CLUB JOTTINGS.

The Directors of the California Athletic Club have leased the training grounds connected with the Harbor View Park for a term of ten years, and they have shown much discretion in making such a suitable selection. The new grounds will be finished in about two weeks. A seven lap track is being built, and when complete will be faster than the track at the 14th and Centre Street Grounds, Oakland. Mr. Philo Jacoby who is superintending the improvements, says that he will leave no stone unturned towards making the grounds the most complete of the kind on the Pacific Coast. The fact that the park is situated so close to the sea makes the location the more acceptable, for salt water baths are highly commendable for training purposes.

It is rumored that the newly organized Pacific Athletic Club will make application for admission to the California Amateur Athletic Association. The club has the names of several good athletes on its roll, and would prove a valuable acquisition to the C. A. A. A.

Whenever a member of the C. A. A. A. breaks a record he will receive a special medal.

The C. A. C. has leased the armory across the way from their present head-quarters, and in it the future exhibitions of the club will be held. Seats to accommodate 2500 people will be erected, so that the members will henceforward be able to witness the contests in perfect comfort. The club will also, from time to time, give amateur boxing and wrestling tournaments, to which the fair sex will be invited, and the directors are fully determined to place the club on a social level with the Olympic and other prominent organizations.

Owing to the split up between the P. C. A. A. A. and the C. A. A. A. the number of competitors that will take part in the athletic meetings of the future will be considerably less than in the past. The way matters stand at present leaves the athletes divided into two bodies, and when one-half is taking part in an athletic meeting the other half will be scattered amongst the audience watching the performances of their rivals. It is really too bad that the athletes cannot come to a happy understanding and once more join hands. The only way in future that one faction can claim superiority over the other will be through the records made by the different athletes.

First dam Fisher (dam of Clara Wilkes, 2:29¾, trial 2:25) by American Clay, 34, sire of Granville, 2:26; Maggie Briggs, 2:27; Ella Clay, 2:27½; and the dams of Executor, 2 24½, Ranchero, 2:23½; Judge Hawser, 2:24¾; Ambassador, 2:25, and nine others in 2 30; second dam by Wilson's Snow Storm, sire of Jim Irving, 2:23; third dam by Paddie Burns, thoroughbred.

Onward, 1411, is one of the noted sires of to-day. In 1887 he placed seven performers in the 2:30 list, including Houri, three-year-old record 2:19¾; while in 1888 he still further sustains his reputation by adding nine of his sons and daughters to the list. Onward combines the blood of the two great trotting families, Hambletonian 10 and Mambrino Chief 11, and derives his speed inheritance direct through the greatest son of the one family, and the greatest daughter of the other.

Onward's dam was Dolly (the dam of Director, 2:17, and Thorndale, 2:22½), by Mambrino Chief. Dolly was one of the greatest speed-producing brood mares that ever lived. George Wilkes stands at the head of the list of sires of fast trotters with 65 performers with records of 2:30 or better, and the combination of these two great producers will breed on with absolute certainty.

WILKES PASHA will make the season of 1889 at the stables of the undersigned, at the Trancas Bridge, two miles north of Napa, on the Soda Spring Road.

TERMS,

For the season ending July 1, 1889, $35 in U. S. gold coin.

Alfalfa pasturage $4 per month; natural grass $2.50 per month.

Every attention and care will be given to mares, but no liabilities assumed for accidents or escapes.

BILLIARDS.

The undoubted hold that billiard playing has taken on the better classes here must be gratifying to lovers of the game and the makers of billiard furniture.

All of our leading clubs have had one or more tournaments during the winter. The San Francisco Verein will hold a tournay next month under London Club rules, and have engaged Prof. McCleery, under whose personal direction the games will be played. Ladies will attend. Speaking of ladies as players, we are assured that in the near future their performances will prove an attraction in the billiard news.

M. Vigneau, the French expert, is giving fancy exhibitions at the Exposition in Paris, and proving an immense attraction, so much so, that the Grand Cafe has engaged Eugene Carter, our American "Gene," to exhibit nightly there. Standing room is at a premium. The papers of the gay capital, give illustrations of the wonders performed by both of the above named experts.

The Mechanic's Fair and the State Fair, last year each made a good move, which proved a very attractive feature in engaging the services of our local champion McCleery, whose fancy shots, by the way, are pronounced by those competent to judge, superior to any of the great players.

Physicians for years have recommended billiards, and no house or home is really complete without a table.

Summer Pruning.

[WRITTEN FOR THE BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.]

Now is the time to pinch back trees and take off all superfluous growth. The object of summer pruning is to throw a tree into bearing by pinching off the ends of the branches, thus throwing what sap remains into those that are left on the trees. Prunes can stand a pretty severe pruning in summer; all the straight woody side branches can be taken off close to the main limbs, and the fruit spurs of considerable length cut off to within three or four inches, while they can be topped the same as in winter, thus making two growths in one season. This will not injure the tree at all. Other trees of some kinds will not stand too severe a pruning in summer, but prunes are hardy enough to stand considerable. If it does not seem desirable to cut back so close, just top them off, and this will give a good stocky growth to prune on the following winter. The side spurs will throw out new growth, and these in turn should be kept pinched back, through the summer and fall. Young cherry trees may be made to bear, what would be called heavy crops, when only four or five feet high, if they are kept pinched back. Peach and apricot trees do not need much summer pruning, generally having enough fruit buds without any forcing. It is a good idea though, to take off the side growths that are not needed to shape the tree, this can be done with the shears, and leaves the trees in good shape, to be easily handled, when the regular pruning season arrives. June is a good month to summer prunes in, around the Bay counties, while in earlier parts of the State, it should generally be performed sooner, regulating that as the growth of the trees may demand. Trees over five or six years old do not require this pinching back process. Of course they should not be allowed to bear too young, but by thoroughly summer pruning every year after they are two years of age, they are prepared and forced into fruit buds, so that, when they are old enough to stand a fair crop, they yield immense returns for the care bestowed on them. Foaled 1879, by Grinstead or Thad Stevens, dam Katy Pease; second dam Minnie Mansfield by imp. Glencoe; third dam Allegrante by imp. Young Truffle.

DESCRIPTION.

JUDGE McKINSTRY is a bright bay with black points, 15¾ hands in height, of a conformation combining power and speed. His breeding is one that cannot be excelled. The fam lies on both sides being noted for their gameness and fleetness. Speakin of JUDGE McKINSTRY, Matt Storn, the well-known trainer, says: "He is the fastest race-horse I ever saw on the Sacramento track. He has shown me trials that were marvelous, one especially of a mile and a quarter that was ahead of the present record." He was started in several races when not in condition to run, and even then developed an amount of speed that is characteristic of the noted families from which he descends. His performances are too well known to need repetition here Good judges of horses at the positively that there can be no doubt of his sire, as he is a perfect picture of Grinstead, but rule compels us to name both sires.

REMARKS.

The intention of the Directors of this Association is to make this place a central point for racing in California. They recognize the fact, that in order to do so, they have got to give large purses in order to get first-class horses. Knowing they have as well-appointed grounds and as good a track as there is in California, having first-class stabling and the best Club House on any track in California, and plenty of fine grass for horses the whole year, and by dealing justly and fairly with the horsemen, we hope to receive their patronage. We are situated about half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles, which makes it an accessible point for the patronage of the whole State.

Being aware that the responsibility, to a great extent, of the Association, is not known outside of our own State, we herewith attach a certificate, signed by the Banks of this City, as to the responsibility of the Association.

We, the undersigned, do certify that the Fresno Fair Grounds Association is perfectly responsible, and its statements are reliable:

LEWIS LEACH, President Farmer's Bank.
O. J. WOODWARD, President First National Bank.
LOUIS EINSTEIN, President Bank of Central California.
H. D. COLSON, President Fresno National Bank.
W. H. MCKENZIE, Cashier Fresno Loan & Savings Bank.

Richard Cole

OSSIDINE

Results obtained at the well-known Kalamazoo Farm.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Spring Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Price $3.00 per Large Bottle,

A. P. BUSH & CO., 149 Pearl Street, Boston, Mass.

Sole Agents for United States and Canada.

Owner of Eole, St Saviour, Eolist, etc, says: I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

LONG BRANCH, July 28, 1888. F. GEBHARD.

The "L. C. Smith" Guns.

As PRIZE WINNERS we challenge any other make of Gun to make a showing like the following:

All Previous Records Broken.

Never before were 100 live pigeons killed straightly in a similar match under same conditions, until the L. C. SMITH GUN was made and did it. In the hands of Mr. Al Bandle, of the firm of Bandle Arms Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, this wonderful score was made. Capt. A. H. Bogardus scoring with a 12-gauge L. C. Smith in the match against Bandle, the very high score of 95. A remarkable score with a 12-guage.

——OFFICIAL SCORE——

Made in the match at 100 live pigeons, Hurlingham rules, barring gauge of gun, between Capt. A. H. Bogardus, of Elkhart, Ill., and Al Bandle, of Cincinnatti, Ohio, on Independent Gun Club grounds, Cincinnati, Ohio, Christmas Day, December 25, 1888:

Turf Reminiscences.

WRITTEN FOR THE BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

From my summering retreat I make occasion to scribble a screed to say that the mention in your paper of last week of good old Hiram Woodruff, and some others of the trotting turf of my early remembrance, was to me very interesting reading, and so it was, I doubt not, to any who knew Woodruff and can recall that period. Trotting was then comparatively in its infancy. A mile in three minutes was fast—anything quicker was enough to make the horse a reputation as a "goer." Hiram Woodruff was recognized authority among sporting men. He was a big-hearted man and fond of fine horses and good company. But I have since seen so much of improvement in the methods of training and handling trotters that I am brought to the conclusion that the old Hiram was faulty in some of his ideas about horses, and particularly of trotters. He was too heavy himself to ride, but he used to contend that better speed could be got out of a trotter under the saddle than in harness. His idea of training was away behind the practise of this time. It was no use to try to argue with him. He was good natured and easy to get along with on almost any other subject; but when talking horse he had no patience for difference of opinion and would not allow contradiction. If he didn't know it all, he felt confident that he knew more about training and trotting than any other living man, and nearly everybody deferred to him, so that he was confirmed in his habit of oracular expression on turf matters. It was a symposium of real delight to listen to Hiram when he was in the talking humor among the companions he liked and used to meet at the places he was most at home. Mr. John I. Snediker's, on the Jamaica road was one of these, and a famous place it was for sporting men and good fellows. Among the habitues used to be old Cale Weeks, the circus man—rich and generous and full of fun—given to playing practical jokes on his friends and everybody. His country seat at Jamaica was a home of charming hospitality, comfort and good cheer.

His two sons were chips of the old block. A week with them at Petchogue, fishing, boating and frolicking, was a treat not to be forgotten. Old Cale was a frequent visitor at John I's, as the house was familiarly known, and there one was likely to meet every afternoon or evening the "bloods" of New York, the best class of sporting men, and the grand old "bucks" of Knickerbocker line. June Stagg, the best known "blood" of New York, was often there. He was a blazer, chuck full of fun and devilment, without harm to anyone, and everlastingly getting off some new, wild prank to surprise, amuse and delight the crowd. He was the Corinthian Tom of his day—tall, handsome of form, of noble countenance, and every inch a man of best mould and nature. On racing days at the Union course, Snediker's was always crowded with the cream of the patrons of the turf. There Hiram Woodruff was in his element, and always had about him delighted listeners and an admiring multitude. The youngsters regarded him as a Gamelial, at whose feet it was an honor to sit and hearken.

At John Murphy's fine resort on East Broadway, at Richmond's popular place on Broadway, nearly opposite Pearl Street, by Bonfanti's, above the entrance to the hospital, the old Washington hotel, which stood on the site of Stewart's down town marble store, and the old Washington Street house opposite the market, where Boss Bill Harrington used to take his "pet boy," Tom Hyer, were the New York resorts of Woodruff, and while the Beacon Course was kept up on Weehawken bluff on the Jersey shore, at Hoboken, McCarthy's house was another of his favorite retreats. The turf men of the time—Woodruff, Conklin, Spicer, Jim Bevins, Jake Somerindike and others, whose names are not recalled, the Ludlum brothers, great horse men, and many more, were also frequenters of McCarthy's. Not far from his house was the secluded spot where Aaron Burr shot Alexander Hamilton in the fatal duel, and the Sybil's Cave was another place of visiting interest.

Porter, the "Tall Son of York," a native of Kentucky, was editor of the New York Spirit of the Times. His office rooms, Barclay Street, were ornamented with pictures and trophies of the turf of every quality of sporting and hunting and fishing, and Porter was himself a genial, hearty entertainer, a magnificent good fellow at dinner, with an unceasing fund of anecdote to draw upon at random. Lord, but sometimes it seems to me that all those departed spirits have left none to fill their vacant places, yet when the contrast of the work and performances of Hiram Woodruff and the trotting men of his period is made with that of the brilliant masters of this time, it is a contrast, and allows no comparison. Men like Marvin and Doble, Splan and Hickok, Goldsmith and Turner, could teach Woodruff in trotting and instruct all of his day in training and handling and driving trotters.

With Woodruff and them it was an art. The masters of this day have advanced it to a science, and the horse is ennobled by their system to the best uses of man, to the perfect development of the intelligent animal. Had the little gray mare, Lady Suffolk, been committed to the care of a trainer the equal of any of those mentioned above, the probability is that she would have been brought to trot the mile below 2:20. Her owner, Dave Bryant, I was quite well acquainted with, and I saw the mare in many of her track performances. Bryant was very proud of her, disliked to have any but himself to handle her, but he was neglectful and not qualified to get utmost speed from her. He had his own rough notions about driving and working her, and in these he was obstinately confirmed—would not take advice from any one. Plain, honest, stubborn man that he was, he had the good fortune to own the best trotter of his time, and still he used her like a hack horse in his customary drive to town, taking no more care of her than the ordinary peddler gives to a fruit wagon plug.

I remember when Pat Hunt, fine, manly, handsome fellow that he was, came to San Francisco early in the '50's and took the stable corner of Sacramento and Kearny streets with Fulton, keen, clever, little gentleman, as his business man. Pat was the star trotting driver of California. Lady Mac was the speediest on the local turf. Tom Battelle used to make a fine show of afternoons on the Mission and Lake road with his fancy roadster New York that never could go in less than three minutes, if he ever did the mile so low. John Crook, J. Daniels, and some other old timers were the noted drivers. Pat Hunt excelled all of them. When Jim Eoff came there was a new order of things. He was certainly skilled. But he was something besides. It is the masterful skill and the unquestioned integrity of Marvin, Goldsmith, Doble, Hickok, and a few other of the great drivers which has elevated trotting to the high rank equivalent to the English Derby and Oaks, the St. Leger and Doncaster, and the others in that rank.

The greatest praise is deserved by the wealthy men of California who have better enabled these superior horsemen to practice the development of the horse—particularly of the trotter. Leland Stanford has benefitted California and this whole Pacific Coast, by establishing the great breeding farms of Palo Alto and Vina, and by bringing here Electioneer and General Benton, and other sires of great worth, with mares of choicest blood, to a degree that will grow with every year as substantial wealth in eligible landed property grows and produces greater good. His great wealth is applied to the benefit and usefulness and betterment of mankind and of the domestic animals—of the horse especially. In worthy association belong the names of Rose and Corbett, Haggin and Winters, Hearst and Baldwin, and others who have largely invested in the introduction here of the best blood in thoroughbreds, and racing, trotting, stud celebrity. These gentlemen have gained for California a reputation which the famous Blue Grass region of Kentucky does not excel, and the choicest of the product of the Orange County Hambletonians meets at sales in New York the scions of the old stock bred in California, which command prices above theirs. It is enrichment of the State, and fame beyond the enrichment.

VETERAN.

Helena Rack Track.

HELENA, Mon., June 29, '89.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Things are very lively at present here, every one getting ready for the July meeting which commences on the 3rd and continues four days.

The programme is good and should fill well for there are about ninety horses on the ground and about forty more are expected the coming week. The association is building fifty more new stalls so as to be able to accommodate all who come.

The runners are out in full force, from quarter horses to three-quarter ones. One dare not open his mouth about a quarter race, as he will be taken up at once.

The largest running stable is that of Mr. Bakers. His stable consists of 10 head, viz., Vice Regent ch g, 7 years by Regent Dan'l B. ch g, 6 yrs., by Glen Ellen, who won a ¼ race here week before last, in :22½, and some say he went faster; Ida Glen, ch m, 7 yrs., by Glen Ellen; Nevada, ch m, 4 yrs., by Regent; War Peek, b g, 4 yrs., by Chesapeke; X. ch s, 3 yrs., by Regent; Yum Yum, bg f, 3 yrs., by Regent; Trifle, b f, 2 yrs., by Red Boy; Carrie Lee, ch f, 2 yrs., by Regent; Katie Putnum, g f, 2 yrs., by Geo. Wilkes.

Mr. Bakers has great hopes of all in his string, but he considers Nevada the best, as she won the Montana Derby last year, running the mile and a half in 2:39, the fastest mile and a half ever run in Montana.

In Mr. Blevin's stable there are five: Skucum ch g, 2 yrs., by Red Boy—Bessie Douglass; Bertie H's ch g, 2 yrs., by Red Boy—Austeroid by Red Bluff; Tolulu Boy, f, 3 yrs., by Red Boy—Yogo by Red Bluff; Ailee, ch s, 3 yrs., by Regent—Lillie Lancashire by Lexington; Glenolia, ch f, 2 yrs., by Glen Ellen.

Bertie H and Skucum are engaged here in the Pioneer Stakes and in numerous stakes at Deer Lodge, Anaconda and Butte.

Mr. J. R. Crawford has two; Olympia, b g, 4 yrs, by Luke Blackburn—Belladona by Brown Dick. This one is a winner sure as I saw him work a mile last week in 1:47 with shoes on and 131 lbs. up; Sunday, by g, aged, by Sundance—Norma; any one that beats him a half mile will know that there was a race.

P. E. Bybee's Oregon stable is in charge of Mat White, and contains the following: Oregon, ch s, 4, by Monday—Panacia; Broadchurch, ch s, 3, by Leinster—Tibbie Dunbar; Tom O'Hara, b g, 3, by Kyrle Daley—Rosey G.; Billow, ch m, 6, by Longfield—Media by Norfolk; Raindrop — 2, br filly by Ophir—Naella by California; Roebucker, br c, 2, by Woodbury—Unknown.

Babb & Mulkey's Stable contains Bogus, ch g, aged, by Ophir—unknown; Tom Daly's ch g, aged, by Patsy Duffy—Sunshine; Duffy Winter's b g, aged, by Patsy Duffy—Neva Winters by Joe Hooker; Rosa Lewis' ch m, aged, by Flood—Fanny Lewis by Imp. Buckden; Quebec's ch g, aged, by Norfolk—Jennie Hull; Moses B., ch s, 4, by Leinster—Aunt Jane; Guido, ch c, 2, by Double Cross—Aurora by Thad Stevens.

Mr. Sutton's stable has Bob Wade, 4 yrs., pedigree unknown. He ran Daniel B. to a head in 22½; Tricksey, g m by Carriboo; Susie Ellen by Glen Ellen; Dolly a quarter mare, pedigree unknown.

California is represented by T. F. Lynch's Jon Jon, who looks well, and from the way he ran at Portland should be up among them. John Esterbrook's Diavolo, by Shannon—

Dame Winnie; "Brick" is training and riding him himself, and he looks in the pink of condition.

Tommy Bally is also here with Little Phil, by Leinster—Laura H. Phil has filled up very much since he left the Bay, and Tommy is dead stuck on him.

Billy Stewart, the jockey, is riding first for Mulkey. He is already engaged to ride in all races where Mulkey does not start. The trotters are numerous, among them being Breck & Fisher's stable, with Wm. Taylor trainer. Montana Wilkes, five-year-old b g by Red Wilkes, dam by Lumber, he by Errieson. He is a fine looking brown stallion about 15½ hands, and shows considerable speed. They have a two-year-old filly, dam by Doncaster, he by Dictator, that should make a good one this fall in the two-year-old stakes. Bay Dick, b g by Cummings—Julia Brady. P. B. C., b s, four years old by Maxim, dam by Mambrino King; Phillis, b m, five years old, by Doncaster ——; Black Horse, five years old, by Heard, 2:24½, dam by Mambrino Diamond. Barthol's Breaking Stable consists of five head of colts bred in Montana.

Alex. Lewis is here from Portland with a chestnut mare by Clark Chief Jr. that he expects to do a trick with. She has no mark and can go some.

Mr. J. W. Engleman, of Danville, Ky., has ten in his string. Bradshaw, 2:26, b g six years olds, by Messenger Chief, dam by Gill's Vermont; second dam thoroughbred. Lance W., b g, four years old, by Black Diomed, dam by Brookmont by Almont; second dam by Pilot Jr. Fanolla, ch f, two years old by Doncaster, by Dictator, dam by Young Jim. Montana Girl, bay, three years old, by Counsel, 2:24, dam the dam of Lady Dawn, 2:29½. The rest are youngsters, and you will probably hear of them this fall.

Mr. J. Stella has three, and there are more on the track who have not done much yet.

There is to be a gentleman's road race on the 4th for $100 a corner, four entries, and it is causing a good deal of excitement, as all are very evenly matched.

Guido, of the Cy Mulkey string, is very ill with pneumonia, and his chances of starting at Helena are very remote. Contractor, by Sultan, is a speedy trotter, and will make the horses in his class trot fast to beat him. A few days ago he was worked out a mile in 2:25, and was well within himself.

Jack Edgar, who is at present here, will, after the July meeting, train several youngsters for a gentleman by the name of Bradbury, who has a farm at Twin Bridges,

HELENA.

Feeding and Weaning of Foals.

Written for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

This is a subject that receives much less attention than it merits. The English have a saying that "half a good horse goes down his throat." There was never a truer saying. What applies to the matured animal, applies with equal force to the foal, yearling, and two-year-old. Therefore remember that half a good colt goes down his throat. Care should be taken to see that the mare gives a sufficient quantity of milk to render the colt's growth rapid and vigorous. In raising a colt that I intended for the track, I should feed the mare with that end in view from the time I was satisfied she was with foal. The disposition of a foal can be materially changed by the treatment the mare receives while carrying it. Always treat the mother kindly; pet her at all times; never be hasty with her, and never do anything calculated to frighten her or make her fear you.

Weaning time is usually fixed at 5 or 6 months after the birth of the colt. It is my judgment that two weeks should be taken in weaning a colt properly. Let the colt suckle twice a day for five days; once a day for five days; and every other day for the remainder of the time. A colt should have a little feed box of its own, in which oats may be placed after the colt has reached the age of two months. Rolled oats will probably be best for the first four or five months. Once in a while a mash composed of equal parts of bran and oats is much relished by the colt. When you wean a colt, never —when the circumstances will admit of doing anything else—take the colt abruptly away from the mare, and out of her sight and hearing. Firstly—Because if the mare is a highly bred animal she will worry and fret, and if in a stable will act as if she were going to tear the barn down; whereas, if the colt be placed in a stall by her side, she will gradually get used to his absences from time to time, and will make but little demonstration when he is removed. Secondly—Because the colt will work himself into a frenzy in the yard or paddock you take him to; will tramp up and down the fence for hours, like a tiger in a cage; will not eat if feed be held to his lips, nor drink if water be constantly in sight. He will "fall off" 50 pounds before he makes up his mind to submit to the inevitable, and it will take you several months to make up for your radical treatment. I am of course speaking of a highly bred colt. Thirdly—It is to your interest, to the mare's good, and to the colt's welfare that he be properly and quietly weaned.

If the colt has had a sufficient quantity of oats up to the time of weaning, he will continue to grow without even temporary cessation, as between oats liberally fed, and cow's milk freely given, the latter will produce the largest growth. I have fed them both and am certain the milk will ensure more size than oats. I had a colt sired by a well known trotter, and whose mother is a finely bred little mare, about half trotting and half thoroughbred. She will weigh about 950 pounds, and is 15:1 hands. The colt's sire is 15:2 hands high. I continued the milk ration with this colt until he was 9 months old, when I sold him. He is at this writing three years old, and is 16 hands high, and I have every reason to believe will reach 16½ when fully matured, which is four inches higher than his sire, and five inches higher than his dam. He is at present the largest and best developed colt by this same sire I know of, of his age, without reference to the size of the dam. He has been well cared for by his present owner.

It is my impression that the first two years make the horse, you cannot neglect a colt with impunity. If he is made to "rustle" for himself; not housed in stormy weather, and reared without grain, you will find he has done most of his rustling at that time, for he won't rustle much on the track or road, after he comes to years of maturity. Growth lost the first year or two can never be regained, no matter how much you feed afterwards, or how solicitious your care. It is not to be wondered at that one sees so many little, hard looking horses throughout the rural districts. I will tell you how the average farmer raises horses. After the colt is foaled it is turned out with the mare in the hills or meadow. It does well until weaned. We will say it was foaled in April. It is weaned about September, when feed is growing scarce. The mare is taken away and the colt begins to rustle. Grass gets very short before the rains come, and before new grass has grown sufficiently to have any substance to it. The colt runs out all winter and oftentimes has a tough time to keep alive. Take a look at the colt the next April a year after it was foaled, you will see a colt about one half as large as it ought to be, with a coat of hair like a mountain sheep and a general pinched appearance. It will look as if most of its growth had gone to tail and mane. You may breed a fine colt, with parents of undoubted excellence, and if you treat it this way you will have reason to believe that the axiom "like begets like" is untrue. It takes as much work, as much attention to detail, as much care, as much study, as much knowledge and as much system to raise a trotting yearling properly, as it takes work, attention to detail, care, study, knowledge and system to make any other business a success.

Carrots and pumpkins are good feed for colts. They supply the desire for vegetable food which the colt craves. Salt should always be where a colt can get it. They will never eat too much notwithstanding all statements to the reverse made by cross-roads "hoss doctors." Salt is very purifying and cooling to the blood. In case a grown horse has a bad wound, salt is a specific against fever, and one of the best of internal medicines.

Alfalfa is undeniably the best of all forage plants, and it seems almost imperative that the stock raiser have a field or two of it upon his farm. It is a constant grower of very strong habit, and its roots will find water, if it be even twenty-five feet below the surface. In this country a good crop of hay can be harvested about the middle of May, and from that time until the rainy season it affords constant pasturage. As this time of the year comprises the warmest months, when feed upon the hills is sere and brown, the beautiful dark green foliage of alfalfa looks indeed inviting, and is highly appreciated by all members of the equine family. Alfalfa hay, when properly cured, is a good provider for colts not in training—not for older horses, as it is loosening in its tendency, and is in most cases too dusty. The green plant, however, is certainly entitled to the greatest consideration, when the rapid growth of young stock is the desideratum. This plant does not flourish in many places as it does in this State. It is impossible to raise alfalfa in the Eastern States on account of the extreme cold. Kentucky blue grass is often spoken of as a great feed for youngsters, and I have seen it extolled in the most glowing manner. While it is a good forage grass, it is far inferior to alfalfa.

To conclude this subject I have only to say that eight times out of ten, increased and careful feeding will result in pecuniary advantage to the owner, as well as the satisfaction he has of knowing that he has raised a fine looking young horse. There are some mountain ranches in this vicinity, where feed is luxuriant and abundant, and where the frost does not seem to strike. Upon these places, when the year is favorable, when rains come early, are warm when they do come, the grass gets an early start, and colts reared upon these ranches make almost as rapid a growth as those that are housed and fed. There are but few locations similar to the above, and even upon those ranches the conditions must be favorable to ensure success.

Kentucky Burgoo.

In a trip of the kind, one cannot help falling upon an amount of information which can hardly be called sporting news, but which might be of interest to sporting readers. For instance, I saw at a restaurant counter at Lexington race track a card hung up bearing the inscription "Genuine Kentucky Burgoo. Now, I didn't know what genuine Kentucky burgoo was, and I was afraid to ask for any, because I didn't know whether you drank it with a straw or ate it with a fork. Later on I learned that the Kentucky burgoo is nothing so ghastly and weird as its name would indicate, but is a regular institution of the great thoroughbred sales of the large breeding farms. It is of the same purpose as the barbecue, but differs from the latter in that it is a boil and not a roast. It is a boiled aggregation of meats, fowls, squirrels and vegetables of all sorts. It is made in a kettle that will hold about 400 gallons, and is served in cups. The real burgoo is not found except at the thoroughbred sales on the large farms, and I fear my friend of the restaurant did not tempt the knowing ones who live in that country.—Forest and Stream.

Inbreeding.

The question of inbreeding, says Mr. Parlin in the Cultivator, still seems to perplex young breeders of trotting stock, judging from letters like the following, which we are constantly receiving from different parts of the country:—

"Editor of the American Cultivator: Will you kindly advise me in regard to the propriety of mating a mare from a Mambrino Dudley stallion with a Mambrino Dudley stallion out of a different dam. Both are from standard stock. Do you think I would get as good results by breeding that way as from some other cross? Some advise me to do so, and say the more Mambrino the better. As I am just beginning to breed a few I would like advice upon the subject. If there is any objection to breeding this way please advise how you would breed her."

In reply to the above, so far as the mating of animals as nearly related as those mentioned is concerned, there is not the slightest objection, provided there was no hereditary unsoundness or other objectionable qualities either in the common parent to which the stallion and mare are related or in some of their ancestors. If, however, either the dam of the mare or her sire or dam, grandsire or grandam had spavins, ringbones, navicular disease, or any other form of hereditary unsoundness, and the dam of the stallion or her ancestors for two or three generations on either side were unsound from the same cause, it would not be advisable to mate them, even though both the mare and the stallion are perfectly free from the infirmity to all outward appearance.

If the intention were to ask whether it would be advisable to inbreed the descendants of that particular stallion the reply would be, that is a question which every breeder must decide upon his own judgment. The prices which the get of Mambrino Dudley brought at the late Kellogg sale show how they are valued by the general public.

Every man who is breeding stock to sell must keep a sharp eye on the public sales, as the prices received there are a pretty sure index of the varying popularity of certain families. It is much safer to base an estimate of the merit of any horse's get upon their success in actual turf contests, and the prices which they bring under the hammer, than upon articles which appear in print even over the names of prominent writers. The most honest men are liable to err in judgment. Not long since a well known and highly entertaining writer, in giving an account of a certain trotter with a low record, extolled the superior road qualities of the animal. One who had known the horse for years read the flattering description, and after a hearty laugh remarked that so far as road qualities were concerned the horse in question was the meanest one he ever sat behind. The man who wrote the article was honest, but erred in judgment, and parties who based their estimate of the animal's merits as a roadster upon the article in question were liable to err. The watch and the hammer, however, can generally be relied upon.

Fashion in trotting stock is constantly fluctuating. The family which stands highest in popular esteem to-day may be greatly overshadowed by some other family a few years hence. For this reason the young breeder should guard against becoming wedded, so to speak, to any one family of trotters. The breeder who has the best judgment and keeps the best posted by the records will be the first to detect the coming trotting sire or family, and will be likely to have a little of that stock to sell when the tidal wave arrives.

Where a man is raising only a few animals for his own use or amusement, without regard to profit, he can select animals whose blood lines please his own fancy, just as the dairyman who makes butter only for his own table, can salt and flavor it to suit his own palate. The man who makes butter to sell and hopes to realize the highest market price, however, must be governed by the palates of those who are willing to pay fancy prices.

Just so with the breeder of trotters who does not care to develop his own stock. If he wishes to obtain the highest prices at public or private sale, he must not only aim to raise first-class animals, but he must be careful to secure such as are bred in fashionable lines.

The fashion is set by the success of the members of any particular family upon the turf, instead of newspaper articles or opinions of prejudiced individuals as some appear to believe. Within three years a horseman of considerable note remarked to us that Nutwood was a failure as a sire of trotters This man, though fairly well posted, had not studied the records carefully. He has heard somebody make the remark whose judgment he supposed good, and he accepted it as a fact. Since then Nutwood has been sold at auction for $22,000. His book is now full at $500 this season, and he has twenty-five representatives in the 2:30 list, six of which have records of 2:20 or better. In fact, his 2:30 list exceeds the combined list of any other three grandsons of Alexander's Abdallah.

Only a few years ago the Clay strain was so unfashionable that a promient Kentucky breeder remarked to an Eastern horseman that he wished he had not an animal on his farm which had the Clay cross. To-day the records show that the two fastest yearling trotters ever raised, Norlaine, 2:31¼, and Sudie D., 2:35¾, the fastest two-year-old trotter, Sunol, 2:18, the fastest two-year-old trotting stallion, Axtell, 2:23, the fastest three-year-old trotter, Sable Wilkes, 2:18, the fastest four-year-old trotter, Manzanita, 2:16, the fastest trotter to wagon, Hopeful, 2:16¼, the greatest trotting stallion yet produced, judged by his 2:30 performers, George Wilkes, 2:22, the greatest trotting brood mare yet bought to light, Green Mountain Maid, with seven sons and daughters in the 2:30 list, the only two trotting stallions that were ever sold for $50 000 apiece, Stamboul, 2:14¾, and Bell Boy, 2:29¼, price $51,000, and the only two-year-old trotting stallion that ever passed under the auctioneer's hammer at a bid of $26,000, all possess the once despised Clay cross.

This goes to prove as stated that fashion in trotting stock is liable to sudden and radical changes, hence the breeder who wishes to get top prices must keep sharp watch of the records and auction sales, and study the blood lines of those which win the biggest purses on the turf and the biggest bids when on the block.

As to inbreeding numerous examples of success both upon the running and trotting turf were mentioned in these columns a short time since. Butterfly, 2:19¾, and Eagle Bird, 2:21, were by sons of George Wilkes, and their dam, Tansy, was also a daughter of George Wilkes. Clingstone, 2:14, the fastest trotter ever raised in New England, and as game a one as ever took the word, was by Rysdyk, son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian; dam by Chosroes, another son of the old Hero of Chester. Favonia, 2:15, was by Wedgewood, 2:19, son of Belmont, by Alexander's Abdallah. The dam of Favonia was Fadette by Alexander's Abdallah. The pacer, King Jim, 2:20¼, was by Belmont; dam Maud by Alexander's Abdallah. Sally Cossack (four-year-old record 2:22½) which is nearly four seconds faster than any other of her sire's get, was by Don Cossack, out of Almonia, and Almonia was by Almont, son of Alexander's Abdallah, out of Rosina, by Alexander's Abdallah. The dam of Sally Cossack's sire was also by Alexander's Abdallah, making her very closely inbred to that distinguished son of Rysdyk's Hambletonian.

These are only a few of the many instances that might be named, to say nothing of The Moor, sire of Sultan, 2:24, nor of Ida Belle, 2:23, both of which resulted from incestuous breeding, mating a mare with her own son. Daniel Lambert was by Ethan Allen, son of Vermont Black Hawk. He has now at least thirty-three sons and daughters in the 2:30 list, and eighteen of the number, including his fastest, Comee, 2:19¼, were from mares which trace directly through their sires to Vermont Black Hawk. Abraham, by Daniel Lambert, now has eight in the 2:30 list. The dam of Abraham was Polly Cook by Vermont Black Hawk, and seven of the eight 2:30 performers got by Abraham, including Frank, 2:19¼, were from Black Hawk mares. The eighth was also from a mare of Morgan descent.

Some of the most intelligent, enterprising trotting-horse breeders, in seeking an out-cross, aim to secure an animal which has some remote kindred strain to the animals selected for mating. When Gen. Withers wished to get the Black Hawk strain a few years since as an out-cross for his Hambletonian-Mambrino Chief stock, he decided to purchase Daniel Lambert; first, because he had proved himself the most successful sire of speed that had ever come from the Black Hawk family, and second, because his dam, Fanny Cook, was by Old Abdallah, sire of Rysdyk's Hambletonian.

Failing to get Daniel Lambert, the General bought Woodward's Ethan Allen, Lambert's full brother. Both Abdallah and Mambrino Chief sprang from Mambrino, son of imported Messenger, so that, though mating Woodward's Ethan Allen with his Hambletonian and Mambrino Chief mares gave him the Black Hawk out-cross, yet it reunited the diverging Messenger streams. Young breeders can gain many valuable points by conversing with and closely watching the course of experienced breeders who have made a success of the business.

Santa Barbara News.

Santa Barbara is the fairest city of the Pacific Coast. Its fame as a winter and summer resort is renowned, for its climate is unexcelled and the grandeur and eloquence of the surrounding scenery is inimitable. The grand old Mission that watches on the quaint city as it slumbers in unmolested sleep, is the best preserved one in the State and the only mission in possession of the Franciscian friars. This beautiful little city of fifteen thousand inhabitants is well protected by the high Coast Range mountains in the north and west, and the mighty winds that sweep on the great ocean and arouse it to sudden and imminent wrath, never reach this city, for the islands that rise out of the sea, thirty miles from here, check the storm, and when it reaches us it is a mild briny breeze that comes to end the rays of the sun. It is true that the quaintness of the Presideo—as it was called forty years ago—is disappearing. The old adobe mansions, whose roofs were covered with "Texas," are rapidly disappearing, but the eye welcomes on all sides elegant and substantial business houses made of blue sandstone, and handsome dwellings of modern architecture. The Spanish element is dying out and the Americans are taking possession of the city and of the immense cattle and sheep ranches of the county.

The old time sports of Santa Barbara are either too old or too indolent to take part in sporting affairs. There is one old Spaniard still living who tells of the wonderful speed of old time horses here. He is so old and visionary that it is not safe to repeat his reminiscences. He tells of a race run in this city in 1851. The distance was "cuatro cientas varas" (400 yards). The parties who made the race bet one thousand steers. He says that those little horses flew through the air. The horses of to-day, he says, would not have started ere their wonderful steeds were at the end of the race. The old gentleman was also a rooster trainre, and old as he is, you will often see him with a game cock under his arm.

Racing in Santa Barbara goes by spurts, but now that the city has grown so rapidly and every man of means is introducing fine bred horses and mares, Santa Barbara promises to be a great racing centre. The winter months are so mild that horses from the East will winter here, when the good people of the cold winter States find our mild winter and fast track. The Agricultural Park of Santa Barbara has a fast, substantial and well protected mile track. The stalls are large and substantial. The high fence that surrounds the track is made of white fine fence lumber, and the spacious and improving pavilion that is outside the track is an elegant building. The Fall races will begin Oct. 1st and will last four days. The purses are liberal, and there are many horses in training, so that the meeting will surely be a success. The stallion race, purse $300 for trotters, will be a most interesting one, for there will be at least six stallions to start, and the owner of each is certain that he will carry off the honors.

Gus Walters, the favorite Los Angelestrainer, has moved to Santa Barbara, and will permanently locate here. He has in his string some very promising horses. For the stallion race he has in training Don Patricio, a five-year-old stallion sired by A. W. Richmond, dam by Kentucky Hunter. Don Patricio is a grey, standing nearly sixteen hands, very speedy and promising to be a great colt. When he was two years old, and with two weeks training, he trotted two heats on a half mile track better than three minutes. He has a clean, open gait, is level headed and understands and obeys his kind master. Barring accidents he will make his rivals trot much better than 2:30. He also has in training a Nutwood pacer called Glenwood, his granddam is Lady Washington, and a most promising two-year-old bay horse Maben, sired by Grandee. This colt is owned by L. J. Rose Jr., and the little horse can trot well and does it bravely. Mr. Walters has also a fine three-year-old chestnut colt sired by Judge Salisbury, dam untraced. This colt, James T. Hope, of San Francisco, purchased for $1500. The watches of many sports here indicate that this colt can trot better than 2:30. Gus Walter's string all look well and he has all that he can do. We wish him success and we are certain that Santa Barbara will protect him, for all believe that he is a conscientious trainer, that he will be true to his horse, and faithful to its owner. If a trainer have merit, art and judgment, and is true to the principle, that honesty is the best policy, he is certain of success. Racing in Santa Barbara has, in the past been very unpopular, and all because fourth rate trainers and jockeys here come here, and horses have been run for little money, and consequently regardless of the best horse. We have great hopes of this Fall meeting. We have here now, first rate trainers and drivers, and we are confident that in the future, the best horse and the cleverest trainer will win. Once we have the confidence of the people, then the gate receipts will warrant more liberal purses.

Pete Doyle, who has been in Santa Barbara and Ventura Counties since '86, has been very successful as a trainer and driver. Looking over the books of the Santa Barbara Agricultural Park, I find that he has the following record: In '86 he started in seven races; he won six, and was third in one. In '87 he started in four, and won three and second in one. In '88 he started in six, and won six. In '89 he started in six, won three, and was second in three. He has in the string some promising geldings and mares. He will have for the stallion race a bay seven year old, sired by Algoona, and his dam is sired by Gen. Taylor. He has a record of .48, and that with little or no training. Pete thinks that the bay stallion will surely trot low in the twenties by this fall. Doyle also has a promising two-year-old sired by Cashmere, he by Sultan, dam out of a mare by Trustee. This colt is speedy and kindly disposed. He has a long string of fine horses, and will have many more in a few days. Some of the horses that we know are the following:—

Two-year-old colt by Monroe Chief, dam Eva P. by Ben Wade. A three-year-old stallion, grandson of Electioneer. A two-year-old bay colt, full brother to Flora G., by Altoona out of a mare by Conway's Patchen. He has a fine, rangy bay colt by Darbund, dam by Max, he by Echo. Also a roan mare that with little training has trotted in .35. She is by A. W. Richmond.

Henry Delany has in training a big handsome bay stallion four years old, sired by Bashaw, he by Wapsie. Mr. Lawrence of this city paid fifteen hundred dollars for this grand horse two months ago. He trotted three heats better than .35 when Mr. Lawrence bought him. The horse is a most promising one. Mr. Delany has also in training Rosewald, by A. W. Richmond, dam by Chrichton.

Horseback Riding and its Relation to Health.

BY DAVID M. PATTERSON, M. D.

"If your ramble was on horseback, I am glad of it, on account of your health.—Swift.

One of the biographers of General Grant, in referring to his great love for a horse, has said: "The horse is a noble animal, and it is by no means remarkable that a bond of sympathy has been established between great men and good horses.' It is also to this same illustrious "silent man" that the Rev. W. H. H. Murray dedicated his most interesting and instructive work, entitled "The Perfect Horse."

I trust that it is not inappropriate to here briefly refer to the horse of antiquity, whose history is always both interesting and instructive.

Tradition teaches us that the earliest use made of the horse by man was not for work or pleasure, but only for food. As man gained in intellect and knowledge, the same progressive spirit which in these days has led him to utilize steam and electricity as motive power in place of the stage coach of our forefathers was shown in those primitive times, and it was but natural that he should look for the needed assistance among the lower animals about him. There is every evidence, however, that the horse was not his first selection. Other animals, such as the goat, the sheep, the ox, the ass and the camel, either on account of their lesser size or slower movements, were first tried as beasts of burden and locomotion.

Doubtless a long period elapsed before man acquired sufficient courage and ingenuity to capture and bring under subjection an animal possessing the strength of muscular powers and the swiftness of foot, combined with the spirit and intelligence which have always been prominent characteristics of the horse—an animal designated by a kind and wise Providence especially for the use of man and for the benefit of the human race.

The primitive home of the horse is now definitely located as being that portion of the country lying between the Tigris and the Euphrates in Mesopotomia, this being the place where every living creature, both man and beast, was collected together after the Flood. It was an easy matter for the horse to be taken from there into Egypt, where he is often alluded to in the Book of Genesis At the time of Joseph's reign in Egypt we find the horse frequently mentioned, and there is no doubt that the value of this animal for domestic and cavalry service was at that time clearly established.

All through the Old Testament frequent reference is made to the use of horses in the service of warriors, kings and prophets. Habakkuk says of the horses of the Chaldeans that "they are swifter than the leopards, and more fierce than the evening wolves," and to Job is given the honor of having produced the greatest word painting of this noble animal to be anywhere found in sacred history.

It is not difficult to trace the journeyings of the horse after leaving Egypt, and Persia, and Tartary and Greece, and finally, into Thessaly, "the people of which, like the Mexicans of modern times, conceived the horse and driver to be one, giving rise to the fable of the centaurs, double shaped and incomprenensible."

The history of Rome is the history of horsemanship, the Romans finally surpassing their teachers, the Greeks, in daring feats of the arena, and the attachment of this warlike people for the horse has long since been recorded as history.

The love and high appreciation of the horse have inspired the poets in all ages to sing of his courage, docility and fleetness.

Byron has happily described the action of a herd that had been surprised by the arrival of Mazeppa and his fainting charger on their pastures:

> They stop—they start—they snuff the air,
> Gallop a moment here and there,
> Approach, retire, wheel round and round,
> Then plunging back with sudden bound,
> Headed by one black mighty steed,
> Who seemed the patriarch of his breed,
> Without a single speck of hair
> Of white upon his shaggy hide;
> They snort—they foam, neigh—swerve aside,
> And backward to the forest fly,
> By instinct, from a human cry.

There is no doubt but that Virgil's description of the white Thracian steeds of Turnus can with equal truth be applied to the white horses of ancient Cappadocia:

> He calls for his steeds and exalts to see them neighing in his presence—
> Steeds which Orithyia herself gave as a royal present to Pilumnus;
> In whiteness surpassing the snow—the winds in speed.
> The officious grooms stand around and with their hollow hands
> Clap their storked cheeks and comb their waving manes.

It is well known that the color has often influenced the the price of the animal, as we recall the well-known rhyme:

> One white foot—buy a horse;
> Two white feet—try a horse;
> Three white feet—look well about him;
> Four white feet—go without him.

Turning now to our own country, it may be stated that the horse of America is a modern importation. It is doubted by standard authorities on this subject whether the Norwegian discovers of Newfoundland and various parts of North America during the tenth and eleventh centuries left horses behind them or not, and it is generally conceded that it was not until the time of Cortez and Pizarro that the horse gained a fair footing in the New World. Cortez and Pizarro carried the horse into Mexico and Peru, respectively, while Brazil is indebted to the Portugese. and Hayti to the second voyage of Columbus (1493), for the introduction of the horse upon their shores. From these early importations horses have rapidly multiplied in number, until now it is estimated that in the United States alone there are nearly eight million, representing a monetary value of about $2,000,000,000 and $3,000,0000,000. These comprise every grade of condition, from the magnificent thoroughbreds which command fabulous prices down to the cheapest and poorest cart horses which do the drudge work in our city streets and the hardest plough work on our country farms. Sums as high as $75,000 have been paid for celebrated trotters, and even $10,000 and $15,000 have been refused for some by their fortunate owners.

The importance of horseback riding as a means of healthful recreation cannot be too highly estimated, and it is to be regretted that the bicycle and tricycle have in some sections of our country been allowed to supercede this most invigorating exercise. Certainly for all, both men and women, who are closely confined within doors by sedentary pursuits there is no form of exercise which imparts tone and energy to the whole physical system and at the same time gives such a wild range of mental enjoyment as horseback riding.

In order to obtain the best possible results from this kind of exercise a few things are essential. One is that the rider must have, at least in some degree, an affection for a horse; without this, much of the pleasure and benefit derived from riding are lost. To some this love for a horse is spontaneous and natural; to others it is acquired. Some men, and women, too, are natural born riders. General Grant may be mentioned as belonging to this class, some of his early exhibition feats of horsemanship having now become almost proverbial. To such men as he and others like him, it is only necessary to place them in a saddle and they at once become good riders.

Special care should be taken in the right selection of a horse. All horses are not adapted for the saddle any more than are all men good riders, and both the safety and comfort of the rider depend upon a wise choice. Someone has said that the false distribution of the weight to be carried is a more prolific cause of poor riding than any other one thing A horse is let from the stable one day to a man weighing 130 pounds, the next day to one weighing over one hundred and seventy, and on the third day to a lady of not over a hundredweight. It is such treatment as this that will soon spoil the best of horses.

Next in importance is the proper adjustment of the saddle and bridle. Unfortunately this is too often overlooked. The saddle should be of a size adapted for the form and build of the horse. It should also be adjusted to fit the seat and legs of the rider; the weight should be so placed as to press equally over the whole under surface of the saddle, especial care being given to the position and length of the stirrups. Many horses that are in every way adapted for use in the saddle have been spoiled because of the use of bits that were unsuited to their mouths. The mouth of the horse is one of the most sensitive parts of his anatomy, and any abuse of that organ, either by the use of an improper bit or its bad management, will surely be followed with unpleasant results. If any one thinks that these minutiae are unimportant it may be well to recall to mind that at one time the French cavalry had 10,206 horses, and that after less than one month's marching, not more than 3,500 of that number were really fit for service, the remainder having "been rendered unserviceable by the saddle and other portions of the equipment." With these few suggestions properly attended to, together with such others as may be prompted by experience, a five or ten mile ride on a clear summer morning cannot fail to prove an unestimable blessing.

Doubtless much of this benefit is due to the magnetism which the rider receives from his horse as he rushes along "The horse is a regular battery for the generation of animal electricity." Mounted on a horse, a man cannot help feeling that he is a little better favored than the one who walks. He knows that he can go faster, and consequently for the time being he is master of the situation. There is also a feeling of healthful exhilaration which is very stimulating to both a man's physical and mental forces. "He has for the time a kind of ideal, not actual, being, and rides the horse as the poet rides his Pegasus " The more one rides and becomes familiar with the nature and the habits of his steed, the better he recognizes the strength and power of this noble animal. These in turn are imparted to the rider through the powerful agency of magnetism, and this magnetic influence is a powerful aid in recuperating and sustaining the natural forces of our being.

One of the essential benefits to be derived from horseback riding lies in the fact that, physiologically speaking, the effects of this kind of exercise reach every function of the body, and, as each one is more or less affected by the other, a general good effect upon the whole body is obtained. If one organ or its function is deranged, the overplus energy which is given to the well organs is in turn bestowed upon that part which, so to speak, is below par.

Not only to a well man is horseback riding a source of pleasure and recreation, but to the invalid, whether suffering from mental or physical ailment, this kind of exercise, if wisely employed, may prove of great value. That it can aid in establishing the health of one who is broken down by overstudy, excessive clerical labor, or from the perplexing and burdensome cares of business, has long since been clearly demonstrated. In the early stages of consumption, general debility and insomnia, together with certain kinds of muscular and nervous affectations, horseback riding is strongly recommended by our highest medical authorities.

> The wise for cure on exercise depend.
> God never made his work for man to mend.

The modus operandi of this kind of cure may briefly be stated as follows: In the first place, this kind of exercise is entirely different from any other, and in one sense it is never on two occasions exactly the same. It is difficult to explain this on paper, but every rider knows it to be true. The very nature of this exercise at once takes a man out of himself. The fact of his being seated in the saddle with the bridle rein in his hand engages the attention of his mind, and his thoughts are at once turned in a new direction. He forgets his troubles, whether real or imaginary, something new each day occupies his time and attention, while the horse is doing the work and he is taking the exercise.

Again, this form of exercise in its direct influence upon disease, is deserving of special notice. This is doubtless due, in a large measure, to the power of equalization of the vital forces and their consequent influence upon every nerve and muscle in the body. Take, for example, the two antagonistic diseases known as plethora and anæmia, the one being that condition where the blood is too rich in quality and too much in quantity, causing distention of the capillaries, a turgid condition of the veins and obesity; the other where the blood is poor and thin in quality and but little of it. For the first disease, horseback riding, if judiciously practiced for some time, will tend toward reducing both the amount and unhealthy state of the blood, in the same way that mountain climbing, running, etc., will obviate a tendency to excessive corpulency. As one writer has remarked: "When in a young girl this tendency to the development of an excessive amount of fat discloses itself, the proper remedy is horseback exercise and moderation in diet. This is the true specific against embonpoint—not acidulated drink or substances which, destroying the health, remove not only the fat, but at the same time all pretentions to beauty." It may be clearly asserted that there is no form of exercise which fulfills more completely the above indications than horseback riding.

The characteristics of the second disease, anæmia, are either a diminuation of the quantity of the blood or a change in its character, in which it is poor and watery. Such a condition gives rise to a pale, colorless face, languidness and general debility. For such a state of the system horseback riding stands first in the list of hygienic measures which should be adopted for the toning up of the system, the enriching both the quality and character of the blood, as well as checking the progress of the disease, which, if allowed to continue, must sooner or later be followed with serious results.

Some diseases of the nervous system, namely, hypochondriasis, hysteria, chorea and other similar affections of the brain and spinal chord, are specially amendable to this form of exercise and are usually attended with the best results. It is necessary, however, that the rides be short and that an easy-gaited horse be chosen. As a rule the rides should be taken in the early morning, and the exercise should never be prolonged so as to induce fatigue. Insomnia is another wearisome affectation of the brain and nervous system for which daily horseback riding is advocated by our highest medical authorities. There are several cases on record of noted divines and others who have been completely cured of their inability to sleep nights by daily horseback riding, faithfully continued for weeks or even months.

Probably there is no one disease for which, in its early stages, horseback riding is so beneficial as that of consumption. So well known and popular has this fact become that in a number of instances the theory has been woven with wonderful ingenuity into the "plot" of several standard society novels of the day.

It is very often that this exercise is begun in a most simple manner, the patient sitting on a horse which is led by a groom at a slow walking pace. Gradually, as the patient improves and gets a little stronger, the hectic flush of the afternoon gives place to the bloom on the cheek in the morning, the expansion of the chest grows larger and the muscles of the body develop in strength and size, the appetite improves, the cough grows less, the night sweats disappear; health and vigor are once more restored.

Many a man who now enjoys a good digestion, a sound night's sleep and a robust, healthy constitution owes his deliverance from the bondage of sickness and disease to the daily exercise on horseback. It is related of the late Rev. Dr. Cutler, of Brooklyn, that when a feeble young man he fully recovered his health by riding from Portland to Savannah, and that his valuable life was prolonged to old age by this almost daily exercise.

It is an old and trite saying that "public health is public wealth." This is true whether we consider man as an individual or associate him collectively in the mass of humanity. Suppose a man of large means and possessed of fine business capacity suddenly deprived of health, how long will it take to convince him that his best capital is embarrassed and his most brilliant efforts crippled? Now, in nearly every vocation in life there are to be found those who are not succeeding as they wish—not because of some local or organic disease, but simply because there is a low state of vitality and an enervated condition of both their physical and mental systems.

To prevent the increase of such tendencies, if they already exist, and to restore the body to a normal, healthy condition, and to keep it so after recovery, there is no better form of exercise known to medical science than horseback riding. As Dr. Holmes has quaintly yet truly remarked, "the outside of a horse is good for the inside of a man. The improvement in digestion and assimilation is at once recognized. No man ever swung himself off his saddle after a ten-mile ride without feeling that he was hungry. And as many a disease can be conquered by transferring the battle ground from the sick room to the saddle, so the earliest approach of disease can often be prevented and good health preserved by daily exercise on horseback

Another important feature of this kind of exercise is that horseback riding must of necessity be indulged in away from the crowded thoroughfares of the city. Out into the country we must go, and no sooner do we leave the dusty, noisy streets behind us and strike out into the clear and open country than the beauties of nature burst upon our vision. The plainest scene puts on its bright apparel as the sun touches it with its golden brush.

Soon the horse breaks from a trot into a canter, which is the most pleasant and natural of all the paces when properly performed by the horse and rider. The speed is not great, the best pacing of the horse should not exceed ten or twelve miles an hour, which will ensure for the rider the best physical results. There can be no dullness in horseback riding; every turn in the road and every mile that is traveled bring in view new sights and discoveries. This soon awakens in the mind a constant expectancy of new pleasures, which in turn impart to the current of life an onward impulse that seems to react on the mind as on every function of the automatic organism.

A little experience and observation will soon surprise us as to the amount of physical recuperation which this kind of exercise produces upon the different organs of the body. As the rider rushes along, every nerve thrills with pleasure and healthful exhilaration; the lungs take in to their utmost capacity their full quota of air which is loaded with the purest oxygen and enriched with the sweet perfume of flowers; while the heart is quickened and strengthened in its action, forcing the enriched and purified blood to the most distant and minutest capillaries of the body, and the pulses are found to be beating as even and regular as the time piece in your pocket. The very nature of horseback riding tends to strengthen the muscles of the back, legs and arms; the grip of the hand is firm, the eye is steady, and the ear is quick to detect every sound as well as to listen to the chorus of birds whose songs make one divine harmony

Not only to the physical part of our being is horseback riding of practical benefit, but to the mental and moral side of our nature this kind of exercise is one of inestimable value.

The wear and tear of the brain in these busy times of the nineteenth century cannot well be avoided. The one represents the natural and legitimate result of lawful use and is what every one must submit to; the other comes of hard usage and abuse, the nervous system, unsettled by the mental strain, brings about various defects in nutrition; the appetite fails and then we meet with sleeplessness, the dyspepsia, the irresolution, irritability and depression which are the chief miseries of the overworked. For these various and oftentimes complicated troubles horseback riding affords prompt and effectual deliverance. It is next to an impossibility to carry your business cares and perplexities along with you in the saddle. While riding in a carriage or walking it is an easy matter to think over business or to "talk shop" with the companion at your side; but when seated on a horse, and the animal is in motion, something else must and will occupy your thoughts. Concentrated mental calculations are not in order while riding horseback.

The brain needs just such recreation and stimulant as can be furnished by horseback riding; the motion of the body as the rider and horse move along has a quieting influence on that organ. In no better way can the brain become clear and receive into its every portion the renovating properties of rich, healthy blood than by such exercise. Anxiety gives place to contentment, and hope and courage again take the place of doubt and despondency.

That horseback riding is conducive to the elevation of good morals and the development of the "small, sweet courtesies of life" is evident to even the most casual observer. The exercise imparts a healthy tone of mind and spirit, together with a manliness and simplicity of manners. It is very rare to find a good horseman who is churlish and lacking in that delicate and instinctive appreciation of the feelings of others. Horseback riding begets in the rider a love for his horse, which he shows by many acts of kindness toward his faithful steed; that the horse not only understands but appreciates this thoughtful care on the part of his master cannot be denied. And there is scarcely any opportunity more favorable for the constant thoughtfulness and watchful care by a gentleman for a lady than when he acts as her escort on horseback. It is while on horseback that a man will show his power of will, his courage and ability to meet and master emergencies which accident will often force upon him. Horseback riding develops a cool demeanor and a steady, resolute will, and these are best obtained from worship at the shrine of nature. These, with nature's tonics of purest air, clearest skies and plenty of sunshine, will give healthei appetites, richer blood, steadier nerves, stronger muscles and a clearer brain.

Not the 'wildering waltz in the ballroom's blaze,
Nor the chivalrous joust, nor the daring race,
Nor the swift regatta, nor merry chase,
Nor the sail high heaving waters o'er,
Nor the rural dance on the moonlit shore,
Can the wild and fearless joy exceed
Of a fearless ride on a fiery steed.

The Plague Spots of the Turf.

By Mr. William Day.

In the last number of the Fortnightly Review, Mr. William Day writes on "Turf Reform." The article goes to show that there are plague spots in English turf matters as well as in the United States. The part of it most likely to interest our readers is as follows.

IN-AN-OUT RUNNING.

There is no doubt that plenty of in-and-out running can be shown with regard to horses belonging to members of the Jockey Club, as well as in the case of such as belong to other people, which, on the ground of public form, it is difficult to account for. One must not impute motives hastily, however, to one person or another. Yet the question arises, to whom are such things to be ascribed? Is it the owners, the trainers, or the jockeys who are accountable? For, of many of the cases I allude to, it may be certainly said that unscrupulous intention appears evident in them. Ought not offences against Turf morality to be met with equal severity in one case as in another? or is even-handed justice to be ignored, and are some favored people to be allowed immunity from penalties which are scrupulously exacted from others.

THE SELLING PLATE.

One of the plague-spots of racing is assuredly the "selling plate." Races of this kind have been for years past nothing else than a medium of investment for inveterate and desperate gamblers. Such men may enter a horse worth £1,000 or more, to be sold for £50, then back him to win £4,000 or £5,000, and eventually buy him back for a small advance on the selling price. There is no fear of losing the horse, for few trainers, jockeys, or owners would care to displease a great man on the Turf by refusing to comply with his modest desires in such a case, or by opposing him in regard to the repurchase. That this is often done there can be no doubt, and I am one of those who think that it ought to be very sternly repressed

The best remedy I can suggest is the application of an old regulation, or one of similar intention. Thus: let any owner who has entered a horse for a selling plate have the power to claim any other horse also entered for the same, at the value of the stakes and price of entry, at any time after entry is made until an hour before the fixture for the first race of the day. I believe this would effectually check the malpractices complained of, if such you can term the evil.

READY MONEY BETTING.

Here is another evil of the turf, that of ready-money betting. No energetic endeavors have been made to put down the scandal. Yet no one can doubt the power of the Jockey Club to crush it out of existence any moment it shall choose to apply itself to the task. List-keepers, ready-money bettors, and a whole army of welshers, many of them well-known to racegoers, are permitted to ply their nefarious and unlawful calling openly, receiving the tacit sanction of the authorities, by whom also they seem to have every facility afforded them of practising cheating and lying—at any rate, no obstacle is put forward to prevent their so acting; and this on every racecourse in the kingdom may be seen now, done as openly as it was before the Act of Parliament was passed to suppress it. What are the police about that they wink at such derelictions of duty? And where are the law officers who control them? If a man picks another man's pocket of a pound he becomes amenable to the law, and receives punishment when caught. A welsher robs not one man but fifty or a hundred of various sums, and large ones too, but he meets with no restriction and is allowed to rob on with impunity. Is it possible that such scandals should be suffered to exist in broad daylight, and allowed in our midst without even an attempt by the officers of the law or managers of race meetings to uphold right and justice and repress the evil? If card-sharpers, thimble-riggers, and fortune-tellers, besides others, plying their unlawful trades, have been successfully dealt with, why cannot the ready-money bettors and their abominable clique be as easily and completely put down? But the enactments and mandates of the authorities have been set at nought and despised, and the announcement made on all race cards "that no illegal betting will be allowed on the course" is disregarded.

OWNERS BETTING AGAINST THEIR OWN HORSES.

The next great evil I desire to allude to is that of owners laying against their own horses, whether they intend to run them or not. In past times immense sums have been got of favorites for certain great races by their owners in this way, and although the practice has always been condemned by the majority of owners, as it has been by the Jockey Club, still the guilty go unpunished. Is it not carried on now, and frequently, too, while nothing beyond a wail from unlucky backers, or a slight remonstrance in other quarters, is ever heard of the transaction? Such tricky ways of getting, possibly, thousands of pounds out of a horse should surely be repressed, and for this purpose something more is required than mere caution or reproof, at which culprits simply laugh and go on as before. Fair justice should be levelled at one class as well as at another, in which I think that all right-minded, honest, and independent men will agree, whether they belong to the Jockey Club or whether they do not.

REFORM THE JOCKEY CLUB!

Quis custodiet custodes? The Jockey Club is the body that must reform the turf, but first and foremost the Jockey Club itself must be reformed. Mr. Day says:

If we are ever to effect a radical change for the better we must begin at the top, and not at the bottom. Members of the Jockey Club are, as a body, intelligent, high-minded and honest, yet truth compels me to add that there may be among them, now or hereafter, as there have been formerly, some who have failed to meet their proper obligations to trainer or jockey, and who would possibly be left penniless if they paid their debts. Yet such individuals continue to run horses in other people's names—in spite of the prohibition—as often as they care to do so. More than that, some of these noble sportsmen bet and lose and omit to pay the bookmaker they have betted with, well knowing that he, poor man, dare not proclaim the fact, however large his loss, for fear of losing the custom of their acquaintance in the great world. I ask candidly if such men are fitted to act as members of the Jockey Club?

ELECT THE MEMBERS FOR THREE YEARS.

Let us see, under the present system, a member of the Jockey Club, having been once elected, sits for life. It seems to matter very little, too, what character he may happen to acquire on the turf or elsewhere. If that be bad, he is not brought to book for it, but may remain, so long as he lives, in full enjoyment of the rights and privileges of membership. The system is not a good one in any way, but when it becomes a cover for malpractices it is assuredly to be regarded as bad. The remedy for it might be very easily found and carried into effect. I would suggest that members of the Jockey Club should be elected every three years, thus reconstituting their body triennially. Until some such measure is adopted, the best efforts of the Jockey Club for the good of the turf will continue to be nullified by the votes or conduct of some who belong to it.

OTHER INTERNAL REFORMS.

I should think it must be evident that a meeting ought not to be held unless a fourth or a third of the whole body of members are present. Then again, open voting on legislative or judicial questions recommends itself as a salutary improvement to the secret method now followed. Also, the dignity and usefulness of the Jockey Club would be vastly augmented if the press was admitted to its deliberations, especially when any important case, interesting generally to the turf public, was before it. The more thoroughly such matters are ventilated the better for us all. We know the precept that "It is easier to teach twenty than to be one of the twenty to follow what is taught." And as the whole racing world looks to the Jockey Club for some authorative guidance, it is clear that publicity would be of advantage. Its investigations of doubtful proceedings would then be held in the light of day, and must necessarily result in a marked improvement of the whole morale of racing.

INTRODUCE THE PARIS MUTUAL.

Again, I should like to see such a wise step taken as the introduction of the Paris Mutual at all race meetings, with the consent and under the sanction of the Jockey Club. Were that accomplished, it would effectually do away with some great evils, among them that of owners laying against their own horses. Probably nothing else will ever abolish that pernicious practice. Under this system laying commissions could not well be executed, since wagering would mostly be restricted to betting on the morning of the race-day, while investments on the course could only be made in the Paris Mutual. Thus it would not be so practicable to make a big sum by laying against any particular horse, and so that crafty expedient, with all the dishonesty it involves, would not be resorted to. Thus, too, an owner could get, what it is very difficult for him to get as things are—a fair price against any of his horses, and the public would be equally benefited.

HOW IT WORKS.

To show more clearly how this system works, I will give another illustration. There was one little handicap at Newmarket last year, I remember, for which twenty horses ran. A certain bookmaker made a £3,000 book on the event, and as no one happened to back the winner, he won the whole sum. The outside price was twenty to one, and ten to one would have been the starting-price paid. Now, if this transaction had been conducted by the Paris Mutual, had any one put a sovereign on the winner, he would have got, under the circumstances, the £3,000 less £150 for the costs of working the machine, or 5 per cent., which I believe is the amount deducted in all cases from the winnings of any lucky backer.

The Americans, with their usual quickness at initiating improvements, have adopted the Paris Mutual, and so have driven the betting-men off the field. France is doing the same thing, and is reaping the same advantages. In India, too, the new system has been introduced with the like effect.

The Paris Mutual, or some scheme like it, appears to me our only refuge from one of the worst evils of racing. It has proved so benefficial elsewhere that I do not see how it could fail of like effect here; and it would bring about due observance of the laws against gambling—habitual infraction of which is one of the most obvious and obnoxious features of every race-meeting. What we can do, however, and what we must do, some day or other, is to protect the backer from being fleeced, as well as to divert his losses to the use and benefit of the turf itself instead of to the maintenance of a class of individuals who do not contribute in any way to its support, and to many of whom can only be described, mildly, as unscrupulous plunders of the ignorant and weak-minded. Risk of mischances would be avoided entirely, since the backer can draw his winnings immediately after the race is over, and on the spot. Surely this, among so many advantages already enumerated cannot be regarded as unimportant, and invests this mode of wagering with an impartial fairness that can be claimed for no other method of betting.

The Vallejo Race Track.

War has not broken out between Vallejo and Napa as yet but there is a strong inclination on the part of the Vallejoites to religiously keep away from the fair which is to be held at Napa this year. A reporter of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN was made conversant with the matter on the occasion of a short visit there several days ago. According to the story heard, it seems that when the District Agricultural Association was formed the Directors agreed that the fairs should be held alternately between Vallejo and Napa. In accordance with this understanding, the fair of 1887 was held at Vallejo and that of 1888 at Napa. When the Directors met this year it was decided to hold it again at Napa, and now the Vallejo end of the district are breathing threats of vengeance against one of the Directors, whom they claim has betrayed his trust. Of course, the Napa side of the question was not heard, and that may bear a different aspect.

However, the citizens of Vallejo have had several meetings to raise money and build a race track of their own, with such success that the matter is well under way, and undoubtedly the course will be finished within a few weeks. Dr. Trull, the owner of the land, made concessions to the Vallejo Jockey Club, and they raised in the neighborhood of $1,800, with which to make the course. Mr. Frank Simonton made several surveys as the ground was of a rolling nature, and it became necessary to make excavations on the back stretch, while the side on which the homestretch is located has to be raised considerably. About 16,000 cubic yards of dirt will have to be handled, the cost being much more than was originally deemed necessary. The club had plenty of spirit and grit, so they secured the services of William Carter as Superintendent, who started in at once to complete his work, ably assisted by Messrs. Smith and Connolly. The Executive Committee appointed by the club consist of William McGill, Thomas Smith, John Collander, E. McLees and John Reddan, all of whom have worked indefatigably to further the movement. In grading the track, quite a ledge of rock was discovered, which would have required considerable blasting to remove, so the lines were altered, and now the track is 60 feet further East than at first intended. The money subscribed has been all expended, and it is found that $400 more will be required to finish the work.

The stables and fencing are further advanced than the track proper, they being under the personal supervision of Dr. Trull, who has kept at his part of the business unceasingly. The following letter from the Secretary of the Jockey Club would indicate that the lacking amount had been collected and that the work would be finished in short order:

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: The Vallejo Jockey Club will hold its fall meeting October 8th to 12th. The track is fast nearing completion, and the stalls and grand stand are being rapidly pushed forward. We expect to have the finest track in the State. I will forward our list as soon as possible. Yours truly, F. W. TRULL, Sec.
Vallejo, Cal., Jan. 29, 1889.

Remedy for Bark Bound and Gummy Trees.

In all orchards, whether large or small trees, some are invariably found of a stunted growth, making poor headway and finally "gumming." That is, the sap exudes from different portions of the tree, through the bark, and as soon as it is exposed to the air hardens. If neglected and allowed to remain long it means the slow decline of the tree, though it may make a slight growth each season and bear a little scrubby fruit, but finally dying, sometimes after holding out for years, of no earthly profit to the orchardist, remaining at about the same size and spoiling the appearance of the orchard. When the leaves of the tree have a yellow, faded tinge and a rather unhealthy appearance in the bark it is beginning to be bark bound. If by examination you can find no other cause, a gopher may have girdled the tree, it may have been barked, or it may have been planted in alkali soil; these causes will all make the tree have a withered look about it, and of course are outside of the real binding of the bark. The gumming is not the first symptom of disease; not until the bark is so tight that the ready flow of the sap is obstructed in various parts of the tree does the sap burst through the bark. This is the time when the tree is generally suspected to be diseased, but by a little close observation anyone can detect the trouble before this gumming commences. When trees are found looking this way take a knife, holding it firmly, and slit the bark on the north side of the trunk from the ground up to where the tree branches, making the incision through the bark, and not cutting into the heart of the tree. This allows it to spread, thus liberating the sap all around the trunk and making a way for it to eventually distribute itself over the tree wherever needed. It will then stop gumming if not too far gone. With very bad trees it is recommended that they be dug up and replaced. If the tree is gumming badly and is in a place where it is not desirable to dig it up, scrape away the gum with a knife down to the bark, then thoroughly cover with grafting wax. This has been found an excellent remedy used in connection with the slitting.

Grim's Gossip.

Elkwood is trying salt water for his legs at the beach.

The Bard is said to be looking well and going perfectly sound at Sheepshead in his work now.

Billy S., 2:14¼, is now in Colorado. Why not come further and have a shy at some of the California pacers.

Volante is working well, and shows no signs of lameness, although the leg is still there.

Ballarat, Senator Hearst's two-year-old is said to run very unkindly in his work, showing signs of a very bad disposition.

Mr. J. O. Donner, the proprietor of the Ramapo Stable, has the refusal of Pontiac at $10,000, when his racing days are over.

Several of the Eastern papers say that Mr. Bonner will, after this year, turn Maud S. out to grass, and in spring breed her to Anteeo.

Chas. H. Eagan, secretary of the Sonoma and Marin Agricultural Society has resigned and W. P. Edwards, of Penn's Grove has been elected to the office.

The St. Louis Republic, speaking of the Baggage-Redlight fiasco, says there are too many gentlemen and too few horsemen in the box just now.

L. U. Shippee last week bought from Chinn & Morgan the yearling colt Gibraltar (Longfellow—Carrie Phillips by Pat Molloy.) The price paid was $2500.

Ab Stemler is at present in Kentucky; he will bring back the yearlings purchased by Mr. Shippee in the spring and probably will buy a few more while there.

E. J. Baldwin's Caliente won a well earned victory from Come-to Taw at Chicago on the Fourth. The time, 1:59⅝, was good, considering the condition of the track.

Mr. Corbitt will not start any of his stallions in races this year, as he declines to trot against mares and geldings, and there are no stallion races in which he can enter.

Jimmy Dustin last Saturday drove Almont Patchen a mile in 2:18½, and shortly after Maggie E. went the full mile in 2:19. Evidently the veteran's hand has not lost its cunning.

Jim L. 2:20½, owned by James Linscott of Watsonville, and Daisy Neal a three-year-old, belonging to W. S. Neal, arrived in Santa Rosa this week, to be prepared for the circuit.

Shamrock's back weakened last Wednesday, and it was decided to take him back to Pleasanton. Had it not been for this he would surely have gone inside 2:20 this fall, and may possibly yet.

In addition to Chico, Marysville and the Willows having racing meetings this fall, Red Bluff is also competing for public favor, and will offer an attractive programme to those who delight in horse racing.

A curious coincidence occured last week. Drizzle, the favorite, won the two-year-old event at Sheepshead, and a British Drizzle at the same time was winning the Northumberland Plate in England.

The three minute class at Chico is going to bring out a very large field of horses, many of whom are fast, and local excitement is at a high pitch. Bets are being made that 2:26 willbe knocked higher than a kite.

F. A. Sprague, of Butte City, Colusa Co., has secured the pool selling privileges for the Chico Fair. Fred is an old hand at "how much am I offered for choice," and as he knows every one, will probably do a very large business.

Matt Allen is weeding out his stable. San Simeon is turned out; W. Meaney has taken True Briton and Peach Bloom to educate across the sticks, and Sir Launcelot (Sir Modred—Faustina), on account of temper, has been added to the list.

The Golden Gate Fair Association give free purses in all the running races at Oakland. This innovation should insure a splendid entry from all over the State, and with a prospect of large fields everyone is sure to visit the fair.

All horsemen must remember that the entries for the Fresno $20 000 purse closes on the 15th inst. Mr. Baldwin has worked with a vim at the Eastern meetings and it is confidently expected that he will have several entries in his pocket when he returns next week.

Last Saturday, at the Oakland race track, J. C. Simpson's Rathbone beat Tom William's Bryant W., a dash of a half mile for $100 and a dinner. Spanish Charles rode the winner. A new match was made for Saturday (the thirteenth) $200 a side, 120 pounds each three quarters of a mile.

The trotter, Bonanza, is likely to verify my predictions before long, it is only a few week ago that I said he would trot close to "20" this year, and he is fast approaching that mark in exercise, for early in the week he covered the full mile in 2:24½, the last half being completed in 1:09.

On Tuesday at the Bay District Track, Fleet worked three heats, the best being in 2:34. On the same day Hickok with Gracie S. showed the way once round the track to Bonanza, Little Hope and Griffin's green pacer, the mare finishing a length in front, in 2:28.

California horses are showing their mettle, El Rio Rey in the West and Salvator in the East. With top weight the handsome son of Prince Charlie after a hard struggle with the light weighted Tenny just, and only just, landed the Realization Stakes.

A gentleman in the train offered to lend his friend a book, "How to Win at the Races," which he said contained a system that has never been beat; when Badge won he had some chicken salad and a quart of extra dry at the course; when he came home after Vivid's defeat he had some beef and beans and a cup of coffee in town.

On Tuesday, at Eureka, the Introduction Stake was won by Welcome, Brady second, Applause third. Three ran. Time, 1:49. The District Trot was won by Walstein (Director dam by Electioneer) in three straight heats, 2:39½, 2:40¼, 2:41½. The Novelty race was won, the quarter in 0:24½, by Sleepy Dick; the half by Lida Ferguson, three-quarter and mile, 1:49, by Susie S. Hotspur and Stoneman also ran. A full report by our special commissioner will appear next week.

Mr. Salisbury has just returned from a trip East.

On the 28th of June at Charter Oak Park, Hartford, J. H. Goldsmith's Gean Smith, trotted the third heat in 2:16¼, the fastest mile of 1889, in a race. He is a black gelding by Dauntless.

Sorrento was very fractious when McCarty started to ship him from Chicago. He kicked everything in the car into pieces, so Dan took him out and sent him the next day.

James Gilmore, proprietor of the new Aintree trotting track, near Liverpool, England, says it is the fac simile of the Bay District track here, as far as he can judge from pictures of the track which he has seen.

The Los Angeles Polo Club, at a meting last week decided to hold a steeplechase meeting at Agricultural Park, shortly after the fair. They will have a varied programme consisting of cross country, sticks and flat races, the latter for half bred horses.

The public has suffered from a queer set of judges all around this spring. At Latonia they jumped out of the stand to get a drink, and never saw the race for a principal stake. In St. Louis they couldn't see anything, and in Chicago they are blind.

Grant Parrish's Referee has stolen the picture of Racine from the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN and palms it off on its readers as a likeness of Dan Honig's "Cartoon." This may be considered a smart piece of work for a Chicago man to do, but it brands him as a thief nevertheless.

It will be noticed by referring to the advertisement of the Willows Agricultural Society that they have changed their dates so as not to clash with Napa. This will enable those who desire to make the northern circuit to appear first at Napa, from whence they can go direct to Willows, Chico, Marysville, etc.

Yum Yum made her first appearance at Monmouth on Thursday, but although a strong favorite in the books, was ignominiously beaten. Senator Hearst's Anaconda also started in a race the same day, and although heavily backed, was never in the running. It rained very hard, making the track a perfect quagmire.

J. H. Outhwaite, of Sierra Madre, Cal., has purchased from W. H. McCurdy, of Cleveland, Ohio, the two-year-old bay filly Biscari, by Director dam Bicara (dam of Pancoast and Mayenne, dam of Cresendo), by Harold; second dam Belle (dam of Belmont and McCurdy's Hambletonian, 2:26½) by Mambrino Chief.

It seems that after all, Irene although blind, is by no means scrub bred. Her sire Longtime is by Melbourne Jr. out of a Wardance mare; her dam is young Beulah by imp. Rapture out of a mare by Falcon (son of Lexington). Some of our prominent breeders would not object to the Melbourne and double Lexington cross with (through Rapture) the Orlando blood to give pace.

At last the great Spokane has had to lower his colors to the great Kentucky favorite, Proctor Knott. It was in the Sheridan stakes at Chicago on Thursday and in the presence of 15,000 spectators. The track was not fast, still the mile and a quarter was made in 2:13½. In the betting Spokane was the choice at six to five, Proctor Knott being quoted at two to one.

Sensation has been sent East, and it is currently reported, prior to being shipped the grey gelding trotted a quarter in an even thirty seconds. This may be true, but I very much doubt it, However, he must have shown great speed or they would not have sent him to compete with the cracks of the "big circuit."

Axtell, the celebrated three-year-old son of William L., last week trotted on the half mile track at Cedar Rapids (Ia.), a full mile in 2:21¾. This though a wonderful performance, is not the best time ever made on a half mile track as several of our comtemporaries state, for Jay-Eye-See, in 1887, trotted in 2:15½.

If the stallions now in training for the National Stallion Race at the Breeder's meeting next fall keep to their present promise as indicated by the speed developed in their work, Stamboul will have to look to his laurels, and may find another of his sex to drive him out without calling the services of Hickok's thoroughbred team into requisition.

Dick Havey has been putting Fleet, (yearling record 2:36) through her paces this week and the youngster is developing a great deal of speed. Four heats were given her on Tuesday as follows: 2:37, 2:34, 2:33 and 2:32. The last half of the last mile was negotiated in 1:12 and the last quarter in 34 seconds. It is just possible that Mr. Valensin will lower both the yearling and two-year-old record in 1889.

A short while ago, at the West Side Park races, Chicago, Ed. Corrigan won a flat and a hurdle race with the same horse, Winslow, the flat race being 1-16 miles, which Winslow won in 2:02¾, with 101 pounds up, and the handicap hurdle race, one mile, over four hurdles, in 1:59½, Winslow carrying 145 pounds. Winslow is a five-year-old brown gelding by Ten Broeck, out of imported Queen Maud, and his performances are the only ones of the kind on record in American turf annals.

"You can't tell me anything about a nerved horse," said a well-known turfman a few days ago. "Here's Hanover, whom nearly everybody thought was only a sprinter, going out and making a show of Firenzi in a mile and a half race, and to-morrow he may not be able to run a little bit." It is true. The great horse is so uncertain in his performances that many fear to back him, but he was a great horse on June 28th, and he could readily have tied or even beaten the record had he been pressed. No wonder Firenzi's jockey, Garrison, who is very epigrammatic at times, said he wanted a lasso to catch him on the homestretch.

D. Scott Quinton left Trenton, New Jersey, the begining of this week with a string of horses, the property of Marcus Daly & Co. He will campaign them in Montana and California this season. In the string are Favonia 2:15; St. Patrick, pacer, 2:23¼; Prodigal b h three-year-old full brother to Patron 2:14¼; Mascot b h two-year-old (Stamboul—Minnehaha); Nadjy b m three-year-old (Stamboul—Lady Graves); Stambella b f one-year-old (Stamboul—Fanny Belmont); Vera b f one-year-old (Stamboul—Zinfandel) and Miss Julia b m seven-years-old (Volunteer—Young Selene.)

August Belmont was very much elated over his grand victory in the Suburban, and after the race among other presents made by him was a diamond pin, value $2500. Mr. Belmont is said to be a heavy bettor; he followed Lord Falmouth's precedent in giving his trainer's better half a pretty present. The well known English racing breeder and owner never made a bet in his life, bar that occasion when he had six pence wagered with his trainer's wife against his own horse who won and the successful owner procured a new coin (six pence) from the Bank of England and had it set in diamonds.

In describing the finish of the Derby the Chicago Tribune says: Then Sorrento challenged for second place. Quickly securing that while thousands were cheering the apparent winner, he challenged for the lead. Kiley gathered all his energies, held up his colt's head and laid the lash into him. He swerved under the stinging punishment and swung toward the inside while Sorrento was gaining at every stride notwithstanding that Taral was making a tired finish. Straightening the favorite out again Kiley once more applied his "persuader," and by a splendid piece of riding landed a tired horse a winner by three parts of a length. He rolled badly in the last 107 yards, and only a masterhand could have kept him going. A vigorous finisher such as Murphy, McLaughlin or Hamilton would have won with Sorrento.

Our local breeders owe a vote of thanks to Mr. Marcu Daly, of Anaconda, Montana, for setting an example to othe horsemen outside, as well as inside, of our State lines, in making entries at the Pacific Coast Breeder's meeting. If there be anything in blood lines, Mr. Daly will certainly come among us "well heeled." His three-year-old Hattie D. is by Electioneer 125, out of Maple, (now dead, and own sister to Woodnut, 2:16½, and Manon, 2:21), by Nutwood, 2:18¾, 600. In Favonia, 2:15, by Wedgewood, 2:19, dam Fadette by Alex's Abdallah 15, he has both blood and developed speed sufficient to make things exceedingly lively for the very fleetest of our local horses. We have heard it intimated that some of our horsemen are already inclined to show the white feather, but have every reason to discredit the report. Stamboul, 2:14¾, Sable Wilkes (three-year-old record) 2:18 Lot Slocum, 2:17½, Lillie Stanley, 2:17½, Maggie E., 2:19¼, Alfred S., 2:21, and possibly others will certainly not allow any Eastern flyer to throw a gauntlet at their feet and on their own dunghill, without taking up the challenge.

The horse shows at New York and Boston have proved a grand success. What is to prevent a similar exhibition being given at San Francisco, say in January next, under the auspices of the Breeder's Association? Such an exhibition every year, followed by a combination sale, properly advertised and managed, and in which all horses entered for sale should be sold without reserve or by bidding, would certainly draw a host of purchasers from the East, and would give our smaller breeders an opportunity not now within their reach. The prices received here might not be as high as those received in New York, but on the other hand the expense and risk of transportation to the East would be transferred to the purchaser. It seems plausible to suppose that Western and Southern purchasers would rather buy here and ship direct to their farms, than buy animals at New York but a few days off the cars after an overland trip, to re-ship a distance from one-third to one-half the way back again.

And now the telegraph flashes the news that the three year-old record of Sable Wilkes, 2:18, is a thing of the past, and Axtell sits on the throne with 2:15½ to his credit. "The king is dead, long live the king" applies with equal force to either rulers of nations, or flyers on the turf. In this particular case the family has not ceased to reign for the blood lines of the latest wonder is so closely allied to those of the lately deposed monarch, that Mr. Corbitt may well feel gratified that the record has not left the family entirely, as the following will show; Axtell, by William L. (full brother to Guy Wilkes, 2:15½), dam Lou by Mambrino Boy. The heat was trotted at the Minnehaha Driving Park, Minneapolis, last Tuesday, the trial being to beat the three-year-old record. After a warming up, the word was given and away went Axtell to the quarter in 0:33, the half in 1:08, the three-quarters in 1:40, and the mile finished in 2:15½. The telegram states that there was a strong wind and heavy atmosphere.

While most of our local fairs have yearling district races, there is not a single instance of a yearling stake or purse open to all. This year there are half a dozen yearlings at least that are said to be wonders. L. J. Rose has one who has already gone a quarter in 39 seconds; Palo Alto has two who are expected to beat 2.30 before 1890; Dick Havey has the crack Sidney yearling, who has shown a quarter in 38 seconds. By the way, he is not Valensin's property, having been sold some time ago to the Waters Stock Farm, Wisconsin Mr. Valesin himself has at Pleasanton a yearling who trotted a half in 1.20 a short while ago, and the bay yearling belonging to the late Mr. Giddings should, judging from the Petaluma reports, go very close to any of these previously mentioned. Would it not be a grand chance for some of the trotting associations to distinguish themselves by giving a purse for the youngsters? Five would be almost sure to enter at the lowest estimate, and with the probability of a race of this kind, quality is better than quantity.

Now that we have touched upon this question of exhibition and sale, it behooves us to particularly impress upon all breeders of trotting horses the necessity of registering at least their standard bred stock in Wallace's Trotting Register. Eastern purchasers will pay from twenty-five to fifty and sometimes one hundred per cent. more (qualities being equal) for registered than for non-registered stock. We hear some breeders say, "More fools they!" Well, in some instances they are, in others the compliment (?) might be very forcibly boomeranged. These non-registering breeders, will any of them exchange a twenty dollar gold coin for twenty silver dollars? If, however, they were offered twenty pieces of silver weighing twenty-five per cent. more than the silver dollars in exchange for their gold, they would hesitate for a while and conclude by advising the seller to take his silver to the mint and get it coined, or, in other words, get a certificate of correctness attached to it. To the mint it goes, when lo! and behold! it returns light in weight, yet worth more money, and the breeder freely exchanges it for its face value. The Trotting Register simply stamps its certificate of genuineness on the pedigree of the animal offered, and the would-be purchaser freely pays his money in the strength of that certificate of breeding; but for lack of conclusive proof will allow a better formed and better bred, but uncertified and unregistered animal, to go to somebody else for half the price he has just paid for the other. "More fool he," it is true, but how about "the other fool" who saved the two-dollar registration fee and got only half price for his horse?

Rancho Cotate.

BY GRIM.

When in Petaluma two weeks ago it was my great pleasure to meet Wilfred Page, Esq., secretary of the P. C. T. H. B. A., to whom more than any one person the "coast" is indebted for the association which bears the six initials. While many prominent horsemen had vainly attempted in the years gone by to establish just such a body as is now in existence, still it remained for Mr. Page to stir up the trotting horse breeders of the coast to the importance of united action by a series of brillant letters which were written for and published in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. Mr. Joseph Cairn Simpson ably seconded the efforts of Mr. Page, and it is to them that the credit is due for the excellence of the organization which is now before the public, catering for patronage, with a programme that is second to none in the country.

An urgent invitation having been extended by the proprietor of the Rancho Cotate to visit the home of Mortimer (2:27) and Eclectic, advantage was taken of the opportunity, and a seat being vacant in the buggy we were soon speeding away behind a good roadster in the direction of the farm.

There are many beautiful drives in various sections of California, but it would be hard to beat the one from Petaluma to Rancho Cotate on a beautiful summer afternoon, the great fields of hay, wheat, barley and mammoth vineyards stretching to the Sonoma mountains on the East, while the same can be seen to the westward extending to the low range of coast hills, which is the protection against heavy fogs for this Heaven-blest country. Here and there are noticed the comfortable farm-houses, indicative of the prosperous farmer, while herds of fine cattle are frequently seen browsing on the native grasses, with which the side hills are covered so abundantly. We only leave the Petaluma Valley to enter the one named after Santa Rosa, and again a grand panoramic view is presented to the eye, many thousands of acres, all in a high state of cultivation, being constantly presented, each turn in the road bringing a different kaleidoscopic view to the writer, who was making the trip for the first time. A short history of the Rancho was given by my entertaining companion, as we whiled away the passing minutes, and from him I learned that Dr. Page (the father of Wilfred) bought "Cotate" in 1849 from Mr. Larkin, the estate containing about 17,000 acres, the price paid being one dollar per acre. It was not until the beginning of the "sixties" that the Doctor left South America, to look at the land which he had bought "unsight unseen," and which far exceeded his expectations. It is less than twenty years ago since the family came to California to settle, but in the interim great herds of cattle have been raised and sold, each new purchase of graded bulls exceeding in quality those previously bought, until now some of the best-bred cattle in the State are annually sold from the Rancho Cotate. The same attention was paid to the flocks of sheep, a gradual improvement going on from year to year. Horses had never entered much into the calculations of Dr. Page, but on his son assuming the management of the estate a careful inspection was made to discover, if possible the best class of carriage horses necessary for the general market. The more the matter was gone into, the more clearly did Mr. Wilfred Page learn that the highest type of the trotter was the very best carriage horse for the open market, with the chances in favor of the intelligent breeder, getting at times an animal of rare value among the many that would be bred on a place of the proportion that he ultimately desires to have. With this idea firmly implanted in his mind, the next step was to secure a stallion second to none. He sent to a large number of breeding farms for catalogues, and finally selected from the printed statements sent him two of which he thought either would suit; so a trip was taken to Palo Alto to make a final decision. Horses of all sorts, sizes and conditions were shown him, but the two he had picked out seemed better than any of the others, so it ended in Mr. Page buying both Mortimer and Eclectic.

But here we are at the stables, and the history must be deferred until later, as Mrs. Page and four little ones are anxiously awaiting on the stoop of the large mansion to welcome papa back from town. Introductions and a cordial reception followed, making the writer feel perfectly at home within a moment or two. During a pleasant evening the story of Mr. Page's was resumed.

After obtaining possession of the two stallions the next step was to secure the proper kind of mares to cross with the Electioneer blood. In this all important matter due care and consideration was paid to the teachings of those who had been in the business for years. Last year Electic was too young to do stud duty, and Mortimer was only given a few mares, as his owner wanted to give him a record. Admont by Piedmont dam Addie was the chief of the harem in 1888, and right royal marks has he left as to his productive powers. As it approached the "wee sma hours" we were still talking horse, I the attentive listener, and my host doing most of the talking, something I was very willing to submit to, for there are few better posted men on pedigrees in the State than Wilfred Page, the descendants of Nutwood being one of his best themes, something that few Californians can talk intelligently about, owing to the loose manner in which that great stallion's book was kept while doing stud service on the coast. When good-night was said I almost wished it was morning, that the conversation might be renewed, for I had passed an agreeable evening and learned a great deal from my well informed host.

An early breakfast, and away we were, to inspect the brood mares and see the little ones by their sides.

It would take altogether more space than can be spared to go into the beauties of each individual, but the following will give a fair idea of the stock now on hand, simply as a nucleus to what I hope may some day be one of the principal breeding farms in the State.

Belle S. is a two-year-old by Anteeo, dam by Grey McClellan, he by Gen. McClellan. Belle is only a new comer to the ranch, and too young to show produce.

Adaline, eight years old, b m, by Ethan Clay, he by Henry Clay 507, dam Fleety (full sister to Alert, 2:24½) by Ensign, 2:28½. Has yearling, bay filly, Hesperine by Hesperian 3203.

Bellasa, six years old, by Elector, 2:21¼, he by Electioneer, dam by a son of California Smuggler, out of Susie Clifton by Werner's Rattler. Filly foal at side by Guy Wilkes.

Carrie, eight years old, br m, by Mohawk Chief, dam Nellie by Ben Franklin. Filly foal of 1889, is Mohadma by Admont 5349, by Piedmont, 2:17¼, dam Addie, the dam of Woodnut, 2:16½, and Manon, 2:21. Carrie has a yearling filly called Mohair by Mambrino Wilkes, sire of Gus Wilkes. Clara B., eight years old, b m, by Nutwood 600 (2:18¾), dam Jennie by Roadhouse's St. Lawrence. Her produce is a black filly Reinette, three years old, also owned by Mr. Page, her sire being Dexter Prince by Kentucky Prince, sire of Guy, 2:12, and ten others in the 2:30 list. The dam of Dexter Prince is Lady Dexter, full sister to Dexter, 2:17¼, and Dictator, the sire of Jay-Eye-See, 2:10, and Director, 2:17.

Eve, b m, by Arthurton 265, sire of Arab, 2:15, dam Old Lady by David Hill Jr.

Halloween, ten years old, b m by Satellite 2500, dam Lorena (dam of Valient, 2:28¼), by Volunteer, sire of St. Julien, 2:11¼, etc. Halloween has a bay filly at her side by Admont 5349.

Ida Walker, sixteen years old, ch m, by Curtis' Hamiltonian 539, who has four in the 2:30 list, dam by Berthune, sire of Sidi-Hamet. Her last year's colt was sold at the New York combination sale for $1,100. Her present foal is a black horse colt by Sable Wilkes.

Lorilee, six years old, b m, by Glasgow, son of Marksman (sire of Misty Morning, 2:21), dam Zenobia by Rysdyk's Hambletonian 10. Lorilee is a bay horse colt by Admont 5349. This colt is a magnificent youngster, and would draw admiration from the veriest novice in horse flesh. It is no wonder that he is such a fine one, as his blood lines are of the best. The following tabulation gives the reader an idea of his breeding:

BAY COLT.

- Admont
  - Piedmont, 2:17¼.
    - Almont ..... Abdallah 15. dam by Mambrino Chief.
    - Mag Ferguson ... Mambrino Chief. dam by Grey Eagle.
  - Addie ..... dam of Woodnut, 2:16½, Manon, 2:21.
    - Hambletonian Chief ... Hambletonian 10. Mary Hulse.
    - daughter of ..... Geo. M. Patchen, 2:23.
- Lorilee.
  - Glasgow
    - Marksman ..... Thorndale, 2:22½. Lady Patriot.
    - Clara Clay. ..... Harry Clay. Clara Clarita.
  - Zenobia
    - Hambletonian 10 ... Abdallah. Kent mare.
    - Belle ..... Post's Hambletonian dam by Ethiopean.

Maldita, five years old, b m, by Alexander 490, grandsire of Yolo Maid, 2:14, as a three-year-old, dam Mollie by Mohawk Chief, sire of the dams of Lot Slocum, 2:17¼, and Sallie Benton, 2:17¾, at four years old. Maldita is the dam of a sucking bay colt by Admont 5349.

Minnie Allen, 8 years old, ch m by Arthurton 365, dam Lady Allen, (a full sister to the dam of Sweetbriar 2:26½) by Geo. M. Patchen Jr. 31. A bay filly by Le Grande 2868, is running at the side of Minnie Allen.

Sallie, 9 years old, b m by Mohawk Chief, dam Bonnie. Sallie has a bay filly by Admont 5349.

Sunny Slope Belle, black mare, by the Moor 870, sire of Beautiful Bells 2:29½, Sable, Sultan 2:24, etc. Mr. Page has a yearling horse colt, out of Sunny Slope Belle, by Le Grande. This colt is at present in the hands of Mr. Hickok at the Bay District Track, who thinks very highly of him.

Emma Steitz, is an old ch mare, who was celebrated in her day for her great speed, and has produced several fine foals two of which are the property of Mr. Page. The first is Reka Patchen, by Alexander 490, and she has a grand filly by her side, by Mortimer 2:27, he by Electioneer 1:25. The second of the produce of Emma Steitz is Pattie Patch, a full sister to Reka Patchen. She has a ch filly by Admont 5349. Emma Steitz has a ch suckling colt, by Admont 5349. Peep-O-Day, the two-year-old Dawn colt, which Orrin Hickok is training, is out of this mare, and has demonstrated his ability to get within the magic circle whenever his owner desire to give him a record.

Lupe, a fine appearing grey mare is by imp. Mohamed (Arabian), dam a Black Hawk mare. Lupe, to the cover of Alexander 490, has produced Lalla and Laleli, and has now by her side, a beautiful iron grey filly by Mortimer 5346. Her daughter Lalla has a grey suckling filly by Admont, while Laleli has not had any chance to prove her productiveness, not having been bred yet.

One of the very best fillies at Rancho Cotate, is Leoline by Clovis 4909, dam Leah by Woodford Mambrino 2:21, sire of Abbottsford 2:19, Mambrino Dudley 2:19, and Pancoast 2:21, (he the sire of Patron 2:14¼); 2nd dam Maud, (King Jim 2:20½ and also of Attorney, sire of Mabel A. 2:23¼); she by Alexander's Abdallah, sire of Goldsmith Maid 2:14. Leoline is entered in the colt stakes at Petaluma and Santa Rosa, and also the Breeders' Association, two-year-old stakes. Leoline is put up on the Sunol style being 15:2¼ at the withers and 15:3¾ behind. She has also been placed in Mr. Hickok's charge to develop her speed, and is already proving that she has wonderful speed for such a young filly.

From the brood mares we went to the stables and I was shown large draught stallions, one a Suffolk Punch causing favorable comment, as he is just my ideal of what one of the "big legged" fellows should be.

Electic was taken from his stable and paraded up and down. This was the first time I had ever seen this well bred son of Electioneer, and was agreeably surprised to see a fine, strapping three-year-old, with plenty of height for his age, notwithstanding I had been told he was "a little thing." Electic is by Electioneer, dam Manette (a full sister to Woodnut, 2.16½, and Manon, 2:21), by Nutwood, 2:18¾, 2d dam Addie by Hambletonian Chief, etc. Where will one look for better breeding? The tried blood of the two greatest living stallions blended in this one horse should make him in the near future one of the most fashionable sires in the State. He is of stately carriage, exceedingly well put up, good shoulders and barrel, with fine quarter and legs that are hard to beat. While he has the Electioneer conformation in body and extremities his head takes after the sire of his dam, and is a relief to the usual run of Electioneers, so many of whom look alike. In this magnificent colt the breeders of Sonoma County have at their very doors one of the best bred stallions to be found anywhere, and I will be more than surprised if they fail to take advantage of the opportunity which will be afforded them next year of securing his services.

I was extremely sorry that Mortimer 2:27 could not be seen, as he had been sent to Orrin A. Hickok's stables, at the Bay District Track, to be prepared for a crucial test this fall, as he is entered in the 2:20 Stallion Stakes offered by the Breeders' Association, in which he will have to meet a very strong field of horses. On my return to the city, I paid Mortimer a visit and was surprised to see such a superior animal. Having had my say about Eclectic, it would simply be a repetetion, "only more so," if anything were said of Mortimer, so I will quote the language used by Leslie Macleod Esq., associate editor of Wallace'e Monthly, who in writing for his magazine says:

Mortimer, 2:27 by Electioneer, dam Marti by Whipple's Hambletonian.

Mortimer is built closely on the Electioneer order, and strongly meets the most critical inspection. I considered him, as a individual, about the best son of Electioneer I saw in California, and that is saying a great deal. Barring Stamboul, I am not prepared to say I saw any horse on the Pacific Coast that I liked better on the score of individuality than Mortimer. Making a guess at his height I put it a 15.3 hands, and I was surprised, when we placed him under the standard, to see that he is a shade over 16 hands high. It do not mention this to convey the idea that I prefer a 16-hand horse to a 15 3 one for a trotting sire, for such is not the case; but when you see a horse that looks smaller than he is you generally see a rarely-made one. This fellow is a very handsome dark bay, with a noble head and cleanly-cut neck, shoulders and barrel stout and unexceptionable in every particular, and back and quarters of the A 1 brand. The quarters are mammoth in power and muscle, the fore arms and gaskins stout and powerful, and the legs and joints clean and perfect. He was jogging on a soft exercising track in tips, and his feet looked healthy and good. The boy let him have his head just once, and he opened up at a true-enough Electioneer gait, and handled himself as if he had been there before. The son of Electioneer and Marti is formed in elegant and substantial proportions, and his general resemblance to his sire is positive and striking. Though built on a somewhat larger order, he is just as consistent, even and smooth in form as his noble sire. There are no loose spots, no irregularities, but all is smooth and stout, and every line and part curves into the next with perfect grace. A stout, strong and finished horse, a trotter himself, excellently bred, he has the license to prove a star in a family where the stars come not singly but in clusters.

The writer of the above is one of the most conscientious horse journalists in the United States, and I am convinced, from conversation with him, that he thoroughly believes every word he says about Mr. Pages' horse.

Mr. Hickok has several horses from the Rancho Cotate in training. One a yearling by Le Grande, dam Sunny Slope Belle, who made an excellent showing until he developed a throat trouble, which will cause him to be thrown out of training for this season. Peep O' Day, a two-year-old, by Dawn, is owned jointly by Messrs. Hickok and Page, and his work is equally satisfactory to both trainer and breeder. Leoline is still another two-year-old in Hickok's care, and she is a perfect beauty. Her breeding is enough to warrant speed, being by Clovis, out of Leah, by Woodford Mambrino; second dam Maud by Alexander's Abdallah. Clovis is one of Sultan's best sons, dam Sweetbriar by Thorndale, 2:22½. Leoline is bred in the purple, and being a fine individual should not disappoint those who expect much from her. I should like to describe to my readers the lines on which the Page mansion is built, to illustrate how much comfort may be obtained in a country residence, when intelligence is combined with common sense, and ordinary care is exercised in superintending the carrying out of the architects designs, but space will not permit, and that must be left for another time. It was with regret that "good-by" was said to host and hostess, but trust the day is not far distant when an opportunity may offer to repeat the visit.

A Bench Show Circuit.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I heartily agree with your suggestion made sometime since of establishing a bench show circuit on this coast, to include San Francisco, Los Anles, Sacramento and Portland. In the two former cities, bench shows have been held this year. The Pacific Kennel Club Show at San Francisco being a success in all ways but financially, but I understand that if the show had been held earlier in the year and certain expenses cut down, that the club would have had a balance in its favor.

The show held by the Southern California Kennel Club at Los Angeles last week, the first held in Southern California, has been a great success in everyway, the entry list being large, the quality of the dogs good, and the judging by H. H. Briggs Esq., meeting with general approval.

Now I would suggest to the sportsmen of Sacramento, to organize a kennel club immediately and hold a show during the week of the State Fair. I have no doubt but that it would be a great success. I am satisfied that the owners of dogs here would back them up in their endeavors. I would like to hear from others on this matter.

SAN FRANCISCO, July 3, '89. J. B. MARTIN.

Poultry at Los Angeles.

The poultry feature of the recent show at Los Angeles, while it did not attract a tithe of the visitors drawn by the dogs was nevertheless, a large, fine and creditable exhibition. The benching was first rate, being a series of light frames covered with white cloth except in front, where there was a door of neat slats. The birds could be as well seen at night as in the day time. The judging was not finished until Wednesday evening, for reasons familiar to fanciers, but when it was completed, the utmost satisfaction was expressed by the exhibitors at the accuracy and impartiality of the judges: Poultry and pet stock, A. F. Cooper, of Homer City, Penn Pigeons, James Fullerton, Orange, Cal. Incubators and brooders, C. B. Kelley, W. Nelson, E. R. Terwillerger, B. H. Shaw, C. T. Paul, Chas. W. Collins, John D. Mercer. A feature of the show was a coop of two ostrich chicks, nine weeks old. The birds stood four feet high and must have weighed forty pounds each. They are curious, omnivorous creatures, as little suggestive of ostrich plumes as can be imagined. A number of fine pea fowls were shown. Several incubators of different patents were in operation, the eggs having been placed in them some time before the show, so that hatching was in operation all of the show week. It was interesting to watch the chicks free themselves from the shells and gradually attain strength but we could not avoid the belief that the whole incubator system is taking a mean advantage of eggs, which would in the order of nature mature under the solicitous care of a fleecy hen and not a current of hot air.

The Asiatics were the largest class, next being Plymouth Rocks and Wyandottes. Bronze turkeys were large and of good type. Games and game bantams were also excellent.

The pigeon exhibit was both large and superior, Mr. Geo. T. Marsh, of this city, owning nearly all the birds shown and taking a lot of prizes. In the poultry department as well as among the dogs perfect cleanliness was the rule and the last day of the show was as free from malodors as the first.

A Private Field Trial.

Prairie chickens being ripe, the season opened, Jay took his usual evening hunt among the stubbles and pastures in central Kansas, L—— county, last fall. The Irish setters Judith, Fanny and Nannie being the chicken finders on this occasion.

Fanny, with her great speed and fine style, usually cutting out the work, but requiring watchfulness from her inability to refuse a run after the fleet-footed and cunning jack rabbit, which pest abounds in central Kansas, and is a very difficult animal to break a young dog from chasing.

This particular evening I will always remember, both from the fine work of the dogs, and the dreadful storm which ensued that night. Putting the dogs down in some oat stubbles first, they covered the ground thoroughly without result till the extreme corner was reached adjoining the corn field, when Fanny pointed, backed by Judy, the young Nannie rushing in and flushing a fine bevy of full grown birds, for which she received the usual rebuke.

Jay's gun was to his face in a minute, a 9½-lb. Smith, a hard shooting reliable gun, which the owner could rely on reaching well out for a bird, and usually killed very dead; hastily getting a bead on a right quarterer, which fell to crack of gun, missing a distant left quartering chicken; rapidly shoving in more shells, one more is bagged.

Judy and Nannie retrieving in good style. Fannie forgotten for a minute, is soon found on a point some distance away, which, from her unsteady actions Jay surmises to be a jack. Nor is he mistaken, for the latter soon runs a little piece then stops, and sitting up on his tail, complacently smiles back upon the now eager Fanny. The old lad, becoming apparently satisfied with the looks of things, and having sized the dog up correctly as an easy victim, runs again, shakes out his legs, runs lame, and finally Fan, despite my whistle, can stand it no longer, and lets go in full cry after bunny. The latter takes things in a comparatively easy manner at first, but discovering the pursuer to be an unusually fast one, opens up in grand style, and with throttle wide open soon disappears over a knoll, the dog closely behind. Knowing Johnnies habits, Jay takes a rest. Nor has he long to wait till the jack comes hopping back in his tracks, having doubled on Fanny and given her the slip. When close enough Jay tumbles him over and awaits Fan's return, belts her over the head and shoulders freely with the dead jack, and tying it to her collar, made her carry it around for a few blocks, and pretty effectually cured her from chasing. She got so sick of that rabbit that Jay took it off finally in pity to her. Many sportsmen would lie down and weep at such frivolity in a dog, but Jay loves an ambitious, dashing dog, one to be checked rather than urged, and despises a slow, pottering dog that isn't full of hunt and life.

Changing to a large pasture containing a pond, in which the dogs have a grand swim; ordering them on, Judy roads to a point, and finally Fanny, striking scent from opposite side, tumbles from a grand burst of speed to a stiff point almost over on her face. Calling the young dog up to back, and checking her desire to flush, she refuses to back, but establishes a point of her own.

Moving up to flush, three old birds get up which swiftly try to escape, but two drop for Judy to retrieve, the third being marked down after a long flight. In the edge of corn ordering dogs over they fail to find, but work out into open and point the pinnated grouse some fifty yards from place he dropped, getting up with a whirr and a cackle which Jay has often heard in the evenings.

The first barrel feathers him, but failing to stop, the second is quickly fired after him, and he comes down with a thud. A fine big and fat cock grouse.

Finding no more chickens in this pasture, the dogs are ordered into the low and reclining corn, which has been blown down by the wind. But being unable to see the dogs, which is one of the chief charms in this sport, it is soon deserted for some wheat stubble. Several covies are found here, the dogs work well, shooting has been good, a good bag already made with very few misses, and everything is lovely.

The sun is settling below the horizon, the sky is bright yellow, red and variegated. A cool and refreshing breeze blowing.

The view in all directions, in the shade and glow of the setting sun, is one of beauty and peace. Jay is at peace with the whole world, his pipe lit, and the fragrant, to him, smoke rising up in little circles. He loves his worst enemy now, satisfied with everything and everybody. He ponders and reflects, thinking what a lovely world this is to live in, how sweet are its pleasures, what good people it contains, cares nothing for past or future troubles, but simply rests contented in the blissful present.

Ye sportsmen ye know all the sensations better than any feeble pen can describe them, the delights of nature in her varied forms, be it on prairie or mountain, which only the sportsman at heart can fully enjoy.

Time flying Jay notices not the approach of night but sits pondering over past scenes afield.

The distant bark of a farmer's dog, lowing of cows, followed by distant thunder, wakes him from his reverie and noting black and threatening clouds spreading and spoiling the pretty picture, turns his steps homeward.

The dogs pointing stanchly into some brush brings his gun to his shoulder very quickly, but with a whirr up and away with lightning speed darts a covey of quail which are sacred from harm, from Jay's gun at this season.

Another and another covey are quickly found by the dogs, till nearly home. Jay now thoroughly hurried by the approaching storm, the glaring flashes of lightning and howling wind, is soon in the house.

The sky which such a short time before had presented so calm and peaceful appearance, is now covered by a black and appalling cloud.

Jay is very thankful that his beloved wife and happy children are safe in another State away from these terrible Kansas winds.

Hastily lighting lamp and securely fastening all doors and windows, he awaits the storm, which grows apace.

Wind howling and whistling and tugging at the stout little shanty, as if to pull it out of the ground, thunder rolling, rumbling crash, following crash the whole heavens riven by the lightning.

The wind, now a perfect gale, laughing and howling in demoniac glee at the destruction it appears to contemplate, fills one's soul with horror.

Towards midnight Jay can stand it no longer; his shanty has a dozen times threatened to fall on and crush him. Calling his beloved dogs together, he makes a dash for the cellar, which no house in that part of Kansas is without, shutting himself in the cold and darkness; making his bed on a butter tub and a pile of stones, he proceeds to pass the night, for the storm has come to stay.

The building above rocks, creaks and groans under the weight of the mighty blasts, lightning striking many points in close proximity.

Once entering the cellar, a stripe of yellow and glaring light slipping down the stone wall into the ground floor of cellar causes Jay to move uneasily, and having heard that it was easier to hit a stationary than moving object, he keeps on moving, greatly objecting to any of the treacherous electric fluid insinuating itself down his coat collar.

That night lasted several weeks, and the worst and wildest night man ever had the horror to live through, such lightning, such thunder, and, above all, such wind, on daring to look out during a lull.

The blackest cloud, almost touching the ground, ever witnessed was seen clearing the shanty, but returning with redoubled force, accompanied by hail and rain. Throughout that entire night the storm raged; great was the destruction to crops; many an already partly-ruined farmer was completely ruined that night.

Not many houses being carried away, for the reason that all houses in that section were one-story solid stone buildings, but even a few of them were blown down. Haystacks, windmills, outhouses were found scattered to the four winds of heaven.

Gentle reader, I trust you are in a country where you are free from these visitations of the elements.

Seattle, W. T. JAY SEE EN.

We are pleased to learn that the Los Angeles Bench Show paid well, for which desirable outcome the dog part is to be credited. It was astonishing to note with what unanimity visitors went immediately to the dog benches, made a close study of all the exhibits and then passed cursorily through the poultry annex. Both shows were well worth careful inspection.

The dog men of Denver, Col., are moving in behalf of a bench show, and we hope will give a successful one. Mr. Claude King, Denver, is the Secretary pro tem.

One of our very best of English setters recently crossed the Atlantic. This is Monk of Furness, the well-known son of Sir Alister and Belle of Furness, recently sold to the Elm Kennels, Forest Lake Minnesota. He leaves behind him many son and daughters, some of whom will doubtless do much to prepetuate the fame of their sire.

[This is what the English Kennel Gazette says of a dog owned by the Elms Kennels, the advertisement of which appears in another column:—ED.]

Since the advent of Mr. Wm. Graham and his success in the judging ring Ireland does not seem so far away, and this week it is brought still nearer by receipt of an advertisement from Mr. John M. Niall, of Killaloe, County Limerick, offering for sale Irish setters of the rarest breeding, most approved form and highest quality. Mr. Niall has sent many Irish setters to America, among them being several world beaters, such as Kathleen, pronounced by Dr. Rowe "The Queen of Irish setters," Derg, a first prize winner at the Westminster Show, Red Hugh and others as good but not so well known. The dogs offered are strong in both bench and field strains of blood.

Irish setters are popular on the Pacific Slope, and our readers will doubtless begin correspondence with Mr. Niall. If any desire to see full pedigrees of the puppies offered, they can do so at this office.

The English setter Sportsman, by Gladstone—Sue has been sold by Mr. Shelley Hudson, of Covington, Ky., to Mr Pierre Lorillard, Jr, of New York. Sportsman is sire of Sirius, Sirocco, Saladin and Sunlit owned by Californians.

Mr. Orton Gifford, of Wahpeton, Richland Co., Dakota, advertises elsewhere in the paper some choice pug dogs and Irish setters. The pugs, by Champion Kash—Narka, are perfectly bred, and should be just right. The Irish setters, strain to champions Bruce and Glencho, two most fashionable dogs in both blood and winnings. The local pug fancy is not as strong as it should be, and we commend the advertisement to our readers.

Messrs. Post and Watson, of Sacramento, proprietors of the California Kennels, have sent all of their stud of English setters except Sweetheart and Sunlit, to the kennels of Mr. De Mott, at San Rafael. Mr. DeMott will care for the dogs, rear the puppies and manage the kennel. The move is a wise one, for several reasons. No man can give proper care to a dozen dogs except one who makes it a business. Then too, Judge Post lives in the city of Sacramento and had not sufficient room for his dogs. They will be much the better for the change.

Mr. C. H. Kobecke, San Francisco, has purchased a brace of bloodhounds, Premier IV. and Barnaby Nell. The former by Premier III.—Duchess of Ripple. Barnaby Nell by Barnaby—Ripple Buscom.

The death of Scout Croxteth, which occurred at the home of Senator Pinder, in Santa Rosa, on June 14th., deprives the fancy of one of the best dogs of the breed that has ever appeared in California. Scout was a young dog, and in puppyhood suffered severely from distemper, the disease leaving him for a time, inclined to chorea, but he outgrew the nervousness and in the last Pacific Coast Field Trials showed very creditably. He was a clean, powerful, game looking dog, full of hunting instinct, and of nice disposition. As a stud dog he proved his reliability and his decendants show admirable quality. Senator Pinder is of the plucky sort and he will undoubtedly secure a successor to Scout very soon.

The provision in the conditions of the Texas Field Trials published last week which limits competition to "amateurs" is a singular one. The club offers cash prizes, winning and receipt of which will make the winner a professional, and competition for which will also destroy the amateur standing of all competitors. If the desire of the club is to avoid contests against professional handlers it should limit its prizes to pieces of plate; professionals will not, unless well paid, compete where coin cannot be won.

Such a limitation of a stake will probably emasculate the Texas Trials, and make wins there a very uncertain index as to the absolute quality of the winning dogs. Older field trailers prefer to compete in open trials, choosing rather to lose in first rate company than to win by reason of incompetency of opposing handlers. Personally we had infinitely rather run a good third to Consolation and Daisy F. than win first over Blitz Burglar D. and Flake of Flockfinder. To be beaten by that brilliant setter Chance, handled by Avent, after running up for first, is an honor not lightly to be esteemed; while to win against a rank, untrained unconditioned beast that by good luck has been advanced in a stake and is handled by an arrant, unfair, so-called amateur is really no honor either to dog or handler.

No record made except in open competition is worth a rap and it is a surprise that Texans, of all men, should make a close corporation of their club and its meetings. We should be glad to receive from Secretary Thomas, a resume of the reasons which inclined the club to favor a "baby" stake.

Sacramento Spring Races.

The promoters of the proposed spring meeting at Sacramento have received such encouragement from the business men of the Capital City, that the project is now an assured success. This is as it should be, for there will be an ample response from Eastern horse owners, who will only too gladly avail themselves of the opportunity to take advantage of the climate, when opportunity is offered by which expenses of the trip may be made. The following is Secretary Smith's letter to this office, and the list of the stakes for 1890 and 1891.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., July 2, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The Spring Race Meeting of the State Agricultural Society, is now an assured event. As I have written you previously, we purpose giving a four days meeting in April, following the P. C. B. H. meeting in San Francisco.

I have sent circulars East, calling the attention of owners of thoroughbreds, to the advantages offered by our winter climate and the opportunities of racing at the Blood Horse meeting in the Fall, and two very respectable meetings in the Spring, thereby giving them an opportunity of early development and such other advantages, as you know our climate affords.

I have written Secretary Culver, asking the hearty cooperation of the Blood Horse Association, in our effort to bring to this State, such stables that have heretofore wintered in the South.

I see no reason why we cannot, with the additional advantage to race, bring out several prominent stables to take part. I have often been told, that if advantages to race were offered, they would certainly prefer coming to California to winter, than going elsewhere.

You will to observe, by the circular enclosed, that for the beginning, our stakes are very respectable, and will be worth to winners, from $1,500 to $4,000 each.

Very respectfully,

EDWIN F. SMITH, Sec'ty.

P. S. I also enclose you circular, sent to the breeders of this State asking them to subscribe and inaugurate a "Breeders Stake," thereby assisting us in the organization of additional advantages, which will in future, benefit them.

E. F. S.

There will be four races each day: one two-year-old and one three-year-old of the above stakes, and two others, handicap and purses for all ages, to be announced for entries to close January 1st of the year of meeting. No purse race less than $400; no amount less than $400 will be added to stakes.

A Pacific Coast Association.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The subject of forming an association for the purpose of stimulating and governing turf events on the Pacific Coast is by no means a new one. As far back as 1863 the writer, in company with several other representatives of the trotting turf, held a meeting in the parlors of the old Cosmopolitan Hotel, corner of Bush and Sansome streets, for the purpose of organizing and electing suitable gentlemen to fill the offices necessary for carrying into effect the purposes of just such an association as the one you now propose. At that meeting we then found, as doubtless one would now find, some persons who were opposed to a home government. After much discussion those of us who were in favor of the immediate organization of a Pacific Coast Congress reluctantly consented, for the sake of harmony, to an adjournment.

I was then strongly in favor of the movement, and whatever doubt I may have had of the existing necessity for such a government has long since been entirely overcome. I might of my own personal knowledge recite numerous cases in which the so-called National Congress was either too remote or perhaps too full of other affairs to exercise its functions in due time to dispense justice to those who, under its government, had at least a right to expect official action within a reasonable period.

Not only has much unnecessary delay and entanglement of turf matters grown out of the remoteness of our situation from the National Congress, but there has incontrovertably been some very questionable rulings, which doubtless have been made from a want of correct and reliable information, owing to the many difficulties attending an action or correct hearing of a case so far from the place of its origin.

Give us an honest home government, and honest home men to govern us. Let our turf law-makers and executive officials have charge and control of the emoluments arising from all violations of their laws to sustain our association when thus formed; and when so equipped there need be no harmful delay in adjusting all our grievances and in bringing proper and speedy punishment to all offenders against the rules and requirements of an association formed for the purpose of encouraging and ennobling the trotting turf and making it here in California and throughout the Pacific Coast what it should be elsewhere—the leading and most popular of all out door sports.

The proposition to organize the association by taking for its officers one member from the Board of Trustees in each district is in my opinion quite proper and practical, providing, by all means, that a meeting be called to give the trotting horse men and the public generally a fair chance to make their own selections, for undoubtedly some of the present incumbents would prove as inadequate to justice as they are otherwise incompetent. In this way we shall receive the approval and co-operation of all well meaning men, and instead of having, as at present, to abide by the rulings of men totally without the ability or knowledge necessary to give judgment even on the most unimportant question, we shall have men of sound judgment and integrity to decide impartially on the different questions that may come before them. It were far better to be governed by honest men of no pretense whatever than to be at the mercy of the ignoramus who is too conceited to acknowledge himself in the wrong and seek information from men whose experience and honesty would set him right and give justice to those who are so unfortunate as to fall under his brief authority.

BEN E. HARRIS.

1626 TURK St., SAN FRANCISCO, June 27, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Your card or letter regarding the facts of a Pacific Coast Trotting Association received. As a general proposition I am in favor of a Pacific Coast Association, as the number of associations is growing rapidly, and the horse interest in the states and territories of the Pacific Coast has reached a stage that an association of the character proposed will be of manifest advantage to all concerned, and I favor such an organization for these and collateral reasons. Yours truly,

SANTA ROSA, January 26, 1889. I. DETURK.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Referring to your circular of June 19th, regarding the formation of a Pacific Coast Trotting Association, I have to say that we are all heartily in favor of such an organization, and that we will be glad to assist in promoting the enterprise. It is something we need, and no time should be lost in calling a meeting.

Yours truly,

A. A. NEWBERRY.
Pres. Washington and Idaho Fair Association.
June 26, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I am unqualifiedly in favor of the proposition to organize a Pacific Coast Trotting Association.

I would also suggest that, inasmuch as almost all of our meetings on this Coast are of a mixed character—i. e., both running and trotting—it might not prove inexpedient whilst entertaining the suggestion of a trotting association to endeavor to combine therewith the turf interests of the blood-horse under the same organization.

With rules and laws applicable to each way of going, separate committees to take charge of each department and decide all questions of appeal from the decisions of track judges and associations, and by the mutual recognition and enforcement of fines and suspensions inflicted by one department or the other, any such penalty would carry more weight than it does now.

A mixed Board, selected from or constituted of the two committees named, with the assistance of a competent Secretary and clerks, would suffice to keep the records and look after the administrative and financial affairs of both departments.

The above is merely a suggestion of my own, and does not emanate from or express the desires or opinions of any Director of the Breeders' Association.

If there be any merit or advantage in combining the turf interests of the Blood-Horse and Trotting Associations, the best time to do it will be in forming the new trotting association on this Coast; it will at least do no harm to get the views of all breeders' and turf associations on the Coast as to both the suggestions. Respectfully, WILFRED PAGE.

Penns Grove, Sonoma County, June 29, 1889.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I received your circular yesterday, and it affords me pleasure to see that there is a plan on movement for the promotion of a Pacific Coast Trotting Association. I think it is a wise move, and I assure you that I fully endorse such an action.

Yours truly
N. A. COVARRUBIAS.

SANTA BARBARA, June 30, 1889.

Where the Car Porters Come From.

When you ride up to the gate of one of the big Kentucky stock farms, there is a little nigger boy to open the gate for you. You pitch him a quarter. When you drive out there is another nigger boy waiting to shut the gate. You pitch him another quarter. They both say "Thank ye, boss," and look happy. They say all our best negro waiters come from Kentucky. I am inclined to think all our Pullman car porters do also. There is one negro to every white man in the Blue Grass country, and two negroes to every horse. One negro cannot take care of a horse. The colored people are far more deferential in that country than they are in the North.—Forest and Stream.

A. L Hinds and Johnson drove Balkan and Ringwood two good heats on Saturday at Oakland, the first heat in 2:32. In the second they went to the half in 1:12, and kept the pace up to the three-quarters when Balkan was pulled up and Ringwood jogged home, finishing up the full mile in 2:27.

Preparing for Meetings.

A number of gentlemen interested in the meetings of the season at the County Fairs, and representing the circuit comprising Oakland, Napa, Petaluma and Santa Rosa, met at the office rooms of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN early this week, and agreed upon a plan for the circuit which will give better satisfaction all around—to turfmen and spectators. The circuit embraced is important, and in purses and stakes the total amount offered is nearly $50,000, for which many of the noted runners, trotters and pacers will contest. These gentlemen have devoted time and attention to the matter, and the plan upon which they have all so unanimously united will much conduce to the convenience of owners and all engaged, to the comfort of the horses, and contribute more to the enjoyment of patrons and visitors. Full details are given by advertisement.

Improvement in Tracks.

John A. Morris, a noted turfman of New York, has made at Westchester, for the New York Jockey Club, a straightaway track of three-quarters of a mile and a track of one mile and a quarter with one turn, each of which he thinks, will conduce to the winning of the best horse in the race, and reduce the risks and dangers incident to tracks of the customary form and preparation, especially in events wherein many starters are engaged. He has submitted his scheme to the leading men of the New York Jockey Club and believes that in fair time these styles of track will generally prevail in the United States for racing. It is not likely it will become favorite with the trotting men.

The Marysville Fair.

On Tuesday, Sept. 23rd, the Sixth Annual Fair of the Thirteenth District Association, comprising Yuba, Sutter and Yolo, will commence at Marysville. In the past, the meetings at this old time mining centre, have been very successful and the liberal inducements offered by the management should tend to make the list of entries a very large one. During the debris fight Marysville gradually grew poorer and poorer, but now the town has taken on a new era of prosperity and complaints of bad times are things of the past. It will seem strange to visit Marysville and not find "Tom" Sherwood at the helm, but a first class man has been selected to take the place of secretary and in Gus Eckart the society has the right man in the right place. There will be five days racing in all, full particulars of which will be found in the advertising pages. The racing meeting at this point has always been of a high order, and those who have experienced the hospitality of the good people of Marysville in the past are almost sure to attend the meeting of 1889.

State Fair Speed Programme.

In the sports of the fair track the managers have arranged an exceptionally attractive and inspiring programme. The division of runners and trotting is fairly ordered, and pacing has not been neglected. The several stakes, specially provided, together with the customary purses, will draw the competition of the best blood and breeds of the State. The Southern Pacific Railroad Company make generous terms for exhibitors and visitors from every part of the State, and the apportionment of premiums is judicious and liberal. The grand gold medal of the Society, actual value $200, will be awarded agreeably to the published terms—a prize in itself to be fairly gained by first award. The Fair will open on Monday, September 9th, and on Thursday, the 12th, the exercises at the speed track will begin. First on the programme is the trotting contest for the Occidental Stake, closed in 1887, with forty nominations, valued January 1st, this year, at $1,330. Next follows a purse of $1,200 for trotters in the 2:23 class; and last comes a purse of $600 for pacers in the 2:30 class. For the starting day, this promises exciting sport to interest horsemen and delight spectators.

Friday the speed sports will be to the runners, and four contests are appointed. The Introduction Stake for 2-year-olds, $50 each, half forfeit, or only $15 if declared before or on September 1st, with $300 added; $100 to second, third to save stake. Winner of any 2-year-old event this year of $1,000 value to carry five pounds extra; beaten maidens allowed five pounds; ¾ of a mile. Next, California Breeders' Stake, 1¼ mile, sweepstakes for 3-year-olds, $100 each, half forfeit, or only $10 if declared January 1st, $15 May 1st, or $25 August 1st, $600 added; $150 to second, $100 to third. Winner of $1000 stake race this year to carry five pounds, extra of two, ten pounds. Maidens allowed five pounds. Closed in 1888 with twenty-five nominations. Third race, Swift Handicap, free for all ages, 1⅛ mile; $50 each half forfeit, $15 declaration; $400 added; second $100; third $50 from stakes; weight announced Sept. 10th; declaration due 6 P. M. Sept. 12th. Fourth, Selling purse, $300, for all ages; mile heats; $50 to second; to be sold for $1,500; rule weight; two pounds allowed to each $100 to $1000; one pound down to $500. Not to be sold five pounds extra; starters to be valued the day preceding race, at 6 P. M.

The closing day of the first week, Saturday, trotting and pacing. First, two-year-old stake; mile heats; entrance $50; closed March 15th with fourteen; to pay August 10th; $300 added. No International Yacht Race.

There will not be an international yacht race in American waters this year to contest the superiority once more of Yankee craft with the cracks of England. The British yacht Valkyrie was specially designed by Watson, the famous builder of yachts, upon the order of Lord Dunravan, for the express purpose of crossing the Atlantic and contesting with the best of the New York Yacht Club fleet for the supremacy and the America cup—the prize most coveted by British yachtmen. The Volunteer, the Mayflower and the Puritan were considered by the Americans able to out-sail any yacht sent from the United Kingdom for the purpose, and upon these the contest would have devolved.

The Valkyrie was launched about two months ago, and has since been pretty thoroughly tested in all kinds of weather about the coast of the Kingdom, in competition with the fastest of the yachts of last year. Her several performances on these trial occasions were so different and so inexplicable that it became apparent the contest for the cup could not be safely committed to her. At times she behaved finely, and easily sailed away from the others in the race, leading handsomely. But on other occasions, without any explainable cause, the Valkyrie was unable to maintain her place at the front, and dropped behind, in spite of the utmost efforts of her sailing master to keep ahead.

She has now been amply tested, and the impression is that she is no match for the crack yachts of the New York Club. The Royal Club has announced that none of the British yachts will contest this year. Disinclination to accept the cup conditions is the assigned cause for this determination, but the actual cause, most likely to be found in the unsatisfactory performances of Lord Dunravan's Valkyrie, and again the Royal Yacht Club must try their better skill and ingenuity at yacht building to give them reasonable hope of redeeming British reputation in naval architecture and sailing qualities, by excelling the Yankee craft and winning the coveted prize to crown their pride—the cup the Americans have held and rejoiced in since the yacht America first won the proud triumph in 1851 in British waters. The Royal Yacht Club have adopted the American centreboard. Still there is something equally important that is lacking. Just what this is John Bull would like very much to have Brother Johnathan impart to him. May be "a Yankee craft and a Yankee crew" have a good deal to do with the solution of the perplexing problem.

The Haggin Sale.

The sale in New York last Monday of thirty-seven colts and fifty nine fillies from Mr. J. B. Haggin's Del Paso breeding farm, was another important event of the year. The total sale amounted to $113,775—an average of $1,185.15. The thirty-seven colts sold for $64,050—an average of $1,731 each; the fifty-nine fillies brought the total $49,725—an average of $842.71. The highest price paid was for a colt by St. Blaise, dam Maud Hampton, a half brother to King Thomas—$22,000; bought by Scott Quinton, representative of Marcus Daly, of Montana, of the great Anaconda copper mine. Senator Hearst, the Dwyer brothers and Walden were the principal bidders, Senator Hearst staying longest. Next came a filly, sister to Dewdrop, Senator Hearst the purchaser, for $10,000, with the Dwyers, Matt Allen, Walton and Quinton opposing bidders. A Ban Fox colt, by Queen, bought $6,000, purchased by Scott Quinton.

Col. Harry I. Thornton was represented at the sale, and bought five colts and fillies—all good ones; and Dan J. McCarty made purchase of a fine filly. James Garland, of Sacramento, bought a chestnut colt of much promise. These three were the only California purchasers.

Mr. Haggin expressed his satisfaction after the sale at the general result, but thought that while good prices were paid for the choice youngsters, some of them had had sold low down under their worth. The sale is, however, gratifying, as showing the high appreciation of California bred colts and fillies in the East, and in this respect is great encouragement to breeders in this State.

The market for thoroughbreds and superior horses is every year broadening throughout the country, and the purchasers are quickening in the sense of values. The field is, as one might say, illimitable, and no other State can excel California in the production.

Horses at Bay District.

As the various stables at the track have been reinforced or depleted lately, it was considered necessary to take a look through them again. Orrin A. Hickok has eighteen head under his care, the pride of place of course being given to Stamboul, 2:14½, though Adonis, 2:14¼ (pacing 3-year-old), runs him close for favoritism; he is Mr. Hickok's property. Mr. J. N. Ayres' brown stallion Bay Rose, 2:20, has not been at the track long, having only just left his stud duties. Mr. Searle's bay gelding Alfred S., 2:21, is getting into good form just now and should readily lower his record. Mr. Lathrop's two, one of whom is a pacing four-year-old gelding, by Guy Wilkes, out of Lucy (pacer) 2:14, and the other, a three-year-old by Electioneer, look in good trim, and both ought to have a good record before the season is out. Mr. A. B. Spreckles' Gracie S., 2:28¼, is trotting in good shape. Last Tuesday she easily went a mile in 2:28. His five year old gelding is also going well. Mr. Wilfred Page has Mortimer, Peep' O' Day, Leoline and Grand Moro. The stallion is only just beginning to be worked in earnest, his best heat being about 2:40, which, considering his heavy season in the stud, is very creditable. Peep'O'Day is an appropriately named two-year-old son of Dawn, who is bound to trot fast. He is owned by Messrs. Page and Hickok. The yearling has had very little work owing to an attack of distemper, but showed a good, square gait. Leoline is a two-year-old daughter of Clovis, showing signs of great pace. Mr. McFadyen's Redwood is a four-year-old stallion by Anteeo. He requires more work than he has had to fit him for a hard race.

Mr. J. V. Coleman's Bill O'Brien is working nicely, and if his feet do not bother him will get well inside 2 30 this fall. Mr. D. W. Grover's stallion Pedro looks well, but requires more work. The Cook farm's four-year-old stallion Charles, Derby by Steinway, dam by Electioneer. Mr. Hugh's Peyton, an 8-year-old gelding, by Electioneer, who has already gone trials in 2.24 and 2.25, and Mr. Morgan Hill's six-year-old stallion by Altamont complete Hickoll's string.

Pete Brandow looks after Racquet, 2.28½, a pacer, property of Charlie Havens; Captain Johnson's Sol Wilkes, 2.47, who has already gone inside thirty; Mr. Smith's five-year-old Abbotsford mare, and a big, fine-looking pacer; Col. J. E. English's Haggie, and a bay gelding by Albert W.; Mr. Ed. Fay's bay mare; Judge Levy's Crown Point gelding; Mr. Ramsey's four-year-old Sidney gelding, and a road horse of his own.

T. H. Griffin has Little Hopes, 2:21 (pacer), a four-year-old son of Elector; Arlington, a magnificent looking stallion by Abbotsford; Buttonhole, a fast three-year-old gelding by Button; Gonzalez, a three-yeor-old Alaska gelding; Baywood, a Nutwood stallion; Patch Allen, a bay gelding by Geo. M. Patchen, Jr.; Young Albert, a four-year-old chestnut gelding, and Steineer, a good looking two-year-old by Steinway.

Dick Havey watches and cares for five, handling them with his well-known skill, Bonanza, Haverly, Shamrock, Fleet and Mr. Valensins' crack yearling.

Clausen has Big Jim, a brown gelding and a bay; the latter a six-year-old by Nephew, was a present from Palo Alto. There are a few odd ones knocking around, among whom are Wells Fargo, Josie D., a nice two-year-old filly by Sterling, with a very taking gait. She is the property of Mr. P. Green. Charles Davis is to be seen every day behind Nona Y., the eight-year-old sister of Perihelion, Sister and others; she is now going better than she has ever gone before.

A Commissioner to Resign.

There is a rumor current in the city as we go to press that one of the Park Commissioners will shortly resign. It is to be hoped that this is true, for new blood should be introduced in the commission. This will give the horse breeders an opportunity to suggest the name of some good man to Governor Waterman for the position. Let this be attended to at once, as all owners of horses are interested in the new speed track, and it will never be completed if action is not taken immediately.

The Premium List.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The standard trotter class was introduced to give the middle class harness horse a chance to compete with his own kind. It must surely be a dunghill standard horse that a man wants to enter in a class that is below his rank. The roadster class is for the man who is breeding up. The standard class is for the man who has bred up. He must be unambitious, indeed, who wants to enter his standard trotter in a class of plebians—or full of greed that he wishes to take the money from the lower, with a higher classed animal. The premium list is not constructed to pander to the greed of any one, but to encourage the breeder and artisan all along the line.

Draft, all work, roadster, standard trotter and thoroughbred horses, all have their class, and the very fact that there are men who wish to go into a lower class with animals of a higher class, is the reason of the necessity for a rule that shuts them out. If the roadster's class were open to standard trotters, the standard horse would fill both classes, and the man who was breeding up would have no show.

To be sure, the common standard horse has not much show, but that is no reason that he should compete with the roadster.

The commoners of every class have to go home from the fair without honor or reward, except occasionally when they strike erroneous judgment or slide through a class below their rank without being detected.

I am at a loss to know what reason, except it be the money that induces a breeder to enter his horse below his level. The horse if he wins, only gains barren honor; if he looses he is doubly disgraced. G. W. HANCOCK.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN—DEAR SIR:—Will you kindly notify horse-owners, etc., that the Official Stake Book will be ready on Saturday, the 29th inst.? The work will contain the entries which have already closed for 1889-90-91, of the following Clubs: American, Coney Island, New York, St. Louis Jockey Clubs; The Monmouth Park and Saratoga Racing Associations; also, all stakes that have closed for 1890-91 of the Brooklyn Jockey Club and West Side Park.

In addition to the above will be included a voluminous and complete list of yearlings of 1889, compiled expressly for us by Col. S. D. Bruce. Respectfully yours, GOODWIN BROS.

Morality of the Turf.

WRITTEN FOR THE BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Retrospect and investigation of the subject give the satisfactory assurance that the American turf is improving in regard to what may be termed the morals of racing and the character of those who engage in it. This is to be observed more particularly in respect to trotting. In early years racing in America was copied from the English system, in which running was exclusively practiced, and the breeding of racers was confined to this object. Arabian horses and Barbary horses of superior quality for speed and endurance were imported, and only royalty, the nobility and the rich would afford the animating pleasures of the turf. Gradually, men found profit in the breeding, and it became a matter of great pride, also, to engage in the pursuit. Symmetry of form, beauty of appearance, and high spirit, with remarkable sinews beyond the nature of the draft horse, and uncommon powers of endurance, were the chief qualities bred for, until experiments and satisfactory results were obtained, and from this much studied thorough process of breeding, there was at length established, lines, which still exist and are regarded perfection in horses for racing and hunting, for uses in war, and the varieties required in the stud and turf. This tentative process, gradually developing to complete maturity, has produced the thoroughbred horse of this age, and it is generally considered that in England and America the utmost has already been attained in the perfection of the running horse or racing, as with Faugh-a-Ballagh, Kingcraft, Galopin, Bend Or, Shotover, Ormonde, Harvester, Ayrshire, Donovan, and other winners of the famous Derby, of Isonomy, Foxball, St. Gatien, the Bard, Seabreeze, and other of the great winners of the Oaks, St. Leger, Ascot, the Goodwood, Doncaster and the Cesarewitch; and in our country, since the triumph of Eclipse, have succeeded Lexington, Longfellow, Katy Pease and Ten Broeck, all of whom have increased the speed and greatly reduced the time—Ten Broeck in one mile, two miles, three miles, and four miles, which except at three miles is still unequaled. Lorillard's American bred horse Iroquois remains the only American winner of the Derby, although Prior expected to bear away that highest of English turf honors, the blue ribbon of the Derby, which is coveted even by royalty, and has sometimes been won by the highest fof the nobility.

These examples in England and America are the warrant for the belief entertained by many that the utmost possible speed has already been attained by the running horse. This can be better assured in this country, inasmuch as the comparative speed is timed by watches of the completest accuracy, while in England no public record is made of the time in a race. That the winner has run fast enough to outstrip all competitors is the satisfaction of the owners and admirers. But with trotting, these conditions do not exist in any respect save recent breeding, and this only in America, where trotting and the breeding of trotters is gradually advancing to equal place with running and the breeding of runners for the turf and stud.

The increasing attention devoted to this distinctive pursuit has had and is producing very marked and gratifying results, and among these wherein the morality of the turf is concerned is a source of pride as well as of profit, and in every respect exemplary and beneficial. As there was originally no definite attention, study or system devoted to the breeding of trotters, the trotting horse for the turf was practically a consequence of phenomenal development. There was not the breeding and training—as with the thoroughbred racer—to prepare the trotter for the turf. His price was nearly according to his performance, and declined as he failed in this quality, until at last the noted winner of his day fell into the drudgery of a farm horse or a draft brute of the clam peddler. Racing was commonly held even lower than the stage, and while the average actor was shunned by respectable society and the pulpit inveighed against his profession, the patron and habitue of the race track was looked upon as only a variety of gamester, and unfit for the association of good people. The morality of the turf was at very low ebb. There were very few race courses in the country, and only at the great running races on noted days was there the attendance of respectable classes. This was especially the case in the North. New York and New Jersey stood alone among the States north of Mason and Dixon's line and East of the great lakes in which racing was tolerated. In the South—in Virginia and Tennessee, in Kentucky and Louisiana, there were annual races, in which thoroughbreds contended, and the prominent in wealth, in public life and in society attended; but in the north it would have damaged the reputation and destroyed the popularity of a public man had he been seen on the race track. General Jackson and Henry Clay were alike most virulently denounced in the North, in their memorable contest for the Presidency, as horse racers and gamblers.

A breeding farm, one for trotters, would have been pronounced as an abomination in that period, and the owners of race horses were accounted as disreputable. For the jockeys and trainers, and the ordinary frequenter of race tracks, the feeling was much as though their presence was contaminating. But in the West and South racing and breeding had their lines of limit to respectability. The breeders and owners of thoroughbreds and the patrons of the turf were held to be worthy and honorable gentlemen; but the man who run quarter races was as a moral leper, and only at the roadside lone tavern or at the grocery at "the corner," and by only his "ornery" neighbors was he recognized as a casual acquaintance. A trotting match was akin to a game of cut-throat at short cards, and only the commonest of people attended such racing. The sporting man was pointed out to be avoided.

Mark the great change since that period and note the character of the turf. Among the great breeders of runners and trotters are the foremost in the land—in wealth, in worth, in fame, honor, intelligence and noblest qualities. It is true of the States eastward—equally true of California and of this Pacific Coast. The breeding farms are vast and magnificent estates. Millions of dollars are invested in them. The best blood of every country in horses is sought and imported to stock these farms. These gentlemen are public benefactors—they refine and elevate human nature, and improve and develop to perfection the dumb animal most useful and most valuable to man. They are enriching and advancing their States and the whole country. They are educating and training men to humane regard and better treatment, to more intelligent uses of the horse. Similarly, in degree, training is advanced to an honorable and beneficent pursuit, and the jockey is respected, trusted and honored agreeably as he strives to rank in his high art, which has the elements of a meritorious profession.

The great advancement in the morality of the turf is demonstrated upon the turf itself, and in our country, even more gratifyingly than it is in England. There the reformation has gone far toward abating the dishonest practices upon the turf, and of excluding from it the characters who dishonored it—the nobles the same as the commoners. The worth and wealth, the beauty and the fashion, from royalty to the tradesman, are delighted spectators at the great races. In America, from Maine to Texas, from the Atlantic to the Pacific, in every State and Territory, the race course is the frequent enjoyable resort of the people, from the highest in respectability, in social position, greatest in honor and good name, to the shoe-shiner who polishes the foot wear. None are ostracised because they visit the track; it is noble sport to witness. The buildings are costly, sumptuous, excellently managed, and track and grounds are maintained in good order to the comfort, protection and delight of all. Refined ladies grace and throng the club house, the stands and the field in splendid equipages. It is a joyous, exciting ennobling sport—harmless as it is exhilarating. In these brilliant assemblages the morality of the turf is an approved quality. It is lifted from the lowly place to the elevated station; it is refined to the degree of purity which is compatible with wholesome enjoyment and cheering pleasure. The advancement has been greater and better with the trotting turf, but racing has in every respect much improved from the methods of past years.

Mr. B. C. Holly, of Vallejo, has sold to J. H. Kelly, of San Bernardino, the ch s Happy Prince, four years old, by Bayonne Prince, 2:21¼, dam Belle Medium, 2:37, by Happy Medium; second dam Belle Vernon by General Mott, the dam of Mott Medium, 2:29½. This youngster is a fine individual, with plenty of speed and a graceful action, and should be a great speed producer, coming from such families as he does on both sides. Price paid, $2,500.

ROD.

Dr. C. W. Aby, Champion Angler.

"The above head is hardly correct. 'Liar' instead of 'Angler' would have suited better. When Dr. Aby visited Lakeport we gave him a great deal of true information about the fish in clear Lake and the streams. We even told him about the boys with their dogs chasing them around in the grain fields, and both dogs and boys catching them by the hundred. We even showed him the place and proved it all. We also gave him an opportunity to kill three at one shot in passing along the road, and that, too, several miles from the Lake or stream, merely in a ditch by the side of a road. He still insisted we were all liars. We do not think the Doctor would intentionally tell a lie, but he merely wants to advertise Lake County as the fishing ground of the world, and correctly, too. See what he writes to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN."—Lakeport Democrat.

(Our confidence in Dr. Aby's skill with the rod is increased by the spuming of the inveracious Democrat man, who can be nothing other than an envious follower of St. Peter. The simple recital of a day's sport with fourteen worms and a lot of catfish sent us by the Doctor two weeks ago, bore an unmistakable stamp. Months ago the Doctor wrote about killing eighty-four snipe without a miss, and we believed that story; why cannot the pesky Lakeport scribe permit us to accept as a verity this latest simple annal from that most guileless of men, the Manager of Guenoc. If the Doctor was made to say that he killed two tons of catfish with hook and line in seventeen minutes, using fourteen worms, has not the Democrat man knowledge enough of men to know that the Doctor must have written one ton instead of two? An ample apology is due from the Democrat man for pretending to know anything about either Dr. Aby or catfish; he is probably up on suckers.—ANG. ED.]

The Art of Shooting.

EDITOR BREEDER AMD SPORTSMAN:—I have just read a book on the Art of Shooting, written by the justly celebrated gun maker, Mr. Chas. Lancaster, son of Mr. Lancaster, the inventor of the central fire cartridge as applied to shot guns. There is no one living who can so well impart information on the art of wing shooting as Mr. Lancaster; this I believe, and my reason for saying so is that the London papers are constantly speaking in the highest terms of Mr. Lancaster both as a crack London gun maker and particularly as a most skillful instructor in the art of wing shooting.

It is to be regretted that in this country there is not one man of whom I know who can be justly called a "coach" on shot gun shooting. I don't mean to say that there are not plenty of men here who can shoot, for I am of the firm opinion that there are more fine shots in America than in any other country, but I don't know of a single gun maker who is either competent or, if able, willing to instruct the novice or more advanced sportsman in the art of wing shooting, at any rate I have never met such an one, nor have I any knowledge of any one in the gun business who gives lessons in wing shooting.

Now, Mr. Lancaster has his own private shooting grounds outside of London where rifles, pistols and shot-guns may be tried on the target animate or inanimate for which the weapon is intended. In the matter of rifles or pistols, shooting at a mark is generally considered sufficient, let it be stationary or moving; with the shot-gun the case differs. Here it is not a question of what a man can do at a target but what he can accomplish when shooting at game, pigeons or artificial birds. To meet their requirements, Mr. Lancaster has a supply of pigeons on his shooting grounds, also clay pigeons, so that when the purchaser has selected a shotgun, all he has to do is to go to the suburbs of London and then try for himself in actual service whether the gun that mounts perfectly in the shop is really a fit. We all know the inestimable value of such services when purchasing a high priced shot gun, for it is well known that no man can tell to a dead certainty just how a gun fits until he actually shoots it at some swift moving object.

It stands to reason then that the man who is thus constantly employed can write just such a book as the novice will require, and, furthermore, as this volume is not written to puff the Lancaster gun, it is sure to be well received in America when men judge things from a practical standpoint; in other words, the man that "gets there" in this country is the one we concur by.

I most cheerfully recommend this little volume, so different from the books on guns we are accustomed to read, and I'm sure that after its perusal no intelligent sportsman will regret the time or money it has cost him. GAUCHO.

The deer season has opened in auspiciously bad luck having attended all shooting parties of which we have information. It is a backward season, and the bucks are yet soft in horn and very shy. In Marin plenty of sign is to be seen, but none have yet been killed. We hope to receive reports next week from many readers about their success.

Sportsman's Association of the Northwest.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The tournament of our association has closed and I enclose scores.

Prior to the shooting on the morning of the 19th., the annual meeting of the Sportsmen's Association of the Northwest was held, resulting in the election of the following officers: President, A. W. Du Bray, of Walla Walla; 1st Vice-President, E. E. Ellis, of Tacoma; 2nd Vice President, Jas. West, of Seattle; 3rd Vice-President, Dr. Britton, of Portland; Secretary and Treasurer, H. T. Hudson, Portland, Or.

Montana was admitted to the association, and it was decided to hold the next meeting and tournament in Portland next June.

A committee of one from each club in the association was appointed to revise the by laws and constitution.

The tournament was well attended by sportsmen from Oregon, Montana, Washington and two from California, Mr. C. J. Haas and Dr. Britton, these two gentlemen being well known in San Francisco as crack shots and genuine sportsmen, the latter being known under his proper name will be recognized in California.

During the last shoot for the Globe Trophy, the Dr. and Mr. Haas not being eligible to shoot for the trophy, it was freely predicted that the Dr. would miss his last bird so as to put himself in for second money. To the surprise of all he got his tenth bird straight, which shut him out of any prizes, and turning to the wondering shooters present: "Gentlemen" the Dr. remarked, "I shoot for pleasure and not for money. I wouldn't have missed that bird for anything and put myself in such a light before you."

The ladies present cheered him lustily, and more than half of the better class present wrung his hand warmly, and will not soon forget the noble action of the Doctor.

The tournament was managed fairly well. There was considerable confusion, however, regarding ties, and inanimate targets were not thrown strictly according to rules, no two birds being thrown at same elevation and distance from traps.

The scores appended are necessarily imperfect, as we found it impossible to get a correct copy.

Mr. Z. Doty, of Seattle, won the Selby badge for best average during tournament, using an L. C. Smith gun. Mr. Gard Kellogg of same place, won second best average with a Smith gun.

Mr. Du Bray, of Walla Walla, won the badge formerly held by Mr. Moore, of Portland, on mixed targets using a Scott gun.

Mr. J. M. Bell, of Tacoma, won the Globe Trophy, representing the championship of the northwest on live birds, the latter trophy having cost $350.

Seattle sportsmen were entirely unprepared for the event, having had no practice, and nearly all of them having been burnt out in the late fire. The few who were present did very well considering the circumstances; only about five or six being present, whereas, there would have been twenty-five at least, but for the recent fire. Seattle contains more good shots than any other city of its size that we know of. Those present did not shoot up to their average by any means. The live bird shooting was very fair, the birds being an average lot. Birds being scarce it was impossible to shoot off many of the ties.

The Sacramentos played in hard luck last Sunday on their own ground, for at the end of the eighth innings they had thirteen runs to the San Franciscos three. In the ninth the latter hit Zeigler all over the field and tied the score, and in the next innings got a man over the plate and won a well earned victory, fairly snatched out of the fire.

ATHLETICS.

Athletic Sports and Other Pastimes.

Edited by Arphippus.

SUMMARY.

Several important sporting events took place during the past week. The regatta was a grand succes. The wheelmen's race meet was well patronized, and an immense crowd of people gathered at Shell Mound Park to witnes the athletic games of the Scottish Thistle Club.

RUNNERS, WALKERS, JUMPERS, ETC.

The Olympic Club's "cross country" team will shortly resume practice.

A "cross country" team composed of the long distance runners of the C. A. A. C. will be organized in the near future.

Frank O'Kane of the O. C. will take part in the sprint runs on Sept. 9th. This promising young runner says that he will pay more attention to "starting" in future, and that the starter will never again have cause to put him back for false starting.

The friends of Cassidy are confident of his ability to equal Schifferstein's 100 yards record of 10 seconds. Judging from the good account he gave of himself at the championship meeting of May 30th, Cassidy will yet be able to cope with any amateur runner in America.

Dick Jones, the well known athlete, recently took unto himself a wife. Like the majority of athletes that have married during the past few years, Mr. Jones has decided to retire from the track.

C. A. Elkridge of the G. G. A. C. continues to improve as a heel and toe walker, and at the next out-door meeting will probably surprise some of the old time walkers.

There is no reason why music should not be introduced at athletic meeting. Besides adding to the enjoyment of the spectators, a good band of music would do much towards encouraging the runners and walkers to make faster time.

The condition of Schifferstein's health will probably cause him to retire from the athletic world at an early date. Mr. Schifferstein's heart is no doubt weak, and he should avoid all violent exercise.

In addition to being a good athlete, Moffit of the University Athletic Club, is an excellent scholar. At the recent University examination he won the gold medal for military tactics, the gold medal for athletics, and the scholarship medal. This is the first time in the history of the University that the three medals were won by the same student. Moffit will next try his hand at pole vaulting, and will soon commence to practice with the intention of beating the Coast record at the next open games. Judging from all accounts this popular University boy will succeed in his effort.

The games of the Scottish Thistle Club took place so late in the week that we are compelled to hold over our account of the different events until the next issue.

A prominent member of the C. A. C. suggests that it would be a good idea if the club would send a delegation of its amateur athletes to represent it at the games of the Los Angeles Athletic Club, which will be held on Thanksgiving Day. There are two or three good men in the club who are fully competent to carry off several first prizes, and whose appearance at Los Angeles would do much towards elevating the amateur branch of the C. A. C. Eastern athletic clubs send teams to represent them in far off cities, and there is no reason why the San Francisco clubs should not follow suit.

Several well known athletes have been exercising at the Bay District Track for the last couple of weeks. We presume they are getting ready for the Admission Day games.

About 100 ladies and gentlemen assembled on the grand stand at the Bay District Grounds one evening last week to witness a half-mile race between two novices for $25 a side. The contest afforded much amusement to the spectators, for, on close observation it was plainly to be seen that the two aspiring runners, (who looked decidedly fat) were better acquainted with the German language, than with the "art of training."

Quite a number of young men are anxious to find out if there is any truth in the report that the monthly dues of the C. A. A. C are soon to be reduced to one dollar. The present dues $2.50 are entirely too high, and if the club decides to reduce them a large number of aspiring athletes will no doubt apply for membership.

There is a rumor in circulation to the effect that a team of Eastern athletes will visit the Pacific Coast next fall. Let them come on; we will be ready to fight them.

In England all athletes are known by the colors that are worn. Each man's colors are printed after his name on the programme. This plan should be adopted on the Pacific Coast, as the "number" system is not at all satisfactory. The majority of the athletes here forget to wear their numbers and the spectators are unable to distinguish one runner from another.

The C. A. A. C. can boast of having half a dozen men in its ranks who are capable of doing better than 5 feet in the running high jump. The names of these men are Carpenter, Whelan, Gafney, Foster, Sexsmith and Holland.

Two judges of walking should officiate at every athletic meeting where there is a walking race included on the programme. At the last meeting of the P. C. A. A. A. the judge of walking, instead of watching the competitors, undertook to coach the ex-English champion, Jarvis. Several remarks were made by the audience in regard to this circumstance, but the club officials did not seem inclined to bother their heads about the matter.

The Western championships of the Amateur Athletic Union were decided at Detroit, Mich., on June 15th. Three thousand persons were present to see the games. The records made in most of the events were not as good as the Pacific Coast records. The following are some of the events in which the Pacific Coast records were not equalled: Half mile run, 2 min 7 3-5 sec. One mile walk, 7 min. 34 sec. Pole vault. 8 ft. 9 in. Putting 16 lb. shot, 38 ft. ½ in. Running long jump, 21 ft. 5 in. Running high jump, 5 ft. 5 in.

THE WHEELMEN.

A. S Ireland, the game little rider of the "Alameda Scorchers," has retired from the track. Mr. Ireland has been very ill of late, and his physician has ordered him to give up racing.

A full account of the meet at Stockten will be given in our next issue.

Fred. C. Clift, of the "Alameda Scorchers," met with a very painful accident last week while out riding. Mr. Clift was unfortunate enough to take a "header," and the result was a badly sprained knee. He hopes, however, to be able to commence training soon for the walking event of the O. C. games which will come off on September 9th.

A large number of wheelmen visit the Park every Saturday afternoon and Sunday, and the ladies and children who are in the habit of attending the concerts are often amused by the funny tricks which some of the riders perform.

The wheelmen make a great mistake in not including some athletic events on their programmes. Two or three foot races, interspersed with the bicycle events, would add more excitement to the day's sport.

A meeting of the Bay City Wheelmen was held on Monday evening last at their club-room on Van Ness avenue. The following league officers were nominated: R. M. Thompson of San Francisco, Chief Consul; J. Phil. Percival of Los Angeles, Vice-Consul; Walter D. Sheldon of San Francisco, Secretary and Treasurer; Representatives—C. C. Moore of Stockton, Arthur C. McKenna of San Jose, and John W. Gibson of San Francisco. The election will take place between July 15th and August 15th.

AT THE OARS.

Thomas Gihon, the Montgomery street jeweler, is one of the best oarsmen on the Pacific Coast. Mr. Gihon does not believe in racing; he takes to the oars merely for pleasure's sake; and never misses a Sunday without taking a long spin on the bay.

The regatta on the 4th was a splendid success in every way. The different wharves were crowded with people anxious to get a look at the races. The names of the winners will be given in our next issue.

The seventeenth annual regatta of the National Association of Amateur Oarsmen will be held August 8th and 9th over Pullman course, near Chicago, Ill. The races will be open to the world.

The regatta of the Mississippi Valley Amateur Rowing Association will take place at Pullman, August 8th–10th.

The Triton Boating and Swimming Club is about to move from its present quarters at the foot of Mason street to more comfortable rooms on Larkin street. The old club-house will probably be purchased by a yacht club recently organized at the North Beach.

EXHIBITION NIGHT AT THE OLYMPIC CLUB.

The regular monthly exhibition of the Olympic Athletic Club took place in the gymnasium of the club last week. Several valuable medals were contested for by the members. The programme began with a fence-vaulting contest, in which G. H. Hamersly, J. G. Hooper, D. W. Donnelly, T. Allorelli, P. P. Bernhard, H. A. Denhard and W. G. Zelner participated. Zelner won the first prize, with a leap of six feet seven inches. Denhard was second. Club-swinging by H. J. McGill followed, after which came the rope-climbing contest. W. H. Haberly succeeded in climbing twenty-two feet in eight and one-half seconds and as this was the best record he was awarded the first medal. W. P. Henry took the second prize. W. Gallagher and J. L Lafferty then sparred three lively rounds, alternating with J. V. Harrison and R. McArthur. The entertainment closed with an exhibition "fake" fight, in which H. J. McGill and Ben Bogner were the principals. The ludicrous actions of the two men caused much merriment amongst the audience. The exhibition was in every way a success.

IN THE SURF.

The weather on Sunday last and during the early part of week was unusually warm, and as a consequence the bath-houses did a rushing business.

At Monterey, Santa Cruz and Capitola the weather has been very warm during the past couple of weeks, and crowds of people daily enjoy a dip in the surf at these resorts.

The crowd at the Terrace Baths in Alameda last Sunday was so great that many persons were unable to obtain suits.

Gus Ungerman, the champion wrestler is a frequent visitor at the Crystal Baths. Mr. Ungerman is an artistic swimmer, and the ladies never fail to admire his daring feats.

A young machinist named Barton was severely bitten by a dog-fish while swimming in the Raccoon Straits on Sunday last. Barton was over a quarter of a mile from shore at the time. This should be a warning to young men who are in the habit of swimming out a long distance from the shore. There is no telling when a school of these dog-fish will spring up.

It is a well known fact that out of every dozen people that enter the water not more than four or five can swim.

HOOK AND LINE.

The muddy state of the water on Sunday last prevented the fish from biting, and at Tiburon, Lime Point and other places the fishing was exceedingly poor. Only one or two good catches were reported.

Several very large black bass were caught at the Crystal Springs lake on Sunday last.

CLUB JOTTINGS.

Work is being rapidly pushed at the Harbor View training grounds, and it is expected that all the improvements will be complete by August 1st. During the absence of President Philo Jacoby, Capt. A. H. Lean will superintend the work. A high fence, which is intended to shelter the athletes from the cold breeze of the ocean, has already been erected, and the dressing rooms and shower baths are now being put up.

A meeting of the P. C. A. A. A. will be held next week.

Almost every day we hear of a new athletic club being organized. These clubs should not be called athletic clubs—they are in reality prize fighting clubs, and should not be encouraged. Pugilism has advanced so far in the City that forty per cent of the population aspire to be "sloggers", and it is not safe for a respectable man to express his opinion in a public place. The Major should make some effort to stop these "exhibition."

The amatuer wrestlers of the C. A. A. C. will not be allowed to take part in the coming championship tournament which will be held under the auspices of the O. C. The officers of the C. A. C. are determined that their athletes shall not mix themselves up with the "dirty" Olympains.

Now that the two leading athletic clubs will have training grounds of their own the question is what will become of the old grounds at 14th. and Centre Streets, Oakland?

REMARKS.

The intention of the Directors of this Association is to make this place a central point for racing in California. They recognize the fact, that in order to do so, they have got to give large purses in order to get first-class horses. Knowing they have as well-appointed grounds and as good a track as there is in California, having first-class stabling and the best Club House on any track in California, and plenty of fine grass for horses the whole year, and by dealing justly and fairly with the horsemen, we hope to receive their patronage. We are situated about half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles, which makes it an accessible point for the patronage of the whole State.

Being aware that the responsibility, to a great extent, of the Association, is not known outside of our own State, we herewith attach a certificate, signed by the Banks of this City, as to the responsibility of the Association.

We, the undersigned, do certify that the Fresno Fair Grounds Association is perfectly responsible, and its statements are reliable:

GROVER CLAY,

Bay Stallion, bred by Hon. W. W. Traylor, San Francisco. Foaled 1883.

By ELECTIONEER.

First dam MAGGIE NORFOLK by NORFOLK, son of Lexington.

Second dam by BILLY CHEATHAM.

Third dam by DORSEY'S GOLDDUST.

GROVER CLAY is a very handsome shade of bay, 15¾ hands high, and showing as much quality as a majority of thoroughbreds. He is as square-gaited a trotter as can be, and has shown a great deal of speed for the amount of handling. Has been worked very little, though he can show a thirty gait or better whenever called upon.

TERMS.

Fifty dollars the season, payable at time of service. Proper care will be taken, but no responsibility incurred for accidents or escapes. Mares will be pastured inside of the Oakland Trotting Park, which is especially safe, having two fences which give ample security against escape. There is a never-failing stream of water which runs through the field, and the food is good.

Season commencing first of January and ending the first of July.

This is the only son of Electioneer standing in Alameda County, and the high breeding on the side of his dam is a guarantee that his colts will inherit qualities already made famous through the mixture of Electioneer and Lexington blood. Ansel, 2:20, is from a Lexington mare, and Sunol's granddam, two-year-old record 2:18, was by Lexington, both Sunol and Ansel by Electioneer, Lexington the sire of Norfolk.

COLE'S OSSIDINE. An Infallible Cure FOR CURB Splint, Ring & Sidebone, Spavin ALL Bone Enlargements Sure Shin & C. Richard Cole TRADE MARK

OSSIDINE

Results obtained at the well-known Kalamazoo Farm.

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although perfo med by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Price $3.00 per Large Bott'e,

Owner of Eole, St Saviour, Eolist, etc., says; I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

San Miguel Stock Farm.

By Grim.

Did you ever take a drive over the Contra Costa hills on a bright summer morning, before it became too hot to make the atmosphere oppressive? Well, I did last Saturday morning, in company with Mr. Irwin Ayres, the proprietor of the San Miguel Stock Farm. In the early days of Contra Costa County the small valleys were not dotted all over as at present with orchards, vineyards and small farms, which add to the attractiveness of the natural scenery, for which the old Fish Ranch Road has been celebrated these many years. When seated behind two fine Mamrbino Wilkes mares it does not take long to cover a distance of ground, especially when you have an entertaining travelling companion with you. Mr. Ayres has been many years on the Pacific Coast, always interested more or less in the welfare of the equine race, and for several years supplied the United States Army in this State with the necessary horses for cavalry service. With a quick eye for the good points of a horse, and keen perception in discerning those which had a taint of suspicion, he made rapid headway, and it was not long before he was considered one of the best judges of a horse in California. In the course of time he secured possession of Mambrino Wilkes, which had been bred by B. J. Treacy of Ashland Park, Lexington, Ky. The horse stood at Stockton for some time, the majority of the mares sent him being of an inferior order. He was then taken to Mr. Ayres' place, near Fort Bidwell, where he served as an ordinary stock horse, his get being so handsome that the attention of horse fanciers in that neighborhood was attracted to him. When the San Miguel Stock Farm was purchased, Mr. Ayres installed Mambrino Wilkes as Lord of the Harem, and right well has he performed his duty, as the splendid array of youngsters attest to.

This prince of royal blood is by Geo. Wilkes 519, dam Lady Chrisman by Todhunter's Mambrino; second dam by Pilot Jr., who was the sire of the dams of Maud S., 2:08¾, Jay-Eye-See, 2:10, Nutwood, 2:18¾, Viking, 2:19¾, Pilot Boy, 2:20, Naiad Queen, 2:20¼, and others.

Should there be any surprise that a stallion bred in such extremely fashionable lines is a producer of great speed? Certainly not, for if trotters are not to be had from the loins of such as this, where will one have to look for them? Gus Wilkes, 2:22, was the first of his progeny to demonstrate speed, and it was not long before the son of old Fancy was away low down in the "twenties." Alpheus, another son, soon entered the charmed circle, making a record of 2:27, while still another son, Balkan, notwithstanding he suffered during all of last season with Epizootic, managed to gain a three-year-old record of 2:29½. These three sons speak volumes of praise for the sire, and if he had only had the proper opportunities, there is no telling where Mambrino Wilkes would stand to-day among the great speed producers of America.

On arriving at the farm we were cordially received by Mr. J. Smith Hill, the superintendent of the establishment, one of the best men in the State to handle youngsters. An inspection was made of the new stable and barn accommodations, which are almost completed, for the reception of those that it may be necessary to place under cover, and really it seems as though there must be room for all there are on the place, the building being of such enormous size. There is ample space for wagons, buggies, sulkies and exercising carts, in addition to the enormous hay mows which are overhead. The lower floor is separated and made into great roomy box stalls, each twelve by sixteen feet, giving plenty of moving room for the occupants. After a hearty luncheon had been dispensed with, an adjournment was taken to the stall, wherein is kept the pride of the San Miguel Stock Farm.

When Mambrino Wilkes 6083 was brought out, I could not restrain an exclamation of surprise at his beauty and symmetrical form. It is now many years ago since first I saw Fillingham (the name George Wilkes was originally known by), but the memory still retains the conformation as perfectly as though seen but yesterday. In this son of his is the same head and neck, with a slight improvement in the body, Mambrino Wilkes being a heavier muscled horse than his sire, and has the appearance of being much larger. In color he is a perfect black, stands over sixteen hands in height, and is one of the most stylish animals in California. There is not a spot about him that I would change if I could, with the exception of his near fore and hind feet, they being slightly contracted, due more to the blacksmith than to any other reason. He is the personification of all that is beautiful in the equine form, and Mr. Ayers may be congratulated on owning one of the best finished horses in the State.

The brood mares and foals always have a charm for me, and although likely at times to become enthusiastic over a grand looking stallion, it is to the producing dams that I always pay most attention. Master Charley Ayers was kind enough to saddle his pony and gently drive the mares from one of the large pastures to a small paddock, where they could be examined at leisure. The first one to claim our consideration was Contra by Electioneer, dam Mrs. Newby by Billy Cheatham, a son of Cracker, by Boston. To those who believe in thoroughbred lines in the trotter, nothing can be better than this, for the Boston blood is acknowledged by one and all as the very best to nick with trotting stock.

Contra gives a bad impression when looked at for the first time, as her hocks are deformed, but the progeny have been perfect in form, two of her colts, one by Le Grande selling for $1,000, and a yearling by Antevolo sold for the same amount. The suckling at her side is going to be a bay or brown, and is a very shapely youngster, large and well proportioned, a credit alike to Mambrino Wilkes and Contra.

Annie Laurie, by Echo, dam Black Swan by Tenbroeck, when a three-year-old, made a record of 2:30, and was always a game and consistant mare. She is a bay, foaled in 1877, and has a bay yearling filly by Clovis.

Fannie Fern is fast approaching the sere and yellow leaf age, but she has produced so many good ones that if there are none others, her mission may be said to have been successfully accomplished. She is a pretty bay, by Jack Hawkins, he by Boston; her dam a Jim Crow mare. Fannie Fern has to her credit Molly Drew, 2:27, Balkan, 2:29½, who will, bar accident, touch very near the "twenty mark" this year. Fred Arnold, 2:33½, and Onyx (trial) 2:40. Arnold also has a record of 5:09 for two miles, made in the third heat of a race. The foal at her side is a horse colt by Mambrino Wilkes and is a likely looking customer.

Narka is a bay mare foaled in 1882 by Nephew, 1,220, dam Baby by Chieftain, 721. This beautiful matron has a fine brown colt at her side by Mambrino Wilkes, which promises to be a good one if appearances are not deceptive.

Nana was bred by Trahern and Dudley of Stockton, and purchased by Mr. Ayers for breeding purposes. She was injured when young, which prevented her from making a record, although showing very fast in training. Nana is bay in color, 15.2 hands high, her sire being Nephew, dam Lady Wolden by Woodburn. She has added one to the large number of foals at the farm, the sire being the same as of the other foals.

My attention was attracted to a very handsome foal which, whenever the band would start away, was always in the lead. This filly is an inbred Mambrino Wilkes, being by that stallion out of Fredolia; the dam of the latter is a daughter of Mambrino Wilkes out of "The Beach Mare." This black suckling gives great promise and is a natural trotter.

Fancy is, in my mind, a mighty brood mare, if only because she has foaled Gus Wilkes, 2:22, to the embrace of Mambrino Wilkes, but I saw a yearling out of her by the same sire, that, if all signs do not fail, should prove a speedier horse than any she has yet foaled. Kodiac is, of course, a full brother to Gus Wilkes, but is a much better put up horse. He shows any quantity of power, is magnificently muscled, has grand legs, moves well and has all the outward semblance of a high class trotter. Fancy also has a brown filly at foot, a full sister to Gus Wilkes and Kodiac, which should be as good as the others.

Molly Fern is out of the grand old brood mare Fanny Fern by Capt. Kohl, he by Whipple's Hambletonian. Mollie has an extraordinary fine horse colt by her side by Mambrino Wilkes, and as her mother was a great speed producer and the top blood lines are also of the best, this youngster should make a mark for himself.

The bay mare Piracy has as a sire Dr. Hick's famous horse Buccaneer, her dam Louise, by Geo. M. Patchen, Jr. It is only a short time ago that the Breeder and Sportsman had a long article on the merits of Geo. M. Patchen, Jr., as a speed producer, and it was so conclusive, to my mind, that I like to find his blood in any mare; it is, in fact, the hall mark, to me, that stamps the breeding as being away above the average. Piracy also has a strain of the celebrated Blue Bull blood, which should make her a first class mare, more especially as imported Priam was the sire of her third dam, giving a good thoroughbred cross just where many think it is best. She has a great sturdy, strong colt by Mambrino Wilkes, who gives promise of equaling, if not excelling, any of the youngsters on the farm.

Maud is a fine bay mare by Don Juan, he by Speculator; the dam being a daughter of Young Niagara, a son of Niagara. She has a very handsomely formed filly by Mambrino Wilkes.

Cora has trotted in 3:00 and is a fine, large bay mare, but not satisfied with her own conformation she has proved her prolific qualities by dropping twins to the cover of the king of the harem, both of whom are hardy and strong, the mother evidently having nourishment enough for the pair.

One of the best of the matrons, viewed with an eye to general conformation, is Virginia, by Brown's Bellfounder, who was a son of imp Bellfounder. Virginia is a grand old mare, and has bequeathed to her progeny the same fine liniments that she herself possesses; a good head, neck and body, while the youngster's legs could not be improved on. This hearty little filly, which is a counterpart of Virginia, has the bearing of a trotter and may prove one of the best on the San Miguel Farm.

But here I am, rattling away at the rate of a mile a minute, never tired of saying good things about brood mares; if I mentioned about each of them separately, it would take more space than can be spared; but there are any quantity still that might be mentioned, one especially, a magnificent descendant of the Moor. The mare is called Satsuma, and is by the Grand Moor. She has all the characteristics of this noble family, and should prove a fitting cross for such a stallion as lords it at Walnut Creek.

Of the foals of 1888, mention has already been made of one, the foal of Fancy; however Chaldean, on individuality, is almost his equal. This fine colt is out of Fredolia, and is good enough for any one. He can already show a fine gait at the trot, and under the skillful handling of Mr. Hill, will undoubtedly prove a very fast one next year, for it may as well be stated here that Mr. Ayres is opposed to preparing yearlings for a race, a decision in which I entirely agree with him. It is true that records given to the infants tend to heighten the reputation of a sire, but where there is one that has continued to improve, when trained at that early age, scores are never heard of again.

Istar claims the blood of Mambrino Wilkes and Narka in her composition, and is a thrifty looking filly, on the improving order. Having the Nephew strain, backed up by that of Chieftain, the sire of Defiance, 2:17¾, Onward, 2:24¾, Cain, 2:26, and Flora, 2:30, Istar should prove another star in the galaxy of talent which I hope to see eminate from Mr. Ayres' place.

A large, strong, handsome filly is Mylitta, by Mambrino Wilkes, out of Mollie Fern. Her powerful quarters and great broad back, showing indications of unusual endurance, especially as she has a good clean set of limbs.

Anato is another young one worthy of a good word; she is by Clovis, a stallion of whose get I expect great things, and out of Annie Laurie, mention of whom is made above. Beltis is by Echo Royal, out of Piracy, and is another of this rare lot that is entitled to commendation. She will make a grand mare in time, and is fit to mingle with the many choice ones that abound at this perfect horse haven.

It was well toward dusk before the inspection was completed, and the invigorating country air had given us an appetite that only an old fashioned dinner could appease, and right royally did we do justice to the viands which Mrs. Hill had prepared for the hungry guests. After an agreeable evening spent in conversation, and a good night's sleep, an early start was effected. Mount Diablo, still casting its shadow as we trotted away toward the Pacific Ocean, the sun casting rays ahead of us, as though lighting us on our way. And what a grand sight it was as we travelled down the mountain side, Oakland, figuratively speaking, at our feet, while the bay, and San Francisco in the distance, looked more like a mirage, as a mammoth bank of fog rolled in, obscuring the ocean from our view, but still presenting a scene that can be witnessed no where but in this, the Golden State.

Training and Driving.

Written for the Breeder and Sportsman.

Track driving is styled by many as an art. When seen in its highest perfection it ranks with the arts beyond denial. That is, the mechanical arts. When in the midst of a close and exciting finish, in which apparently every horse is doing his utmost to win, watch the devices of a skillful driver as he tries to get there first. If he is an intelligent man he is probably acquainted with every peculiarity of his horse, and every move the horse makes signifies something to him. He knows to a nicety when the horse is going at his best rate, and whether it would be advisable to try to extract "another link." He has other ways of telegraphing to the horse that he wants more speed, without cracking the whip over him—and he knows that with a generous horse his chance to win is enhanced by letting the whip alone.

This kind of driving, however, is something the ordinary owner of horses does not indulge in. His speeding is confined to "brushes" on the road with some friend. It is quite a knack to drive a road horse well. There is some knowledge necessary to "settle" a horse at once, after he has made a disasterous break. Regarding long drives, it is unquestionably true that some drivers can go 50 miles a day with more ease and less fatigue to the horse than other drivers can go 40 miles, all the conditions being equal.

Colt driving is almost a business of itself, and the utmost care, combined with an accurate degree of knowledge is necessary to attain the best results. Many drivers do not seem to see any difference between a colt and a horse. Every time they take him out they "feel" of him, i.e. they speed him at his best clip. I think too much curiosity about a colt's speed is among the worst traits a driver can have. The same holds good in the case of an aged horse, as it is my belief that when a horse is in condition, and his driver knows it, when he can show his regular speed in places, it is not worth while to drive him miles out against the watch. If he is in condition and feels good, and is naturally a reasonably game horse, he will last. I think I have seen races lost by horses that had been too highly tried, that they would have won, had they been differently handled. There are many running and trotting horses who win their races in a gallop, or on a jog, about one week before the day of the actual contest. Upon the latter occasion the horse finishes some distance in the rear, and the trainer says, "he don't seem to be able to go any to-day!" As I have said he trotted his race four or five days before. He was perhaps given four heats in 2:26, 2:26½, 2:24¾, 2:26½. On the day of the race he gets beaten in 2:29½, 2:30, 2:30¼, 2:32. Men who have wagered their money on the strength of the horse's trial, lose what they put in, and either curse the horse for a rank quitter, or curse the driver for being dishonest. Probably both horse and driver did all they could. In the language of an old time driver, "they was willin', shore, but they couldn't git thar."

If a colt destined for the track has been properly fed and cared for, he will naturally want to work off his exuberant spirits. This can be done to a sulky or very light cart in such a way that the colt thinks his exercise is fun. As soon as a colt (a yearling or two-year-old) shows that he is tired, let up on him for that day.

If a colt is to be trotted as a yearling, it is advisable to hitch him up when he is about 8 or 9 months olds. Have a little harness made for him which will not chafe or annoy him, and drive him around without being hitched to anything until he is thoroughly "waywise." Teach him to stop at your command; to back and to obey you implicitly in all things. Next hitch him to a very light and low sulky or cart, and drive him slowly a few times. Be very careful at this part of the programme that he is not hurt nor scared. Most all colts of that age are as docile and tractable after being handled a few times, as if they had been used to the same thing for years—you can then turn him out until such time as you want to commence driving and training him for his race or races. He will of course have grown considerably since you last hitched him up, but the advantages of driving him when you did, will now appear. Instead of having to "break" him (which term I dislike at this later period,) which would excite and worry him, you can now harness him, and he will go off quietly, and his education for speed can at once commence. The above course I deem preferable to waiting until 3 or 4 months before the race takes place, and then harnessing him for the first time, as is sometimes done.

Every condition should be just right when his lessons in speeding commence. The colt should feel good; the harness should fit perfectly; the sulky should be light. If you are near a track, and there is any part of it that descends—even ever so little—that's the spot to move him fast. Colts are very sensible animals; they know considerably more than the average man gives them credit for, and they very soon learn what is required of them, if the teaching has been properly conducted. After a colt is speeded a few times on a certain part of a track, or a certain spot in the road, he will want to go fast whenever he comes to the same place. He can gradually be speeded farther and father, until he can do a quarter of a mile at his best rate. It is questionable whether for a yearling race, it is imperatively necessary to speed a colt farther than a half mile. Some handlers advocate one method, and some another. It would be my opinion in the case of a well bred colt, that if he was in first-class shape, and could show a fast half, he would do for a mile.

A straight bar bit will be found preferable to any other for driving a yearling or two-year-old. For a yearling the bit had best be wrapped with cloth when you first begin to drive him. This renders the bit soft and yet hard enough to control him easily. There are many different kinds of bits, for older horses, and the characteristics of the horse is the only sure way of telling what kind is adapted to him individually. I like an all rubber bit for some road horses, although they will not do for all. Some hard mouthed horses will quit pulling as soon as a rubber bit is put on them. Other horses that hardly pull enough will go up against a rubber bit, when they will not against any other style. I remember seeing in a newspaper, and it was extensively copied, a short treatise on Bits, and the author's display of ignorance was lamentable and unfortunate. He said, among other things, "never drive a horse with an all rubber bit." No horseman would put himself on record by such a statement. All makes and varieties of bits have their admirers and supporters, from the old time plain snapple, to the modern Crit Davis "spoonbill."

I think it preferable to work a horse without blinders. When driven without blinders he becomes used to every thing behind him, and the vehicle and general paraphernalia do not scare him. If he be one of the nervous excitable kind and shows a tendency to break and act badly when he sees a whip, or when a sudden motion is made behind him, it would then be advisable to put blinders on him. For a level-headed colt I should prefer an open bridle for various reasons, at least on most occasions, excepting when he trotted a race and might be frightened by some other driver's whip.

The advisability of training and trotting two-year-olds and yearlings is a debatable question, with interminable arguments and proofs upon both sides. Those opposed to the practice of racing youngsters are very "set" in their convictions, while many of the opposition ridicule the idea of its being detrimental to a colt to race him young, provided he be properly trained and cared for. Much depends, I think, upon the gait of the colt. Some colts are much smoother and better gaited than others, and trot with less waste action. They also require less weight to properly balance them. It would certainly be my opinion that it would require much attention and care to successfully carry through a season, a yearling trotter without injury, although it has been many times done. If a man has a really good and fast colt, that he has reason to believe will make a race horse when he gets age, it would be much safer to let him alone as a yearling or a two-year-old. The yearling stakes in this State amount to very little at best, (why just as much money should not be given for yearlings as for three-year-olds I don't know) and when a man wins a race with a yearling, the principal thing he wins is glory. Glory is a nice thing, but it don't pay expenses.

Harvey W. Peck.

The Thoroughbred Defined.

A Michigan exchange, in writing of this horse, says:

Let us look at the thoroughbred apart from his qualities as a race horse. In form he is a model of strength and allied with beauty. His courage is equal to any emergency, and his gameness will make him struggle to the death. His bone is the densest and hardest given to any breed; his tendons and muscles the strongest and most elastic. He is bred so as to make him the most prepotent of all domestic animals. There is no one conversant with the various breeds of horses who will not acknowledge the thoroughbred to be possessed of these qualities to a greater degree than any other family of the horse. And here is where his true usefulness lies. The qualities bred in him for a century and a half he has the power of imparting to his progeny to a wonderful degree. To the fourth generation his blood will assert itself. He can be used, therefore, to give to other families of the horse the qualities for which he is noted and which they lack. And nearly every breed of any prominence owes something to the thoroughbred. The French Coacher is nearly thoroughbred, as his pedigrees published by the importers conclusively show. The Cleveland Bay derives his best qualities from the same source. That truly American horse, the Morgan, is largely thoroughbred in its origin; and when we come to the American trotter, consider how much he owes to the fountain to which the others are so much indebted. Take out Messenger, Diomed and Trustee, all imported English thoroughbreds, and where would the American trotter stand? Take the trotting families of to-day, Hambletonians, Clays, Mambrinos, Golddusts, Pilots and Morgans, and does anyone believe it possible that they would be what they are to-day without the help of the thoroughbred? It is the source to which to look for the highest speed and courage, the most intelligence and the longest lived of all the families of the horse.

The system of breeding which has made the thoroughbred what he is being followed by the breeders of the American trotting horse, which the added advantage, through the extension of the art of printing, of having the records of their work imperishably preserved. The trotter is every day getting nearer to the thoroughbred in its obility to impart its special qualities to its progeny, and when it has reached that piont it will have got close to its ultimate limit. Yes, we like the thoroughbred, and we never yet seen a class of horses which his blood did not improve, whether it was intended for the carriage, the plow or the road. Why should we not admire him?

Reminiscences of "Frank Forester."

Twin Franks, of the schools of fin, fur and feather, and contemporaneous, Frank Buckland and Frank Forester will be remembered. Frank Forester made the United States, his adopted country, the field and scene of his exploits and his writings, and, brilliant fellow as he was, in each he has left a name endeared to true sportsmen and admired by all who have read or known of him. "Frank Forester" was a non de plume. His name was Henry William Herbert. An Englishman by birth, of noble lineage and excellent family, he received thorough university education in his native land, and in the full vigor of fresh manhood came to America. Philadelphia and New York he mainly made his dwelling places. His death was in 1858. As a writer, critic, reviewer, author, he was gifted, able, accomplished and brilliant. He was the translator of Eugene Sue's "Mysteries of Paris" and "The Wandering Jew," published by Winchester, and author of other works; but it was in his "Field Sports of the United States," his "Deer-Stalker," and his "Warwick Woodlands" that he gave vent to his flow of soul and flashed his brilliancy with unequalled fascination and every charm of fervor and enthusiasm, inspired by his natural love of every noble sport, to the measure of his faultless diction and his enrapturing art of entertaining narrative. He was the master of the sports of the field, of the brook, of the illimitable realm of manly and ennobling sports, and his adventures were described in manner most felicitous, with that fine quality of vivacity, grace and unreserve which enlisted the sense, aroused emotion and wrought conviction from guileless candor. He did more for the broad field of sporting in this country than any other of his period, and the delights and benefits of his works and lessons will endure.

I became acquainted with Frank Forester in 1843, while he was enjoying the season of woodcock and quail in Warwick, Orange County, N. Y.—the scene of his "Warwick Woodlands." In his company was a Mr. Wilkins of Philadelphia, a gentleman of wealth and culture, and an accomplished sportsman, a fine shot, and genial companion. The two stopped at the Warwick Hotel, kept by old Tom Ward—called by Forester in his "Warwick Woodlands" Tom Draw, the name reversed. Ward was a huge ton of flesh, nearly six feet stature, but his great bulk made him look much lower standing apart from others. He was an enthusiastic lover of field game, was an excellent shot, and could go afoot all day with alacrity and without fatigue equal to any. He kept a fine breed of dogs, pointers and retrievers, and had great pride in his Purdys—the crack gun of the period. But he had two guns and a rifle, made by a local gunsmith of much celebrity, and these he most highly valued for unfailing accuracy. Old Tom was a character, noted the whole country around. His tavern was upon the main road, with eight or nine steps to the porch, and on this, he usually rested, sitting upon two stout hide-bottomed chairs, turned and tilted so that the back of each supported either arm, his huge body filling the seats of both, as he gently waved and swayed as he glibly talked—and he was an entertaining talker when in the humor. He ate only rice and milk, in order to keep down his flesh, yet it constantly grew upon him. This diet had been recommended by his country physicians, who had not learned that starchy food is the very thing to abstain from to reduce the flesh, and the old fellow scrupulously adhered to the advice of his doctor. His weight was over 400 pounds and gradually increasing. He possessed enormous muscular strength. In the large room of the tavern was a round table of extraordinary size and solid make. It was the habit of the Falstaffian host, after each meal daily, to roll his huge form upon this table, with his ponderous legs high up as he could extend them. This seemed like the clumsy antics of an elephant at play. Another quality of these rollings need not be described. Ward's son was a chip of the old block—a lad of fifteen, full of fun and fond of hunting. The cranberry marshes a few miles distant were favorite haunts to him, and his dog was his inseparable companion.

At the time I speak of, Robert Sinclair, a noted sporting man of New York City, familiarly known as Bob, then a bank teller, and subsequently the host of the well-known Woodcock House in the great city, with a companion, was also a guest of Ward's on the woodcock and quail shoot. Sinclair was a famous raconteur, a plump, hearty, rosy, smooth-faced, jolly son of Scotia, and a model to copy in his manner of neatness and care in his dress, even in his fielding suits. His dogs were unexcelled in training and performance, and of highly valued lines. Wilkins alone was the equal of jovial Bob in shooting. The two teams hunted in destructive grounds by agreement—old Tom Ward along with Herbert and Wilkins, Sinclair and his companion. Every day the two or three of us who took different fields, and were less expert, evenly enjoyed the feasting assured by the two master teams.

Herbert was of impetuous, imperious nature, and at times of much nervous strain very irritable. When stirred to momentary, sudden excitement he was liable to impulsive, rash acts, which he intensely regretted a moment afterward, and agreeably to the pain or hurt he occasioned another, his sorrow and self-reproach were agonies of mind prolonged to actually prostrating consequences. Intent upon his game, he was completely absorbed in it, and neither man nor dog was safe from his burst of passion in the event of an interruption that spoiled his shot. It was an unconquerable fault, an irrepressible impulse.

One bright morning that July the teams started out, each with the prescribed bounds understood. The day became insufferably warm. Ward's son and our little party remained all day at the house. It was not until nearly sundown that Herbert, Wilkins and old Tom returned, in the cooling shades of the woodlands intervening. Sinclair and his companion, who was a surgeon, came in soon after. As the bags of game were deposited it was plain that each party had enjoyed a day or rare sport. There was, however, a strange quietness and unnatural movements among the Herbert-Wilkins-Ward party. Old Tom was not so jolly and full of joke as usual. Herbert seemed anxious and Wilkins looked troubled. The moment Sinclair and the surgeon returned Wilkins spoke to the latter in low tone, and though no word was distinguished, it was manifest that there was something serious involved. Herbert nervously walked to and fro across the room. Tom Ward stood leaning against the table. Soon Wilkins beckoned to Herbert and then whispered to Ward. The three, with the surgeon, retired to the room adjoining. In less than a quarter of an hour the signal was given for dinner. As we entered there sat Ward in his accustomed place, and about his neck was the large white wrapping which he had worn on his return from the hunt. He moved his head with unusual care, as if his neek pained him; but he was jolly and talkative. Wilkins' fear showed relief at something; Herbert was silent and seemed under restraint. The surgeon was in lively good humor. In a few minutes Old Tom spoke out in loud, kindly, bantering tone, addressing Herbert: "I'll tell you, Herbert, how we'll settle it. You send me a barrel of the best rice you can find in New York when you get back, and we'll try luck again to-morrow, every man to shoot over his own dog." That broke the icy crust which had prevailed, and thence on until the meal was concluded—a longer sitting than customary it was, too—all of us at table enjoyed a singularly jovial time in that tavern of habitual good cheer and hearty contentment. During the sitting, which finished in a symposium, the whole story came out to brighten the fun and make all the merrier. It was a serio-comico matter.

It appeared that after a day of splendid sport and rousing good luck in finding birds, in the middle of the afternoon, when about five miles away from the house, Herbert's pointer flushed a brace of woodcock near a thick clump of low growth, and he was just ready to pull triggers when bang! went a discharge from behind some trees a little in advance, to his right. The next instant he saw Ward, and, near him, Ward's dog. It was his own dog that flushed the birds, but Ward was too eager for the shot, and, supposing it was his dog that did it, he blazed away and spoiled Herbert's shot. In his hasty passionate impulse Herbert instantly discharged his gun at Old Tom, and took him in the neck and upper part of his back. O d Tom roared and turned. Herbert at once shouted for Wilkins, and rushed to Old Tom's side. The game old Leviathan of Warwick stood his ground. He neither ran nor fell, but held to his gun with one hand and was endeavoring to reach the back of his neck with the other. Herbert begged a thousand pardons and expressed his intense regret. Ward displayed no ill-feeling, but suggested an examination of his back and neck. While Herbert was making the examination, Wilkins came up; he assisted. They found tiny spots made by the bird-shot, but not a drop of blood was visible. A walk to the little stream, a comforting wash, and a short rest refreshed Ward, and the party started homeward, Tom insisting upon carrying his gun and game-bag all the way. He would talk, but Herbert was too much concerned to take part, and Wilkins gave his attention exclusively to the sufferer, who insisted that—"Oh, it amounts to nothing; it only smarts a little; I'm all right." On the examination by the surgeon at the hotel it was found that the shot, a score of them, had penetrated the epidermis and barely lodged in the thick fat of Old Tom's neck, besides the few which were in his back, some not having pierced through his stout duck jacket and strong hunting shirt. He picked out all he could find, rubbed an ointment over the columnar neck and huge body, wrapped the linen bands about, and cheered all with the assurance that no harm had been done beyond the smarting incident. Old Tom declared that Herbert had served him "just right;" that he had got no more than he deserved; and it was agreed that after that night no more should be said about the matter. Old Tom was full of joke; his neck and back full of shot. His enormous coating of flesh was as a coat of armor. Bob Sinclair dubbed him the rhinoseros of Warwick, the Woodland armadillo. During the following week the happy trio went afield every day in company, had royal sport, with ample good luck, and before the departure of the guests much wine was poured at the feasts enjoyed. Ward was abstemious in the main, but he was not a total abstainer. Herbert's impulsive shot acted as firmer and fonder connecting of the friendship between the two.

On a visit to Warwick in October following I learned from the fine old sportsman and great host that Herbert had not been unmindful of their bargain. He had sent two barrels of the finest Carolina rice, and another barrel carefully selected; also, a large box filled with an assortment of articles which rejoiced Old Tom and thrilled his son with delight. It was Herbert's magnificent way of treating those whom he held as friends.

VET.

Mr. Eaton will probably sell at Monmouth Park during the races, the head of youngsters from Australia imported by Mr. J. K. Newton, of San Francisco. They were all foaled in August and September, 1886, and are consequently three-year-olds under the American rules. They are briefly as follows:

Bay colt by Cheviot, out of Scraps.

Brown colt by Epigram, out of Helen McGregor, brother in blood to LaGrande Wheater, one of the fastest families in Australia.

Bay colt by Maribyrnong, out of Fair Duchess, closely related to Fisherman and Craig Miller.

Chestnut colt by Fergus I., out of Romping Girl, the dam of Masquerade, winner of Metropolitan Stakes at Sydney.

Bay colt Fergus I., out of the French bred mare Alsace.

ATHLETICS.

Athletic Sports and Other Pastimes.

Edited by Arphippus.

SUMMARY.

In our columns this week will be found full details of the athletic and aquatic events that took place on the 4th. Several of the amateur athletes have already commenced training for Admission Day, and a grand revival of out-door sports may be anticipated in the near future.

RUNNERS, WALKERS, JUMPERS, ETC.

Powers did so well in the "half" at the Scottish Thistle Club's games that he will be regarded as a scratch man hereafter.

McIntyre showed his old form in the mile, and a match race between him and Watson would certainly terminate in a close contest.

Holland of C. A. A. C. should give all his attention to jumping, as running does not seem to be his forte.

Raye Locke has evidently seen his best days; his poor showing in the miles sadly disappointed his friends.

A young Irish high jumper with a record of 5 ft. 11 in., will shortly visit California, and if he succeeds in finding employment here the O. C. will probably add another champion to their already long list.

Powers is anxious to run Mahoney, the winner of the amateur short race at the Scottish Thistle Club's picnic, a match race of a hundred yards. Powers has a good record for that distance and the probabilities are that Mahoney will decline the offer.

The initial games of the C. A. A. A. will probably not take place before Thanksgiving Day.

The Directors of the G. G. A. C. are on the look out for new training grounds for their out door amateurs.

The owners of Shell Mound Park should have better dressing rooms attached to their grounds.

The G. G. A. C. may hold a picnic and games in August or September.

The out-door members of the Pacific Athletic Club will train at the Bay District track until such time as the club can find more suitable grounds closer to the city. It is the intention of the club to place a team of its best men in the field on Admission Day.

A. K. Ham, of San Jose, will probably take part in the Admission Day games. With proper training, Mr. Ham should win the "hundred," providing Schifferstein does not compete.

IN THE SURF.

The weather again changed during the past week, and the surf-bathing establishments were only poorly patronized.

The Palace and Crystal bath houses were well attended during the week, as the cold and raw atmosphere caused the regular surf-bathers to seek the shelter of a glass roof and the comfort of a warm bath.

Some of the best swimmers on the coast are at present camping at Capitola. Amongest the number may be mentioned the names of Misses Annie Holmes and Bertha Bertosky. Those two young ladies are capable of showing the back of their heads to almost any of the gentlemen swimmers at Capitola.

The most prominent swimming club on the Pacific Coast is the Terrace Swimming Club connected with the Terrace Swimming Baths at Alameda. The membership is limited to twelve. The following is a list of the membees; Harry Clerke; William Hunt, Joe Greenbaum. Ed. Mowry, Al. Rosenberg, George Corbell, H. Dall, Jack Vollmer George A. Spiller. Tom Knowlton, Dick Ingram and Henry Harmon. Every member of the club is a good swimmer.

Jack Vollmer is Captain of the club and every Sunday drills his men in the regular diving, fetching and swimming movements, much to the enjoyment of the on-lookers.

The members of this club are willing to compete against twelve swimmers from any of the swimming clubs on the Coast.

Pinkham, the champion short distance swimmer of the Pacific Coast, is very anxious to make a match with some of the Eastern cracks for any amount of money.

HOOK AND LINE.

On Sunday last the fish bit well at Tiburon and Sancileto, but the water was so rough that many of the boats put ashore early in the day, their occupants not caring to risk the chance of getting swamped.

Last Saturday Judge W. H. Sears, of this city, caught over twenty-five pounds of very fair sized rock cod at Kershaws Point.

Bay fishing should be good to-morrow, as the tide will be favorable and the moon will be nearer its fullness.

CLUB JOTTINGS.

The San Francisco Athletic Club held its annual election of officers on Tuesday evening last. The following were elected: A. J. Breslin, President; W. Carl, vice-President; F. Kirchner, Treasurer; W. Barnes, Financial Secretary; F. Olsen, Recording Secretary; P. Hagen, L. Handy, J. Conrey, Trustees; J. Simmons, Marshall. The next exhibition of the club will be given on August 14th, and the club's annual picnic and games will be held at Badger's Park, Oakland, August 18th.

George W. Jordan reports that the championship medals, which will be given out at the Olympic Club rooms the last night of the wrestling tournament, will be splendid specimens of the jeweler's art. The first medals will be of heavy gold, and the second and third of solid silver. These medals will be the handsomest and most costly that have ever been given out on the Pacific Coast.

The managers of the G. G. A. C. will shortly build a running track in the gymnasium in order to afford its runners and walkers a chance to practice during the wet weather.

SCOTTISH THISTLE CLUB'S PICNIC.

The seventh annual games of the Scottish Thistle Club took place at Shell Mound Park, Berkeley, on Thursday, July 4th. Fully 6,000 people were present to see the sports. The day was unusually bright and the weather just right for out-door games. The records, except in the mile run for professionals, and the half mile run for amateurs, were below the average. The absence of several well known athletes may account for this fact. The following is a complete list of the different events, with the names of the winners.

Hop step and jump—W. Curley; 1st; T. Barnes, 2d.

The prizes will be presented to the different winners at the annual club ball, which will be held at the Mechanics' Pavilion on July 19th.

THE WHEELMEN AT STOCKTON.

The joint meet of the Oak Leaf and Bay City Wheelman which took place at Banner Island Park, Stockton, on the 4th, was well attended. Several records were broken during the day, despite the exceedingly hot weather, and the guests assembled to witness the races were more than satisfied with the excellent riding in the several events.

The parade in the morning was a grand exhibition, wheelmen of all ages and sizes being in line.

In the evening the Pavilion was filled and an enjoyable entertainment was given in the drill and trick riding. The programme closed with a grand ball. The Oak Leaf Wheelmen deserve much credit for the excellent and liberal manner in which they treated the visiting wheelmen. The races were called at 2 o'clock. The grand stand was crowed with ladies and their escorts, and a large number of spectators were seated in carriages.

The first race was the one mile novice race, the coast record being 2 hours and 54 minutes. The starters were S. E. Mastick of the Oberlin Club, Al. Coll of the Garden City's, W. R. Lippett of the Garden City's unattached. The five wheelmen raced in a bunch until the last lap, when Doane spurted to the finish, winning in three minutes. Coll was second.

The second race was a quarter mile dash, the coast record being, 37 2-5 seconds. The starters were T. W. Gilmour and C. W. Hammer of the Bay Citys, and F. E. Southworth and J. E. Hickinbotham of the Oak Leafs. Hickinbotham won the race in 41 1-5 seconds, Hammer second, and Gilmour third.

The next race was two-mile, L. A. W. State championship, the coast record being 6 minutes. The starters were F. F. Southworth, of the Oak Leafs; W. G. Davis, of the San Franciscos and R. W. Turner, of the Bay Citys. Turner led off closely followed Davis, who saved himself on the first mile, which was made in 3:28. Turner was allowed to lead until crossing the line for the last lap, when Davis raced away from him: winning the race easily in 6:48.

The fourth race was a one mile safety, L. A. W. State championship, coast record, 3:10 4-5, unless 3:10 was beaten no medal would be awarded. The starters in this event were A. L. Wolff of the Oak Leafs, C. B. Lakeman unattached, C. P. Fonda of the San Franciscos, W. A. Shockley, C. N. Langton and Sanford Plummer of the Bay Citys. Lakeman and Fonda fell out of the race early, and Plummer took the lead to the last lap, when Shockley made a fast spurt, leading to the finish in 2:59½ minutes. Plummer a good second.

The next race was a half mile handicap, the coast record being 1:22. The starters were W. G. Davis, scratch; J. E. Hickinbothom, 25 yards; C. W. Hammer, 25 yards; T. W. Gilmour, 50 yards; W. H. T. Durant, 70 yards; Al. Coll, 75 yards; L. C. Black, 75 yards; Coll won the race in 1:20 2-5 breaking the coast record, Hammer second and Durant third.

The three-mile handicap race was next on the programme. This was an interesting event to the Stocktonians, who backed E. Southworth against the fast ones from abroad. The coast record against them was 9:07 2-5, which remains the record, although an effort was made to lower the time. The starters were E. Southworth, scratch; L. G. Hodgkins of the Bay Citys, 75 yards; Doane, 150 yards; Lippet and Mastick, each 200 yards. Southworth made a good race, showing great speed and endurance, winning easily in 9:29. Hodgkins was second and Mastick third.

The two-mile safety handicap was next in order, the coast record being 6:31 4-5. There were four entries, but Wulff and Lakeman, who were placed at scratch, protested against the allowance of 125 yards to Shockley, and refused to race. Shockley and Langton started at scratch, and Shockley won in 6:25, breaking the record.

The last race was one-mile scratch, the coast record being 2:48½ minutes. Davis, Hammer and Hickinbotham entered. Davis won in the slow time of 3:11, Hickinbotham being a good second.

AT THE OARS.

The following is a list of the winners of the different rowing events at the late regatta Amateur single scull. for a trophy valued at $20, M. Stokes of the Pioneers, first. Time, 18 minutes 13 seconds.

Professional single scull, Charles H. Long, first. Time, 16:12. H. Henceman, second.

Amateur barge championship race. The Ariel crew, consisting of W. P. Hanrahan, Ed. Coffey, Henry Whitkopp and George W. Phelan, were first to cross the winning line. Time, 15:10.

Professional four-oared barge race, This event proved a gift for the South Enders, the names of the winners being George Duplessis, W. Thomas, D. Dougherty and Robert McDowell. Time, 16:25.

The last race on the programme was a race between crews from among members of the California and Olympic athletic Clubs. The Olympic crew, composed of Herman Denhard, William Haberly, Walter A. Scott, T. Pennell and A. P. Rothkopf, coxswain, won the race after an exceedingly close struggle The Judges of the race were Charles E. Lipp, Patrick Reardon, J. P. McDonnell and R. P. Wieland.

A rowing club in connection with the Olympic Athletic Club will be organized in the near future. The Directors of the O. A. C. deserve credit for the interest they take in club affairs.

Memoirs of Lexington.

A few days ago, we had a call from the nestor of the American Turf, Richard Ten Broeck, Esq., who kindly left with us a memoir of Lexington, written by Col. Bruce of the Live Stock Journal. The pamphlet is full of reminiscences of the great horse, and as the Lexington blood is at present flowing strongly in the veins of many noted trotters as well as runners it will be of interest to all lovers of the horse to read of the mighty deeds performed by the son of Boston and Alice Carneal. Mr. Ten Broeck has our thanks for the interesting article.

Twelve came to the post for this stake. With this large field of the most promising and high bred colts in Kentucky, it may well be imagined that great interest was felt, and wagers were laid in every conceivable way in the betting circles. Garrett Davis had the call over any colt in the race. Darley had but few supporters. His enlightened and spirited owner, Dr. E Warfield, a gentleman who contributed more to keep up the sport at Lexington, Ky., than any person of his day, named him, and the writer often heard him say when Darley was a colt, and up to this race, that hereafter breeders would trace back to Warfield's Darley. How true were his predictions this history will show.

A false start was made prior to the first heat, and Darley, Garrett Davis and Madonna ran about two miles and three-quarters before they could be pulled up. With the consent of the judges Garrett Davis was then withdrawn from distress and his backers' money saved. The race is easily described. The track was nearly knee deep in mud, and raining hard during the pendency of the race. Not five minutes were given between the run away and the start. When the drum tapped Darley led off, was never headed, and distanced all but three. The second heat was a duplicate of the first, Madonna being distanced in the second heat.

Same meeting, Friday, May 27th.—Citizens' Stakes; for three-year-olds; seventeen subscribers, at $100; $50 forfeit; the citizens of Lexington giving the winner a silver plate of the value of $100. Two-mile heats.

We can not give a description of this race. Suffice it to say that Darley did not run for the first heat, but won the second and third with great ease. After this race the colt was bought by Mr. Ten Broeck, and his name changed, as will be seen by the following letter to the Spirit of the Times:

"LEXINGTON, KY., May 28, 1853.

DEAR SIR:—I send you the papers this morning containing an account of the races and an advertisement of the stakes for New Orleans, which please publish with the others. I have purchased Dr. Warfield's Boston colt, out of Alice Carneal, for which I claim the name of Lexington—price $2,500. Lexington is a bay colt, four white feet and a snip, and was foaled March 17, 1850; he was got by Boston, out of Alice Carneal, by imp. Sarpedon; grandam Rowena by Sumpter, g g dam Lady Grey by Robin Grey, g g g dam Maria by Melzar, g g g g dam by imp. Highflyer, g g g g g dam by imp. Fearnaught, g g g g g g dam by Ærial (brother to Partner), g g g g g g g dam by Jack of Diamonds, g g g g g g g g Old Diamond (called Duchess). Both Jack of Diamonds and Old Diamond were imported by Gen. Spotswood, of Virginia, and both were by Cullen's Arabian. The colt was bred by me, as was also his dam, which I now and will ever own.

Signed: E. WARFIELD."

"I shall be in New Orleans in a week. Dr. Warfield is one of the most wealthy and respectable gentleman in Kentucky—seventy-two years of age, and as fine as a four-year-old. The pedigree of Lexington is certified by his former owner, a gentleman without reproach.

Yours truly,

R. TEN BROECK."

It is stated that Dr. Warfield asked $5,000 for the colt, but he was bought for $2,500 cash, with the contingency of $2,500 additional if he won the great State Stake at New Orleans. When informed that it was the intention to enter him for this stake, and that he should have the $2,500 in case he won it, he replied, "take him, I know he will win it, and I am certain of getting the five thousand dollars."

His first appearance under his new name, was on the Metairie Course, New Orleans, December 2, 1853, in a match race on the following terms:

New Orleans, La., Friday, December 2, 1853.—Match for $8,500 ($5,000 on Sallie Waters vs. $3,500 on Lexington); half forfeit. Three-mile heats.

R. Ten Broeck's b c Lexington, 3 yrs., by Boston, dam Alice Carneal	1	1
L. Smith's b f Sallie Waters, 4 yrs, by imp. Glencoe, dam Maria Black	2	ds

Time, 6:23½, 6:24½.

Track heavy.

We clip from the New Orleans Picayune the following account of the race:

THE GREAT MATCH RACE AT NEW ORLEANS.

"The success of Sallie Waters last spring in the sweepstakes over the Metairie Course, two mile heats, in which she beat Arrow after a struggle of three heats, was the main cause of yesterday's race. It may be said with truth that the result of that race engendered a bitter racing animosity, which gave full vent to itself when the "high contracting parties" met in Kentucky last spring. The Great State Post Stakes to be run here next spring (which will doubtless bring together the finest field of horses that ever met anywhere) superinduced each party in the stake to possess himself of the best race-horse that could be found. The Alabama party (already in the stake), from the repeated success of their favorite, fully believed they had already held possession of the finest jewel of the crown in Sallie Waters, and were comparatively content to rest upon their well-earned laurels, or if necessity required it, to 'fight their battles o'er again.'

"Sallie stood the champion of Alabama. Not so those whom she had vanquished. Intent upon the same high position which Alabama might have properly been believed to occupy, those who represented the other States were in search of the fleetest of the fleet, the strongest of the strong, to deride her claim to supremacy, and when the purchase of Lexington was effected, the parties met, and yesterday's match was but the beginning of the end. The controversies which, during the summer, appeared in the New York Spirit of the Times, giving vigor and vitality to that department of that journal, added fuel to the flame, and the merits of every sire, dam, colt and filly, from the celebrated ride into Jerusalem down to the Godolphin Arabian, and even to the present moment, have been fairly and unfairly discussed. Yesterday the mountain labored and the mouse appeared.

"The race was made at odds, $5,000 to $3,500, three-mile heats—the Sallie Waters party betting the larger amount. Sallie maintained and even increased her position in the betting up to the last moment, Lexington's friends either waiting for longer odds or fearful that the climate might have effected their favorite. The betting closed at 2 to 1 on Sallie.

Upon stripping the fine form of Sallie, the apparent excellence of her condition, challenged the admiration of all. To our mind she was a shade too high, and we so remarked to others. Lexington's appearance, as he walked past the stand, was by no means attractive, and he violates all the rules laid down by horsemen in the purchase of a horse—'four white legs deny him,' is the old maxim—and in addition to that eye-sore, he has glassy or 'wall' eyes, and is 'a blazed young rip;' but when stripped his form did certainly command admiration. His style of going is the poetry of motion, and the horse that outruns him in a sticky, heavy track, like that of yesterday, must be a sort of steam engine in disguise.

"Sally by no means justified the expectation of her backers, and to our mind proved conclusively that a muddy track is no place for her. She labored excessively, and from the tap of the drum to the close of the race she showed no sign of speed that could for a moment strengthen the hopes or wishes of those most largely interested in her fate—for her fate was their own.

"The day was lovely, the attendance was very numerous, the course was extremely heavy, tough and inelastic, and the contest uninteresting.

"The word was given, and Sallie (on the outside) made a dash to take the track, without success; she kept up her run, however, and they both lapped to the stand in 2:18 (excellent time for the state of the track, which was heavy and sticky). Lexington shook her off in the second mile and passed the judges' stand two lengths ahead in 2:10, Sallie receiving the spur. To any practiced eye the race was over, and the third mile he came home an easy winner in 6:23½. He cooled off so finely that $100 to $10 was bet before the second heat, which he won in 6.24½ without an effort, distancing her, and establishing, that despite his 'four white feet and white nose' he is one of the best racers that has shown here for many years.

"In fact, the Lexington party offered to draw the match this morning, but the other party refused, expecting a forfeit I presume, and their confidence was, of course, much increased by this offer. Lexington's friends did not like his condition; about five weeks before he became sick, and ten days before the match was sent from Natchez under the care of a "darkie" to take slow gallops only, and that his condition could not be relied upon—that undergoing the process of acclimation, as he was, they feared he might weaken in the race and be badly beaten."

Shortly after this match, and indeed before it was run, considerable feeling had been elicited through the Spirit of the Times upon Boston and his get, when Mr. Ten Broeck issued the following challenges, which elicited no response:

THE BOSTONS AGAINST THE WORLD.

"As there has been considerable discussion in regard to the ability of Boston and his progeny as racers, and as I happen to own some of them, of which I have a favorable opinion, to test their power I make the following proposals:

"I will name two of the get of Boston against any two horses not sired by him, to run two-mile heats over the Metairie course at New Orleans, on the 24th day of March next, for five or ten thousand dollars a side. The party accepting to name either sum, to send the forfeit money and the name of the horse to John G. Cocke, Esq., President of the Metairie Jockey Club, which will close the match. The names of the horses of both parties will then immediately be published in the daily papers of New Orleans. But one horse to start for each party, and to be named at the post; or,

"I will run the same race over the Newmarket course at Petersburg, Va., on the 12th day of June next, for ten thousand dollars a side, with the same conditions, excepting that it shall be obligatory upon both parties to have the named horses at New Orleans on the 15th day of April next; and if, after they are named, either party fails to produce the horses as above stated, the party failing shall be considered as having forfeited.

"I will also run four of the get of Boston, in Post stakes, two, three and four-mile heats, over the Metairie course, New Orleans, for ten or twenty thousand dollars a side in each race—two-mile heats, on the 24th day of March next; three-mile heats on the 16th day of April, and four-mile heats on the 24th day of April. Or,

"I will run over Newmarket course, two-mile heats, 12th day of June; three-mile heats 17th day of June, and four-mile heats 24th day of June, subject to the conditions and obligations as in the first two propositions. Or,

"I will name the same four horses for five thousand dollars for an 'inside stake' on the four-mile day of the Metairie meeting, which will come on the 6th, 7th or 8th of April. The precise day to be published two weeks previous to the race. One horse to start on each side, and to be named at the post.

"Should all the propositions be taken by an acceptor naming the same horses for each race, I will name the same four Bostons; but should different parties take the propositions, with changes of horses, as only four Bostons are to be named, the first acceptor shall have the preference, unless one party accepts the three races with the same horses at two, three and four-mile heats, when the preference will be given to him.

"No acceptance will be valid unless the forfeit money, 25 per cent., accompanies it. In the p p race the whole amount of the race money must be deposited. My forfeit money is in the hands of John G. Cooke, Esq.

"A writer over the signature of 'Turf,' in his challenge from Canada to run Berry at New Orleans before the April meeting, at two, three and four-mile heats, neglected a very important part of a match race. He makes no mention of any amount of money to run for. If 'Turf' was in downright earnest, he may be able to select from amongst my propositions one that will suit his views.

"These proposals will remain open until the 1st day of March ensuing, at which time an acceptance must be received in this city by the President of the Metairie Jockey Club; and, to prevent discussion, I now state that I will not accept any other proposals or modify the present.

Racing at Butte City, Montana.

The opening day of the July meeting of the West Side Racing Association on the 3d inst., was attended by a large crowd, the weather being very favorable, though at times rather dusty. The quarter mile dash was won by McGowan & Barker's Nellie S, in 23 4-5. The 2.45 trotting race was eventually won by Evening Star in the sixth heat.

The three-quarter dash for a purse of $150 was won cleverly by J. B. Hayes' Rolly Bolly in 1:15.

On Thursday, the first race was a half mile dash which Mr. Crawford's Linie won handily in 51 seconds. The 600 yards dash for saddle horses was won by J. C. C. Thornton's Johnny Eye Ball. Mr. Thornton also won the mile dash in 1:48 with Keevena, late of the Tucker stable.

The free for all trot, mile heats, best three in five, brought out three starters, Conde, entered and driven by C. B. Jeffries; Marcus Daly's Senator driven by Chris. Peterson, and Bradshaw's Fantasie, driven in the first two heats by Mooney, afterwards by Williams. Following is the summary of the four heats.

On Friday the 600 yards dash was won by McGowan & Barker's Nettie S. in 33½.

The 2:35 trot had three starters, but Maud Singleton was sore, having evidently not recovered from her race of the previous day, and was distanced in the first heat.

The half mile and repeat was won by the Butte Stable's Red Elm straight heats, both in 50 seconds.

Racing at Bay District.

Last Saturday afternoon a three horse trot took place at the Bay District track, Palo Alto's Carlisle winning in straight heats. He is a chestnut stallion foaled in 1886, by Piedmont, dam Idabelle by Rysdyk's Hambletonian, granddam Godfrey Star by Seeley's American Star. He had a three-year-old record of 2:28¾, which he to-day lowered to 2:26¼.

The officials were: Judges, Messrs. John Hughes, Fred Vaughan and W. H. Hinchman. Time keepers, W. S. Wood, R. T. Carroll and C. Greene.

Palo Alto's Carlisle, ch h (Marion)	1	1	1
Orrin A Hickok names Gracie S., ch m	2	2	2
R. Harvey names ch h Bonanza	3	3	3

Time- 2:26¼; 2:26¼; 2:26¾.

After warming up they were soon tapped off with Bonanza slightly in front, but Carlisle, going right on, passed them both, and at the eighth pole was two lengths in the lead and trotting in grand style, was four lengths in front at the quarter, and being urged on went the next half in 1:11, and slowing up slightly down the stretch went under the wire two lengths in front of Gracie S., who was one length ahead of Bonanza. Time 2:26¼.

With very little delay the trio were dispatched on their journey. Carlisle, gradually drawing away, passed the quarter a length and a half to the good, with Bonanza two lengths behind Gracie. Bonanza gradually closed up to Gracie, and at the six furlongs both were a length behind Carlisle, and with each challenging him down the home stretch the chestnut son of Piedmont had all his work cut out to tie his previous heat, finishing half a length in front of Gracie S., who in turn was a length in front of Bonanza. Time 5:26¼.

Directly the bell rang Bonanza went out for the lead, and trotting fast led the Palo Alto stallion round the turn and passed the quarter a length in front, but Marvin, driving his horse hard, was level at the half, and trotting like a double team they rounded the upper turn into the straight, where Hickok gradually closed up and kept Marvin busy until the wire was passed a scant length in front of Gracie, who was the same distance ahead of Bonanza. Time 2:26¾.

"Standard Trotters" and "Roadsters" at the Fairs.

Mr. P. J. Shafter, in a communication to the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN of June 29th, entered a protest against a standard bred horse not being allowed to compete at the State Fair in the Roadster class, and Mr. G. W. Hancock, one of the Directors of that institution, in language more "pointed" than necessary, replies that the Roadster class was made for "the man who is breeding up." Mr. Shafter, be it premised, had made the point that, "excluding the standard bred trotter," floor competition aims to restore the "dung-hill trotter," and is virtually "turning your back on the intelligent breeding and development of a hundred years."

It seems to the writer that the arguments of both of the gentlemen are rather faulty. It cannot be denied that by proper selection and proper handling and training the very best of roadsters can be secured from among the "standard" breed of horses; but is the raising of "roadsters" what "standard" horses are bred and trained for? Even Mr. Shafter will admit that such is neither his nor anybody's else purpose. Neither he nor any other breeder invests in and trains his standard stallions or mares for "roadster" purposes exclusively, until he discovers, or sometimes wrongly thinks he discovers, that they will not be fast enough for the track. In this event he goes to work to undo a considerable portion of the track education; that portion, for instance, which inculcates "taking hold of the belt" and "to do or die" to "git thar," may do very well for a harem scarem single driver on a hard road, but is scarcely the kind of "roadster" we want before us when driving our wives and children, and still less when it is a matter of preference and comfort that our sweethearts should handle the lines. The horse and his speed in such an event are liable to interfere in more ways than one; none of this foolishness (on the part of our "roadster," of course) is wanted, merely because another fellow is coming up behind at a little faster gait than ours. We want that fellow in front of us, not just behind, and a good roadster should not spoil our calculations.

If asked to select a model roadster, we should search for a horse of style and carriage, evengaited and eventempered, with size, power and speed sufficient to trot all day before a buggy, his driver (and mate), at a four-minute gait, over a road hard in places and soft in others, with an occasional up and downhill, with the ability here and there to glide into a 2:50 to 3 minute gait, or a trifle faster, when hitched to a lighter weight. We should want him to do this without racking himself or the buggy to pieces, and omitting a trial of strength and endurance as between his lower jaw and the driver's arms when called upon to beat three minutes or even come down as low as a 40 gait. How many ex track horses are there that would fill the bill?

I am, of course, not speaking of the "gentleman's roadster," an animal with different qualifications altogether from the "roadster." Speed and great speed is as essential with the former as it is uncalled for with the latter class; style and carriage are a secondary consideration with him. Given the size and speed, there is not one man in a thousand but for the pleasure of letting others get his dust, would sacrifice beauty, style and carriage. The gentleman's roadster, in other words, may be said to be the perfection of training and gait as attained by the trotter—i. e., a track horse.

No breeder of roadsters could possibly afford to sacrifice size, style and carriaga either in his stallion or among his mares; no breeder of "standard trotters" (deny it or not as he may) but will blind himself to the lack of these and to the existence of many other defects, provided he can secure speed or a producer of speed. In short, a breeder of standard trotters is breeding for speed; hence, he should be forced to exhibit in the class he claims his horses to belong to, and they should be judged in a class where their success or failure to produce speed is a primary qualification.

If the writer's view of the subject be correct, then Mr. Shafter's point above alluded to is not well taken, and his objection should not be sustained; but even that does not justify Mr. Hancock's most extraordinary reply and explanation that "the roadster class is made for the man who is breeding up."

The writer has already endeavored to show that the roadster should properly form and have a class of its own and need not therefore repeat those reasons. If Mr. Hancock's view be correct, then the Directors have made an awful blunder is not stipulating as one of the conditions of entry to the class named what stock exhibited therein shall be restricted to the non-standard get of standard sires or dams, as it is more than plausible to suppose that no man can breed up by breeding dunghill to dunghill (to use the gentleman's expression.)

It is true that if the writer proposed to breed roadsters, he would undoubtedly select a standard bred sire for his stud; not because of the name, nor of the speed he might transmit, but because, granted the necessary qualifications for a roadster were present in the individual, and had been in his ancestors, all of whose breeding was known and recorded for several generations, the impressiveness of such a stallion would undoubtedly be greater than that of a cross bred stallion and much safer to trust than that of one whose breeding was doubtful or unknown, even though the latter two might in every other respect be equal to the standard bred.

The same argument, it is admitted, would apply to standard mares being used for a similar reason, should the breeder so select; but as no breeder of standard horses ever did, ever does, or ever will so select until he finds the speed is not there, he should not be allowed to enter in another class, any more than a lot of light draft horses should be allowed to show as general purpose stock merely because the exhibitor finds he will be beaten by competition in weight and other qualifications in the draft ring.

There is one qualification, however, in the roadster class conditions of the State Fair which it seems to the writer should not be there. The condition alluded to calls for speed. Speed is certainly no detriment, but it should not be essential. A 2:30 horse under this condition would as shown on a smooth track, be sure to get away with a 2:50 horse: hitch them to buggies in the road and the 2:30 prize taker might knock himself all to pieces in the first quarter of a mile, unless booted from hoof to arm (which roadsters should not be), whilst the 2:50 horse might travel all day without ever touching a hair. Now, boots or no shoes, which one would a reasonable man select for a roadster? and which of these, boots or no shoes, would travel the longest road?

If there be one class, other than its own, where they might be admitted, I should say let standard trotters compete with the general purpose horses, there being no such breed of horses in existence. The general purpose class, in fact, should be done away with and replaced by a sweepstakes class in which roadsters, standard trotters and carriage horses might compete with each other, stipulating that no aged horse admitted thereto shall measure above or below specified numbers of hands, or weigh more or less than stated weights when in fair working condition. Speed should not be considered at all unless all other qualifications are equal.

A Pacific Coast Trotting Association.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: -Your circular in regard to the forming of a P. C. T. A. received, and in answering it will say that every man in Nevada that is interested in the trotting horse and every Director of the State Fair and also of the district fairs is in favor of it. There will be six fairs held in Nevada this year, five district fairs and the State Fair at Reno. The last legislature appropriated thirty thousand ($30,000) dollars for the aid of the State and district fairs. Hoping to see it successfully started, I remain

Yours respectfully,
JOHN. P. SWEENY.
Pro. Sage Brush Trotting Nursery.

CARSON CITY, July 3, 1889.

VALLEJO, Cal., July 3, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Yours in regard to forming a Pacific Coast Trotting Association at hand. My opinion is that it would be a good thing to form an association of our own on this side, but I think they should recognize both the National and American Associations. It would keep all membership fees at home and save long delays in correspondence. I should think that all trotting associations on the Pacific Slope and Rocky Mountains would prefer joining this association, for all business would then be transacted nearer home. Respectfully,

B. C. HOLLY.

Santa Rosa Track.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The special races at the Santa Rosa track on the 4th of July brought a good attendance. The lessee, W. B. Sanborn, made attractive preparations, and a fair proportion of the gentler sex witnessed the afternoon's sport. First came off the contest between Pat Carroll's Inkerman and Mark L., entered by Sanborn, mile heats, two in three, for $200. Inkerman had the call in the pools, with lively betting. The favorite won in two consecutive heats, in 59 seconds. Then followed the twenty-mile contest between F. F. Derrick of Vallejo and Ben Scoville of Santa Rosa, $150 a side, each allowed four horses, to change every mile. The contest was as much of dexterity in mounts as in the speed of the horses, and in this accomplishment Scoville was more expert. He finished the twenty miles in 55 minutes, with easy effort the last half of the distance, leaving his competitor more than a mile behind.

The sport was not strictly racing, but it was entertaining to the spectators, and this was all the occasion required. It was the national chief holiday, and there was not the regular celebration in town. Mr. Sanborn made provision for the enjoyment of the citizens, and he did it well.

The wind-up was a foot race of 100 yards between the young Santa Rosa spinster, son of City Marshal Lowrey, and Newton Cook, of local celebrity, for a handsome gold medal, offered by Chief Grissam of the Santa Rosa Fire Department. Young Lowrey won the race in the indifferent time of 10¾ seconds. Early in the afternoon he was beaten in a 100 yards race, run at Kronke's Park, by Adams, the Petaluma favorite, whom he had defeated at the Firemen's tournament here a few weeks ago, by a mis-step just at the finish—time, 10⅝ seconds. The impression prevailed that the race had been fixed, as nothing but the trip of Lowery lost him the race. The purse was $400, and the betting very sharp. Evidently, Lowery lost the race by the accident. It is likely that another race between the parties will be arranged. The Santa Rosa track is being put in tip-top condition for the August race week. The stables are filling up with strings and individuals of much note in the State, and excellent sport is promised. Sanborn understands his business.

The will of the late Gen. W. T. Withers provides that his son W. T. Withers Jr., shall carry on the business of Fairlawn Farm at Lexington, Ky.

Sir Geo. Chetwynd has resigned from the English Jockey Club and his resignatfon has been accepted. What will he do now?

Capt. Griffin got a bargain in the black four-year-old Altamont mare at Frank Malone's sale. With only a few weeks driving she has shown a forty gait.

A typographical error caused us to say last week that the yearling by Ban Fox, out of Queen, sold at the Haggin sale for $600, it should have been $6,000.

A glance at the report from the Secretary of the American Association, shows that the Eureka Jockey Club and Fresno Soceity are both enforcing the rules.

Al Farrow last week ran a trial at Sacramento in 1:42½ with his shoes on. The boy was very light, but the performance shows that the crack has not lost his pace.

Tea Tray is now running with blinkers and cotton stuffed in his ears. Billy Lakeland always has something up his sleeve to enable him to bring a horse to the post.

The Napa Agricultural Society advertise for bids for all the privileges at the forthcoming fair to be held at Napa. Here may be a chance to make a nice sum on a small outlay.

Henry Vaughan left this city for Chicago, last Monday, to purchase cattle and draft horses. He says he will clean up all the local talent at the fairs this fall, if he has luck on his trip,

L. C. Lee, the pacer, who figured out here for several seasons and made his record of 2:15, at the Bay District track in 1887, is now being prepared for the Montana Circuit after a successful season in the stud.

Charley Marvin says that Carlisle, who last Saturday trotted three heats inside 2:27, would have been sold for $1,500 if he could have got it last year. He was driven without a check as nearly all the Palo Alto trotters are.

While it is reported that Budd Doble may have Clingstone and Guy this year Millard Saunders is still busy training them at Cleveland, and gave Guy a mile in 2:17½, and Clingstone one in 2:19¾. Thursday afternoon of last week.

The Buchanan Bros. of 609 Sacramento street, are manufacturers of horse brushes of all descriptions, and make a specialty of sponges, chamois skins and any quantity of small nicknacks needed every day around a stable. Give them a call.

The Breeder's Gazette, which is more of an authority on cattle than on horses, says there is curiosity to know for whom B. C. Holly purchased Yolo Maid. It also says that Goldleaf will be the Pacific Coast pacing phenomenon this season.

One of our prominent Breeders has been for some time negotiating with his agents in Australia, and it would not surprise me to see one, or even two, of the crack performers brought over here before next spring to put to the stud.

Almont Patchen is slowly but surely regaining his old form. Dustin drove him last Saturday, at Oakland, the best heat he has had this year, the full mile being readily done in 2:16¼. On the same day his three-year-old J. R. trotted a splendid mile in 2:25¼.

W. M. Murray ran his three-year-old Robin Hood against Huntress and Montrose, at Chicago. The three-year-old finished a fair third—and than the astute owner was persuaded to let his colt go to the Scoggan stable for the trifling sum of $5000, Scoggan will regret it before Murray does.

J. B. Haggin seems to be looking after Garrison's welfare. On Tuesday July 2nd for the Realization Stakes, McLaughlin rode Salvator and Garrison was refused permission to ride againt him, and last Tuesday Isaac Murphy rode the crack three-year-old and Garrison this time rode Longstreet who finished second.

Frank H. Burke is a happy man, for he has a four-year-old filly by Eros that was worked out a mile a few days ago in 2:26 2-5, and in three separate heats the game youngster went to the quarter pole in 32½ seconds I sincerely trust that Mr. Burke may be able to place her in the 2:20 class before the year closes.

J. B. McDonald, Marysville, has sold to D. Latham, for Senator Hearst, three fillies by Brigadier, 2:21¼, dam by Acrobat (Norfolk—Black Maria), granddam by Rifleman. The fillies will go to the Glen Echo Ranch at Sunol, and will shortly be joined there by other trotting bred mares, and a stud farm for trotters carried on.

Old Daniel Lambert (31 years old), one of the best sons of Ethan Allen, died last week in Vermont. He had 34 of his get in the 2:30 list, (Comee, 1:19¼, having the best record), and a host of grandsons and grandaughters. During his service in the stud he has got over 700 foals. He died from old age.

It is rumored in Eastern racing circles that Senator Hearst offered Theo. Winters $35,000 for his horses in training. It must be taken cum grano salis for Senator Hearst once (last fall) purchased the outfit, but owing to some misunderstanding did not take them, and the Senator is not the kind of a man to make two bits at a cherry.

John Mackey has been bragging back East, that on the Rancho Del Paso, there is a trotting sire that can claim the paternity of 28 foals out of 27 mares. That is nothing. I know a trotting stallion in the State that had two mares sent to him last year and the produce is four foals, two colts and two fillies.

At Helena, Montana, Mr. Baker has sold to Hardick & Blevins the ch m Ida Glenn by Glenelm, dam Queen, for $1,590, also to J. Hardick b f Yum Yum, three-year-old by Regent, dam by imp True Blue for $800.

E. J. Baldwin has telegraphed to Isaac Murphy that he has no further use for his services. This gives "the black demon" a chance to drink all he wants to.

Aloha, Viente and Alalanta have been sent from the Santa Anita stock farm to Chicago to reinforce the Baldwin string.

All the yearlings bought by Chas. Reed at the Haggin sale were for J. H. Shults, the well known Gravesend trotting horse breeder.

A. C. Dietz, of Oakland, has lost by death, a fine filly called Sabbette by Sable Wilkes, dam Olivette. She was valued at $2,500. Olivette will be bred back to Sable Wilkes.

Mr. Ariel Lathrop's pacer is travelling very rapidly. He has only had slow work until a few days ago, when Orrin Hickok drove him a mile in 2 22¾, and a half in 1:07. He is by Guy Wilkes, dam Lucy, 2:14.

M. Salisbury has purchase from Mr. Kirkendall, Mary Eagle (dam of Rancho 2:21) by America Clay, dam by Grey Eagle. Mary Eagle will be taken to Pleasanton and bred to Director next spring.

The steamer Pomona brought down from Eureka, last Monday, four horses under Dan Hennessey's care belonging to Kelly & Samuels. Susie S, Sleepy Dick, Lida Ferguson and another also came down on the same boat, the trip being a very pleasant one.

William McIntosh's Percheron stallion Oteele died last Saturday, from lung fever. He was purchased by Mr. McIntosh for $2,000 after his importation from France by Fairbanks & Wilson, and has carried off nearly all the premiums in Nevada and El Dorado Counties.

About 600 persons went to Madera, Fresno county, on the Fourth, and on a ploughed up street in an annex of the town held races. Cyclone won the 600 yds. and repeat, Confidence the mile and Charlie Blaine the scrub race, every one leaving flat broke, the chuckaluck and gamblers being out in great force.

Mr. W. H. Wilson, of Abdallah Park, Cynthiana, Ky., has sold to Rundell and Newton, of Toledo, O., the bay two-year-old stallion Pacific Slope, 10124 (full brother to Sunny Slope, three-year-old record 2:29¼) by Sultan, 2:24, dam Dido record 2:23¼, by Scotts Hiatoga; second dam Columbia (dam of Abbotsford 2:19½) by Columbus 95; third dam by Harris Hambletonian 2.

The Association which has been racing at Guttenburg has been organized as the Hudson County Jockey Club, with Mr E. T. Paxton, President; S. Whitehead, Secretary; J. N. Crusius, Treasurer. The new mile track now building will be ready September, 1st. A stand 45x250 feet will be built at a cost of $38,000, the contract having been awarded to John Y. McKane. Stables for 500 horses will be built.

Matt Storn has returned from Eureka, having had an enjoyable time. He acted as starter in most of the races there, and gave great satisfaction. Matt speaks very highly of the treatment he received at the hands of the officers of the Jockey Club, all of whom tried their utmost to make his stay pleasant.

The famous old turf performer and now equally celebrated mare Lucille Golddust, 2:16½, foaled a bay filly by Patron, 2:14 at the Forest City Farm two weeks ago. As the mare is already the dam of Lucille's Baby, 2:20¼, and Sprague Golddust, 2:16¼, it would be a very difficult matter to put a price on the young miss in which her blood and that of Patron is united.

Mr. W. T. Jones, of Ballarat Australia, (now staying at Chislehurst), owner of Bravo, by Grand Flaneur out of The Ophan (6 yrs), has called for his horse to be sent to England. Bravo is a stamp of animal that wins Queen's Plates in the Colonies, and if he can be delivered in healthy condition there is a possibilty of him making a name for himself in the mother country.

Antæus, a bay two-year-old son of Sir Modred, won his second race on June 8th, at Randwick, Sydney, N. S. W. He is the only Sir Modred that has started in Australia, and from a letter I received, he is a grand looking colt and runs like a regular stayer. The Colonials are dreadfully sore about losing Sir Modred and say they won't be caught napping again.

There is much complaint among the jockeys at Monmouth Park at the crowding done on the turns, especially at the homestretch. They say it may not amount to a foul, but some riders press the horse running next the rails so hard that they have to pull out to prevent accidents. Perhaps the judges will take cognizance and warn a few of the worst cases, they might at any rate station an official at the turns to keep an eye on them and report when necessary.

After El Rio Rey's victory, Isaac Murphy said dog gone my skin, I don't see how you can beat him. He fell down at the post and carrying a welter weight, ran clean round them on the turn and finished strongly. The veteran trainer, Albert Cooper, said the waking up the colt got on the home stretch would do him a power of good, the next time he ran he would break away instead of loafing. Every one is wonderfully impressed with the magnificent son of Norfolk, and predicts a glorious future for him on the track.

Mr. Marvin has written to J. H. Wallace the following:

"I have worked Sunol three times fast the past week, and to-day she appears as sound as ever she was."

In his Monthly, Mr. Wallace says:

"A youngster that trots as fast as Sunol, is liable to snap something any day; but the horse-papers all over the country should not have circulated the story that Sunol had broken down until the report came from a reliable source."

This is rough on rats, or more strictly speaking, on unreliable reporters.

Ione spent the Fourth at Agricultural Park, baseball in the morning and racing in the afternoon amusing the crowd. The Five Minute Race was won by James McMurry who drove his well known buggy mare round the track in 4:57. Fred Markel in 4:46½ being second. The Buggy Horse Race, two in three, was won by N. Kavren's Amador Princess, who took the second and third heats in 3:31 and 3:32. C. T. Lagrave's Ione Maid won the sweepstakes in three straight heats, 3:25, 3:30, 3:25. The quarter mile and repeat for saddle horses was won by Al Clifton's Bunch Grass in 24 and 27 seconds.

The racing at the new track at Westchester, will begin on Tuesday, August 20th and continue for ten days, to Saturday, August 31st. During the ten days the club will give $86,500 in added money, no less than $1,000 being given in any purse, stake or handicap. The sensational day of the meeting will be Saturday, August 24th, on which day the Great Eclipse Stakes, for two-year-olds, and the New York Jockey Club Handicap with $5,000 added with $10,000 added, are to be decided, the former having closed with 212 entries, and the latter with 110. Two of the races at the meeting are peculiar in that the horses have to be ridden by maiden jockeys.

Dr. M. W. Hicks writes me as follows: "I am feeling a little blue from the loss of a two-year-old colt Prompter, dam by Buccaneer, the best colt I think I ever bred. This impels me to say that it is idle to attempt to calculate blood lines mathematically, and rate the racing or breeding qualities, of the individual on that basis. This fellow was (mathematically) but one-sixteenth Bashaw, and one-fourth Blue Bull. Yet in his high form and tireless endurance, he was all Bashaw, and in his marvelous speed and steadiness he was essentially Blue Bull. The multitude of other lines that he inherited in common with all trotters, were completely swallowed up and lost in those two dominant strains.

There is no lack of horses at Honolulu, and it will be remembered that several years ago King Kalakaua sent a commission over here to buy some trotting stock. Of course the messengers went to Kentucky, although they could have done pretty well in California, which is much nearer home, and finally wound up by purchasing some very creditable representatives of the Almont family.—Breeders Gazette.

Yes, and about the same time Harry Agnew of Honolulu, came to this State and shipped over a few California horses. When the racing season opened he won seven or eight races, and as a consequence no more Kentucky horses have been purchased for the Sandwich Islands, as all buyers procured what is wanted in the Golden State.

We learn with regret that some four breeders will attend the mountain circuit. If they could do this without neglecting any part of the home circuit, we should wish them to travel to every meeting on the coast; but, it seems to us, when the managers of the circuit here are straining every nerve, offering great inducements, and in so doing taking great risk of financial loss in order to build up its turf interests, our breeders scarcely do right in running after strange gods. A home turf will build up a home market, and a home market is invariably the best and most profitable market.

The District Associations have been increasing their purses of late years, and this season four of them comprising the grand circuit, have stricken out the clause which enabled them heretofore to hold less than five to fill and deducting a proportionate amount of the purse. True, they may hold less than five to fill; but, if they do so, not one cent is deducted from the purse. If, now, our breeders and horsemen generally propose to go off to other circuits leaving only a few entries in each class, does it not stand to reason, the associations will either have to re-instate that most objectionable of 'strings,' reduce their purses, or do both? We commend this suggestion of protecting and encouraging home interests to our horsemen.

Royalty in Spain no longer takes pleasure in the pomp and splendour such as used to surround it even so recently as the reign of Queen Isabella. Thus it is that the streets of Aranjuez and its parks and gardens have no longer the bustle and life which we see portrayed in old engravings and pictures. Except on Sundays, the Madrilenos seldom go down to trespass on the privacy and seclusion of the Queen. She often drives her son to the Royal stud establishments, and to the equally important breeding establishment of Duke Fernan Nunez at La Flamenca. In both places some of the best racehorses of Great Britian have been reared and trained—by Englishmen, however, King Alphonzo used to take great pride in his stud and racehorses, and under a "turf pseudonym," he won many races at Madrid and Seville. Indeed, he used to back his own horses, and not always for small stakes either.

Porterville, Tulare County, had a two days' meeting last week, which were highly successful in every way. On Wednesday, July 3rd, G. W. Pressy's b m Baby won the half mile and repeat (5 starters) in straight heats, 53 and 54 seconds, distancing two of her competitors in the first heat, and the other two in the second. The two year-old trot was won by John Kearney's Nellie Alta in 3:10 and 3:18¾. The last race, trotting one mile, was won by Joe Rood's Judge Kyle in 2:43, 2:39¼ and 2:39¼. On the Fourth the free-for-all trot was won by H. H. Helman's Emma Temple, who won the first, fourth and fifth heats. The third was won by A. T. Jackson's Ed, who made a dead heat with the winner in the second; time, 2:34¾; 2:31¼; 2:30¼; 2:30¼; 2:34. The quarter-mile dash for saddle horses was won in a hand canter by H. Conner's r m Birdie; time, 28¾ The quarter mile and repeat was a very pretty race, J. M. Crawford's Thad Stevens taking both heats in 24 seconds. The mile trot for three year olds brought three horses to the wire, each of whom won a heat, and the race was postponed until Friday, when N. Anderson's Bay Wilkes won in three minutes.

Dr. Klench V. S of Santa Rosa, found and condemned three horses owned in the neighborhood of Olema, Marin Co., afflicted with the glanders. The horses were killed and burned by their Portuguese owner. It behooves every country in the State to have in their service a competent veterinary surgeon to prevent the spread of this or similar disastrous diseases throughout the valuable equine and bovine stock now owned in this State. If a county finds the expense onerous, let its Board of Supervisors agree to share the cost with that of an adjoining county whose interests are identical. The fortunate discovery in this instance, was due to the 'perversity' (?) of the village blacksmith, who refused to let one of them into his shop until the owner was obliged to call in competent authority to decide whether or not it was glanders. The State owes a vote of thanks to that blacksmith. We trust this will come under the eye of Geo. Waterman, and that he will take the trouble to investigate its truth or falsity. He will then be better posted as to whether or not it is good policy to veto an appropriation and bills to create a veterinary officer or board or whether the millions that are invested in fine stock are to be left at the mercy of a careless Portuguese and a Board of Health that knows no more about animal diseases and their treatment than it does about what hobby the man in the moon happens to ride.

Can your readers tell me anything about the breeding of a horse known as the "Sawyer Horse" that stood in Sonoma County a good many years ago? He is said to have come here from the neighborhood of San Jose.

Subcriber.

Last week we had a notice in answers to correspondents asking for information of the pedigree of a horse called Dixie, whose dam was by Bucephalus; second dam by Kentucky Whip. Mr. Frank H. Burke informs us that the sire of Dixie, is Erwin Davis 5558, and that the mare was bred by him.

Can any one inform us of the breeding of the dam of Nutwood Jr.?

Answer—She was by California Patchen, 2d dam by Bane's Littlejohn Jr.

Please give breeding of C. V. Tupper's colt Guido.

Answer.—Guido, ch c foaled 1887 by Double Cross, dam Aurora, by Thad Stevens; 2nd dam Twilight by Arnold Harris; third dam Brown Mary by Red Bill; 4th dam by Sir William of Transport; 5th dam by Josephus; 6th dam Lucy Socks, by imp. Clockfast.

At present there is no association on this coast, consequently there can be no answer to your question.

Can any of our readers give us any information about the pedigree of Hamlet, or Cassius M. Clay Jr.? Fred Werner, who owned Rattler was the owner, or part owner, of Hamlet. Cassius M. Clay Jr. was owned by Col. Dickey. We have written to several persons who should know the pedigree of these horses, but have failed to receive any answer.

W. E. B. Stockton.

A. B. & C. play at seven-up. A. deals and before B has taken up his cards, C. takes up his, claiming the right so to do. To this B. takes exception, claiming that C. has no right to look at his hand until he (B) has either stood or begged. Who is right?

Answer.—B. is right.

R. L. Douglass, Corning.

A B and C trot mile heats 3 in 5, first and second money. A wins first heat, B wins second, and distanced A. B wins third and distanced C in the fourth heat. What horse is entitled to second money?

Answer.—Rule 36 of the National Trotting Association says: Section 1.—A horse must win a majority of the heats which are required by the conditions of the race to be entitled to the purse or stakes; but if a horse shall have distanced all competitors in one heat the race will then be concluded, and such horse shall receive the entire purse and stakes contended for.

Sec. 3.—The foregoing provisions shall always apply in such cases, unless otherwise stated in the published conditions of the race.

As both horses were distanced, although in different heats, B will receive both monies unless it was specified in the conditions of the race that if a horse distance the field he shall receive first money only.

Subscriber, and twenty others.

In a half-mile heat race at Eureka, at the end of the third heat the horses stand as follows:

Sleepy Dick	1	3	3
Susie S.	2	0	1
Lida Ferguson	3	0	2

Has Sleeepy Dick the right to start in the fourth heat?

Answer —The rule that covers the ground reads as follows: "In a race of heats, best two in three, a horse that actually wins two heats, or distances the field, wins the race. A horse running in two consecutive heats, without winning or running a dead heat, can not again start in the race. A dead heat is a heat against every horse in the race except those making it, and in their favor to the extent only of allowing them to start in the next two heats, unless the race is decided, or they are distanced the next two ensuing heats. When a race is won by two heats, the preference of the horses is determined by the place they get in the second. If more than two heats are run, the horses starting for the deciding heat shall alone be placed."

Sports in Daily Papers.

How Racing and Other Sporting Events are Written Up.

Twenty years ago every great daily newspaper in America had its special staff of sporting writers who were men having an intimate knowledge of the branches of sport about which they wrote.

These gentlemen were known all over the country as authorities on their special lines, and the papers with which they were connected reaped the benefit of a large patronage from people interested in sporting events, and who looked to these gentlemen for information, and who knew that they could rely implicitly on the accuracy of all that came from their pens.

The turf reporter knew all about the records of famous horses, the pedigrees of the winners of nearly every important event, and they were forced to keep a systematized record of all the weights, winners, jockeys and owners to enable them to answer the hundreds of questions that were constantly being asked on these subjects.

The yachting editor knew all about time allowances, sail area, hull displacement, lines, and all the other technical points of yachts and yacht racing.

The coursing and field editor had to know how dogs were trained, entered and slipped, how they were judged, how field trials were held; he had to keep the run of pedigrees, be a good judge of a dog, and if he could give a subscriber a receipt for any dog disease, so much the better. He had to be a thorough sportsman because he was writing for sportsmen who would detect instantly if he were a pretender.

But during the past twenty years a great change has been made in the sporting departments of the daily press. The daily newspapers no longer care to write for the edification of sportsmen, but bend all their energies to preparing sensational accounts of such events as will interest the large class of people who do not understand such things, and take no interest in any sporting event that falls short of the sensational.

The reader having no technical knowledge, accuracy of statement is not demanded from the writer; no respect is paid to the opinions of the sportsman's fraternity. The daily press reports of sporting events teem with the most ludicrous errors, but their managers save the expense of employing competent specialists, and so long as the police-reporter can string together a few words about a horse race or a yachting regatta, his work is accepted.

If yachtsmen feel disgusted with the silly nonsense, or if horsemen are annoyed at the absurdities printed about their stables, they are met with the answer, "We are running a paper for the general public and not to please any special class."

Having been somewhat identified with sporting affairs for a good many years, and being in the newspaper business, it has been my fortune to meet a great many of those ill-placed reporters, and to have been amused with the production of their pens. In justice to them I must say I never knew an instance where the work for which they were not competent was undertaken, without a protest from them, and I have always found that they toiled hard to make correct reports, and were grateful for any assistance offered them.

But you cannot teach a man the whole art of a sport in a few minutes chat, any more than you can make a man an expert shot by allowing him to shoot a rifle once.

My first acquaintance with the uninformed reporter at a sporting event was on the occasion of the great Occident race at Sacramento. He was from the Chronicle of this city and he asked me if I would tell him what "best three in five to harness," which he found printed on the programme, meant. The Chronicle at that time had a competent turf writer in its employ, and I asked in some surprise why the work of reporting the race had been confided to one who did not know anything about the sport. The reply was that Mr. De Young did not want a technical report, but something that every one would read. I gave the gentleman the asked for information and all through the race he kept me busy explaining the various points.

With the exception of classing Occident as a "horse" instead of a gelding, and saying that the race was "run" instead of trotted, he did not make many glaring errors, for he was a smart fellow and had sense enough to confine himself to the picturesque and leave details alone.

It was also a Chronicle man that I had the pleasure of meeting at a cricket match played here between the "All England Eleven" that was on its way to Australia, and a scratch team of the Occident and other clubs. He said that the city editor had insisted on his reporting the match despite his protest that he knew nothing about the game. His report next day was the most picturesque account of the game that I ever had the pleasure of reading. He spoke off Cover-point" as "the man who covered the point," the "backstop" was called "the catcher," and in recording a "hit-to-leg" he gravely announced to the readers of the paper that the ball glanced from the batsman's leg and for that reason was called a "leg hit." He declared that the bowler pitched the ball and insisted that "mid wicket on" was the shortstop.

Years ago the Call employed Charley Yale to write about yachting affairs and kept up a splendid column in that line. But the able editor did not see the sense in having so much technical stuff and the day the Con O'Connor won her first race the intelligent Call man on the umpires boat was a gentleman who did not know a jib stay from a topsail yard schooner, nor could he tell the difference between a spinaker and a balloon jib. Coming home the captain of the O'Connor jibed her and next day the Call informed its readers that the "gibes" of his opponents caused the captain to alter his course.

One of the funniest things I ever saw in the way of a ridiculous error in a so-called sporting column appeared in this city about four weeks ago, when a leading newspaper gravely informed its readers that a horse was by Electioneer out of Crown Point, and it also started two mares and a gelding in a stallion stake.

Last February, in its account of a coursing match at Newark, the Examiner had the following:—

The pack of greyhounds assembled yesterday for the coursing match at Newark, was one of the finest evrr seen in this State.

The esteemed Examiner reporter did not know that greyhounds do not course in packs; and there were several other things he did not know, or he would not have written that "Fly" killed the hare, and therefore won the match. But to him, the lead from slips, turn, wrench, go bye, trip, kill, kill of merit, and other points that count in a coursing match are an unknown language.

In every daily newspaper published in this city I have seen horses described as running in trotting races, and only three weeks ago I read that "the race was 'run' in the presence of but few spectators" when it was really trotted.

When football under the Rugby rules was introduced here by the formation of a couple of clubs here and a club at the State University, the daily press afforded a great deal of amusement to those versed in the technicalities of the game. "Full backs," "three-quarter backs," and "half backs" were mixed up in inextricable confusion, while in their struggles to explain the meanings of such terms as "off side," "touch," "touch down" and "scrimmage," the daily press experts fairly outdid all previous records for blundering.

Even in prize fights, which are not touched by reputable sporting journals, and of which the daily papers make a special feature, incompetent men are employed. At the Choynski–Corbett fight a reporter undertook to describe all the blows and stops in a hot rally that was fought so fast that had he ten pairs of eyes and hands, instead of a single pair, he could not have got all the movements down on paper, and all he succeeded in doing was to show every reader who possessed the slighest knowledge of boxing that the writer did not know anything about the subject.

Every sportsman knows the meaning of the shooting expression "wiped his eye." It was used by a daily paper in San Francisco some time ago as though it meant that one shooter had actually applied his handkerchief to the eye of another to remove some foreign substance therefrom.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN,

William Hayward, otherwise known as Old Bill, is riding with a dash and vim such as has seldom been witnessed on an eastern track. His rides on Dunboyne on the 27th of June and Eurus last Wednesday, were magnificent examples of what delicate handling, combined with determination, will accomplish on two of the most perfect examples of a rogue extant.

Horses at Rest.

There are some curious facts, says an exchange, about the disposition of horses to lie down. To a hard-working horse repose is almost as great a necessity as good food, but tired as he may be he is often shy about lying down even when a nice clean bed of straw is provided for him. The writer once rode a mare seventy miles in a single day. The stable in which she was put for the night was as comfortable in every way as it could be made, yet she stood the whole night through. She ate her oats and hay and then went to sleep, leaning forward with her breast against the manger. There are horses that have never been seen to lie down, and if they have ever done so it was only for a short time, and at an hour when they were not likely to be seen. No marks have ever been discovered upon their coats which would indicate that they had been lying down. A horse is recalled now that occupied for fifteen years, from the time he was two years old, the first stall in grandfather's stable. Up to the hour he died no one had ever seen him lying, down and several times after wearisome drives of about eight or ten hours, a watch was placed on him to see if during the night he would lie down; but he was never caught in that position, and he could not be tempted to recline by the sweetest and cleanest of bedding. He died literally upon his feet. He was taken sick, and in giving him a drench from a long-necked bottle, with his head pulled up to a beam, he suddenly fell back and expired.

Unless a horse lies down regularly his rest cannot be complete, and his joints and sinews stiffen; and while it is true that horses that sleep in a standing position continue to work for many years, it is equally true that they would continue to work for many years longer, and perform their work much better, if they rested naturally. Young horses from a country stable may refuse to lay down when put into a stable in town, and the habit may be confirmed unless inducements are offered. Horses can be taught to lie down, and they can also be taught to be as neat and cleanly in their habits as individuals.

It is a very rare thing for horses afflicted with a disease that superinduces fever to lie down. They will stand up until nature becomes completely exhausted, and their limbs refuse to sustain them. They have an instinct which teaches them that if they lie down it may be difficult for them to get upon their feet again. A sick horse, because of his evident knowledge of his own condition and his inability to communicate the symptoms and the nature of it, commends himself to human sympathy more than any other animal. Horses have a horror of death, and especially dread death in their own kind. A horse may be sick in company with a stableful of horses, and the others will not notice him at all, but the moment he dies there is consternation throughout the entire stable. A horse may be absolutely fearless of every inanimate thing that comes to his notice, but will be frightened beyond measure at the sight of one of his own kind lying dead by the roadside.

The Flesh-Color of Fishes.

The fact is well recognized from New Brunswick to Duluth that of the fish of the namaycush species some are white-fleshed and some have flesh of a salmon color, and that both varieties (if such they be) live side by side in the same waters, and, in the same waters, are rarely, if ever distinguishable from each other, until killed and cut open, writes Geo. H. Christy of Pittsburgh, Pa.

So far as my reading goes, our scientists have made no effort to explain or account for this singular fact. Professor Agassiz, when writing of Salmo salar, ascribed the peculiar tint of color of its flesh to "the absorption of the pigments of crabs and shrimps eaten by the fish" during their life in the sea. He also comments on the variations found to exist in the flesh-tints of the salmon trout (Salmo sebago), and attributes it to the quality of Gammaridae which they have devoured. But I am not aware that Professor Agassiz makes any effort to account for the existence of white-meated and red-meated namaycush side by side in the same waters. Professor Goode merely mentions the fact that the salmon tint is sometimes found in fish of inland waters, but he does not attempt to account for its presence, and still less does he attempt to explain why in fish of the same variety, and in the same waters, the flesh is in some cases of one color, and in others of another. If our trained naturalists have any way of accounting for this peculiarity as developed under these conditions, I would be glad to know what it is.

Mr. Cheney—and among anglers there is no better authority than he—is the only angler I have come across who attempts to account for this well-known but singular fact.

In an article contributed by him to the Angler in April, 1886, when speaking of the presence of both white-meated and red-meated lake trout in the chain lakes, he says: "It has been settled beyond doubt that the red tinge is caused by food." Again, in an article published not long ago in Forest and Stream, he says:

"Occasionally there is caught in Lake George a trout shorter and deeper than his fellows of equal weight, with real salmon-colored flesh, and with creamy curds between his flesh flakes. Such a fish has devoted his whole mind to his diet, and good living has changed his appearance; simply this and nothing more."

Now, I am not an ichthyologist, and perhaps no "great shakes" of a fisherman, but I humbly beg leave to dissent from the proposition that of two fish, otherwise identically alike, living together in the same waters, on food equally accessible to both, both wild by nature, and neither of them artificially influenced or dealt with—that the one, by "devoting his whole mind to his diet" and selecting his food, will cause his own flesh to be of a red-tinted or salmon color, and the other, by making some other food selection, or no selection at all, will cause his own flesh to be of a clear white color.

And this is exactly what I understand Mr. Cheney to mean. Much in the same line is the statement of Izaak Walton: "There is also a river in Arabia of which all the sheep that drink thereof have their wool turned into a vermillion color." One statement looks to be about as reasonably true as the other.

I do not deny that the exterior coloring of fish is changed by exterior surroundings. For the present I will not deny that a fish normally white-meated may be removed to waters where, in consequence of a necessary change of food, its flesh may take on a tint which, after some generations, may eventually become a hereditary trait. I do not deny that the white meat of every young fish may, with advancing years, turn into meat more or less highly tinted. I am perfectly aware that in the Salmo sebago the depth or intensity of the tint varies at different times or under different conditions. But that two fish of like descent, through a supposed common line of ancestry of unknown antiquity, of the same age, living together in the same waters their ancestors have always lived in, and on food equally accessible to both and equally well adapted (so far as known) to the appetite and sustenance of both—that two such fish, on being killed, should be found to have flesh of so distinctively different colors, is a fact which, as it seems to me, has not yet been accounted for. To my apprehension it would be quite as easy for a "lion to change its skin or a leopord its spots" as for a fish to change the color of its own flesh by a voluntary selection of its own food. Animals wild by nature, and not subject to any of the influences of domestication, nor to any artificial restraint, nor artificially fed, do not select their food. They take it as they can get it, and, if hungry, let none go by. Fishes are wild animals. They prey on each other, just as the wild beasts of the forest do. They eat when they are hungry—provided they can find anything to eat—and, being hungry, they will eat anything they can get hold of which they like. And out of the whole range of animal existence with which man has to do—clams and oysters excepted—we would not be far out of the way in saying that fishes have the least mental power capable of being used in the selection, choice and rejection of food. And on this point Mr. Wells, one of our best authorities, in his "American Salmon Fisherman," page 90, says:

"The mental range of a fish is of the most limited description. If more than four impulses—physical comfort, self-preservation, hunger and the desire to reproduce—govern their conduct I have yet to hear it suggested. Under precisely similar circumstances and conditions, one may stay at home and another go a-fishing. But when we descend the scale of the animal kingdom to the low nervous development and narrow life of a fish, mental action of so high an order, and so individual as caprice, seems to me out of the question. Under precisely similar circumstances and conditions, I believe every fish of a given kind will act in precisely the same way."

The italics are my own. The exceedingly low mentality of a fish must, as it seems to me, exclude all idea of voluntary food-selection. But if, as Mr. Cheney says, "it has been settled beyond doubt," will not he or some one else give us the facts by which it has been settled? If they have been published, I have unfortunately failed to see them. The question to be "settled beyond doubt" is simply this: Out of a school of say a thousand mature Salvelinus namaycush will a certain proportion, say twenty per cent. voluntarily reject and refuse to partake of certain kinds of food accessible to all and which the other eighty per cent. eat of freely? Is it true that a certain proportion, say twenty per cent., will partake only of certain choice or dainty kinds of food, and that they will go hungry, as St. Paul once promised to do, rather than defile themselves with "anything common or unclean?"

And, while on the food question, I have been amused at noticing the various kinds of food which, being selected, are supposed to make red or tinted flesh. Agassiz, whose authority cannot be questioned, attributed the red color of the flesh of Salmo salar (which, as a rule, feed but little, if at all, in fresh water) to "the pigments of crabs and shrimps eaten by the fish" during their life in the sea. In this he was followed by Goode, but, so far as I know, Professor Goode makes no effort to account for the red flesh of the Salmo salar or Salmo sebago, when living only in fresh water. Apparently he excludes the idea that food has anything to do with it, for he says repeatedly that "when salmon live in the lakes they prey upon minnows and other small fishes"—and these latter are certainly not overcharged with the "pigments" referred to. In fact, so far as they have any effect at all, they are commonly supposed to produce white meat in the eaters thereof. Next, Mr. Cheney, in his article of April, 1886, first tells us that the food which, in fresh waters, does the work is "the fresh-water shrimp and perhaps the caddis." Further along, in the same article, he ascribes the same effect to "insect and larvæ food."

Hence, to account for the red meat, we have:

1. Marine "crabs and shrimps."—[Agassiz.
2. "Minnows and other small fishes."—[Goode.
3. "Fresh-water shrimp and perhaps caddis."—[Cheney.
4. "Insect and larvæ food."—[Cheney.

Now, if all these foods will produce in the eaters thereof the tinted flesh referred to, why are not all the fish of the namaycush species red-meated? Why the necessity of invoking selection at all? And, lastly, why is it that, of two fish otherwise possessing no characteristic differences, one is white-meated and the other red-meated? Will somebody who knows please tell us? And, if nobody knows, will somebody who has facilities for such investigations please ascertain the reason, if he can, and let us know the result?

Hints for Trout Fishing.

As a rule the angler more enjoys the expert taking of game fish than the abundance of his catch. Still the feast upon the fish is a material quantity in the sport. To take and kill to wastefulness is no better than to destroy by explosives or by poisons. The true angler, lover of the sport and with epicurean appreciation of the game, while prideful of the contents of his creel, is mindful of the fair and equal rights which pertain to the domain of angling—which has its limits and significance from generalized fishing. The angler fishes for the sport there is in it, in manifestation of his skill, which is the prideful part; and for the substantial luxury which the dished trophies of his day's delight afford himself and friends. The fisher does his work with the market and the marketing. The difference is akin to that between the deer hunter who loves the hunt and sparingly delights in it, and the skin hunter who kills to make a slaughter, solely with purpose to replenish his purse. These distinctions apply to every order of admirable sport, fin, fur and feather.

The study of the angler has the spur of ambition to excellence. It is an achievement to land the gamy, wary, resisting, fighting shiner, in pool and in current, through ripples and in rapids, despite its struggles, its darts and doubling, its desperate shoots and frantic leaps. The angling is more exciting, the capture is more animating, the feast is the ultimation of the gratification; yet the proud recollection of the occasion and the prowess dwell and seem in the memory as warriors recount deeds of battle, and as the guests of Horace recalled the charms and feasts at the Sabine farm, with Mæcenas to adorn the flow of soul and grace the banqueting. Mere fishing is a trade. The vicious have perverted it into something tainted with fraud, with the disposition to gain through criminality—as in the use of poisons and of explosives. The fishermen who regularly toil in the legitimate pursuit, with lines and bait, nets and poles, seines and wiers, are practically honest fishermen, and although they adopt every device which the cunning and art of man can invent, and catch all the fish of every food variety they can, still they do not wantonly take to willfully destroy, merely to boast the opportunity, as some do who profess to be amateur fishers, but are no better than wolves in the sheep fold which kill in the lust of killing.

The angler is distinguished from others who fish, as the sportsman of the woods is from the skin-hunter who slaughters indiscriminately and to excess; as the game pursuer of hill and field and fen is from the pot hunter who takes every advantage to get the bird, and the professional who shoots to supply the market. The angler is fond of the sport and with honest pride regards the quality of his catch and not the quantity. He adopts and pursues only approved and legitimate methods. As a matter of course, in angling, the tackle is an important matter, but still more important is the bait—in general sense. Technically, the fly is not classed as bait. Any bait is legitimate. That which is most alluring and best serves the purpose is the bait to be chosen, whether fly, worm, or insect—anything, in short. Angling is every season proving more and more tentative. As with the arts and sciences it has its sphere of progress, with room all the time to that improvement which culminates in perfection, after which the complete example should be adopted instead of the experimenting for the impossible, beyond which cannot result in anything except measurable success or regretful failure.

Trout-fishing most absorbs the expert angler's study and attention. In the States eastward, especially along the North Atlantic coast, trout fishing has its thousands of enthusiastic devotees every year. Stream and lakes in which trout are found are searched for as prospectors search for the precious metals, and to the favorite chosen resorts thousands go every season from the populous cities and the towns to indulge in the exhilarating sport. The inquiry occurs—What is best for bait? Authorities differ. Localities and habitats are dissimilar, and the trout of the stream has its peculiarities not found in the trout of the lake. Experience and discernment supply the answer. For many years skilled anglers have generally determined in favor of the fly; some will try no other allurement for the speckled shining beauties. The expert angler may be called an artist in the use of the fly in fishing for trout. Some never accomplish this fine art in the delightful sport. Possibly the best skilled may overrate the excellence of the fly. In some cases there may be a better method. Live and learn, is good precept. In the New York Times of recent date is a lesson to good effect, and as this is the season of angling for trout, and the lesson is applicable to California the same as to the States of the Atlantic, enough of it is copied to point the argument and present the method. Here it is:

A New-Yorker who is an expert fly fisherman and an angler of no little note, awoke to a rude realization while fishing the streams of Sussex County, N. J., in company with a young farmer. It was early in the season. So the countryman, also an expert fly fisherman, used worms. The New-Yorker, however, persisted in whipping the stream that they were fishing with his hackles, professors, and abbeys. In spite of his skill, at the end of an hour not even a rise had gladdened his eyes, while the farmer had seven big fish glistening on the grass in his creel. Finally the New-Yorker removed, with a sigh, his flies and put in their places a sprout hook and a big worm. At the end of the next hour, however, he had caught only two, while his companion had secured a dozen. An investigation on the part of the farmer revealed that the New-Yorker had run a portion of his gut as well as the whole hook through the worm so that it looked like a piece of twig and worked this dead bait on the surface of the water like a fly. Then and there the city fisherman admitted his hypocrisy and learned of the real angler the rudiments of successful bait fishing.

Trout may be caught with almost any kind of worm, although the common garden or angle worm or grub are the most irresistible. Here are two ways of putting them on a hook, (sprout preferred,) and in both the worm remains alive: The old way is entering the hook a little above the middle and imbedding the point and barb in the head of the worm so that the tail flows out free and clear in the water. The other and most successful way is to insert the point and barb of the hook securely in the middle of the worm, thus allowing both the head and tail to wiggle clear in the water. It is by no means necessary, as the unsophisticated suppose, to cover with the worm the entire hook. With the hook properly baited and the necessity of keeeping it near the bottom of the stream borne in mind one is ready to fish unless the stream is very swift, and then a small lead must be put on about a foot from the hook. A small split buckshot will do, or two or three No. 6 shot answer admirably. Under no circumstances should the trout be struck until he has swallowed the loose end of the worm, which fact will be shown by the sudden running away of the line. Strike before, and ten chances to one the fish escapes unscathed with a choice bit of the worm in his mouth. After a little experience one can with almost certainty determine the right moment to strike.

Similar in many respects to worm fishing is that with live bait or minnow. These can be usually found in the small springs and feeders of a front brook, and are to be caught with any kind of net whose meshes are small. When used as live bait they must be hooked through the lips so that they can swim about unimpeded. In dead fishing the hook and a portion of the gut is passed through the mouth and out by way of the gills, so that the body of the hook can be tied with thin silk or white thread to the minnow's tail. The live bait dropped gently into a pool where lurk some monarch of the stream, or the dead bait kept moving gently in the current as is alive, is not to be resisted by the ordinary sagacious fish. No time must be allowed the trout as in worm fishing, but the firm, quick moment of the angler's wrist must hook the fish the moment his mouth closes on bait or he escapes.

The nearest approached to fly fishing is, in the bait line, angling with grasshoppers or insects. Of grasshoppers, the big yellow-bellied ones that can be found in any meadow are the best, and any kind of insect will do, though some anglers consider a bumble bee, a barn fly, or cricket the most taking. This kind of bait must be put on so as to look as natural as possible.

CANOEING.

Oakland Canoe Club.

Of all the sports that are indulged in for recreation or pleasure, none is more healthful or exciting than yachting, and though the element of danger is more imminent than in most forms of sport, it but adds zest to the pleasure and keeps one ever alert and interest awake—when it can be said of a man that he is a good yachtman and able to handle a sail in a blow, you may be sure that he has pluck, energy and good executive ability. Yachting, like all other sports, has its divisions, and each build of boat has its special devotees, some for the cat boat, some for the big "single stickers," such as have competed for international honors over the American Cup, some for the schooner rig and others for each of the many rigs and models, but undoubtedly that branch of the sport which demands greatest nerve and the most skillful skipper is modern canoeing; the word modern is used for fear some one might confound it with that historic means of water locomotion of the Indian, it is as different from that as the modern reapeating rifle is from the old flint-lock musket. An Indian would be as much out of place in a canoe of today as an ordinary sailor would be in a racing shell. The uninitiated would naturally think that a paddle was a necessary adjunct and the actual motive power, assisted by brawny muscle. it is far otherwise, for they have so many different sails, rigs and masts that only an expert could properly describe them.

The Oakland Canoe Club, whose boat house is on the Estuary, near the railroad bridge, is one of the most complete and successful organizations of the kind in the country. The active membership is at present thirty, among which are a number of young men prominent in financial and business circles, in both Oakland and San Francisco, who, by occasional devotion to this healthful sport keep their bodies strong and their heads clear.

The officers for the present year are: Commander, W. W. Blow, who might be called the pioneer of canoeing on the coast, and who still is its most ardent champion and skillful devotee; vice-Commodore, A. D. Harrison; Secretary, Henry M. Landsberger and Treasurer, W. G. Morrow.

Members who have visit other similar clubs in the East, state that the local boat and club rooms are the most complete in the country in their management and appointments. The house at present can accommodate over thirty canoes many of which have been constructed with as much care as to the material used and the lines of model as was exercised over the Volunteer. Canoeing is essentially a rich man's sport, for each member owns his own boat, and some members own several, and the cost of many of them will run up into the hundreds of dollars each. Among the best and fastest of the canoes are Commodore Blow's Mystic, vice-Commodore Harrison's Frolic, Mr. Olsen's Dart and Bouita, Mr. Darneal's Conchita, Mr. Morrow's Whisper and Mr. Mathew's Ontario ribbed canoe Mab. There is but one other canoe club on the coast that being at Portland, Oregon. But although many efforts have been made, and all kinds of inducements offered to get up a series of races between the two clubs, the Portland club has not had enough confidence to accept a challenge. A badge, presented by a member is contested for every three months and the winner is heralded as the champion and the possessor of the badge for the following three months. At present Mr. Harrison and his Frolic are the envy of the balance of the club. Commodore Blow is making some changes in the rig of the Mystic and having a new center-board built and hopes at the next regatta, which will take place Sunday, July 21st, to wrest the championship from the Frolic. The social life of the club is very pleasent, their rooms being fitted up with taste and ladies often receive the hospitalities of the club. A kitchen is attached and in connection with a well filled larder, many a delightful lunch is enjoyed.

Quite frequently excursions are made to points in the bay at a distance, the party camping out over night and some more venturesome than the others take a sail beyond the Golden Gate.

THE GUN.

California Wing Shooting Club.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The July meeting of the club held on Sunday last at San Bruno was a slimly attended one, reasons being that so many members are away on their summer vacations, but if the attendance was not large the sport was fine, and was keenly enjoyed by all those present. Doctor Knowles was at his best, and killed eleven of a hard string, with perfect judgment, using his second barrel but little. The second medal fell to the Secretary. Mr. F. B. Norton took third medal, losing a hard hit bird in the tenth round.

The feature of the day was Mr. Osborn's score of six. Osborn is looked upon as one of the best and most reliable shots of the club, but either because the gun which he used shot too open a pattern or for some other reason, he failed to down his birds, although cutting them all. Mr. Robert Liddle was not in the form shown in June. He waited too long on his birds. The scores were:

At 12 birds, Hurlingham. For club medals. First, Doctor S. E. Knowles. Second, Mr. Will De Vaull. Third, Mr. F. B. Norton.

San Diego Tournament.

The Peters Cartridge Company recently presented a medal to the sportsmen of Southern California, and on July 5th the first match for it was shot, at Prospect Park, Los Angeles.

The conditions were, 50 single and 25 pairs Blue Rock targets, Chamberlin rules. At the singles, Martinez, Chick and "Partington" tied on 42, but Chich won at the pairs by one.

Kind Words.

Leslie E. Macleod, of Wallace's Monthly, in his "Notes and Comments" in that popular journal, has the following squib about the new proprietor of this paper, which at least shows kind wishes. He is rather rough on "Grim," however, that worthy having dropped angling, his entire time being taken up with the sport of kings.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN, of San Francisco, has changed owners and management. In March Mr. Joseph Cairn Simpson retired and sold his interest to his two partners, and recently one of them, Mr. James P. Kerr, has purchased the whole paper. The genial and perennial Major Alex P. Waugh, with whom I was sometimes wont to pursue the elusive billard-ball at the Astor House before he went to the golden shore, and with whom I spent many pleasant hours in San Francisco last winter, is still on the staff, and he makes the paper breezy and newsy. Brother Waugh is a great institution wherever he is, and I should like to enter him in the Evening World fish-story competition. He'd win in a canter. The field department of the BREEDER is safe in Dr. Briggs' hands, and no one wishes the whole combination, individually and collectively, greater fortune than the undersigned.

State Fair Speed Programme.

The managers of the State Fair have arranged the speed programme in good form all through, and the closing week will be most interesting and exciting. The programme for the first week has already been given in these columns. The second begins Monday, and ends Saturday, the 21st. The closing day of the fair promises very lively sport, and rousing entertainment on every day.

On Monday will come first the Daisy D. stake, three quarters of a mile, for all ages, $50 each, half forfeit, or $15 if declared before September 1, $350 added, $100 to the second, the third to save stake. Non winners of this year allowed five pounds; maidens of two years, five; of four or more, seven pounds.

Next, the Capital City Stake, a handicap for three-year-olds; a mile and a sixteenth; $100 each, half forfeit, $20 declaration, $400 added; second $100; declarations due 6 P. M. September 14th.

Third, the Sunny Slope Stake, for two-year-old fillies; five-eighths of a mile; $25 each, $15 forfeit, $10 if declared before September 1st, $300 added, of which $50 to second, third to save stake; maidens allowed five pounds.

Fourth Prize Stake, all ages; one mile and a quarter; $100 each, half forfeit, $25 if declared before September 1st, $500 added, $100 added, $100 to second, $50 to third; three-year-olds that have started and not won allowed seven pounds, four-year-olds and over, ten pounds.

Does Breeding Trotters Pay?

A consideration of this question will more and more lead to the conclusion that breeding trotters is among the most profitable, as it is one of the most prideful pursuits in which men embark. It requires large capital to establish a breeding farm, and the fine discrimination and sound judgment essential to the purpose are important factors. Investigation and study are needed to ascertain the nature and hereditary qualities of the noted equine lines; the powers and peculiarities of the individual, the results of crosses, and the tendency of parentage, and all else which concerns the breeding and commingling of blood. But those whose wealth enables them to establish and maintain large breeding farms do not depend upon newspaper advice or suggestions for information of the business. It is mainly to the farmers and others who use horses in their occupations, and have the advantages and means to unite breeding of stock with their other pursuits, that the consideration of the subject is suggested. It will grow with deliberation.

Industries and enterprises are judged according to the degree and measure of success wrought as they have continued and progressed. The farming of half a century ago has advanced from its comparatively primitive methods and insignificant earnings to methods embracing a high degree of art, combined with science and greater profit in the result. Similarly in mechanics and professions. As invention and broader intelligence pervade, mankind progresses to superior excellence. The accumulation of wealth begets new ideas of living, and the progressive rivalry of communities spurs men to further accomplishment. The plain dwelling has made way for the elegant home; the clumsy wagon is displaced for the handsome vehicles of the period; there is more display and expenditure in dress and in everything that men and women have concern there is development of taste, and style, and surroundings. The common is giving way to the better or grander or magnificent; the inferior to the superior. Among these manifestations of progress in taste and style is the taste for fine horses.

The farmer incurs the heavy outlay of costly agricultural implements, worked by steam, because he is sure of ultimate better results and increased profit over the old fashioned husbandry by manual labor. The manufacturer refits his factory at great cost, because he feels confident that the increased capacity and better qualities will bring him larger trade and more enrich him. The mechanic and artisan provide themselves with expensive inventions to facilitate their work and enlarge their sphere of business. Similarly does the merchant or the dealer secure for his delivery wagons horses of better quality at more cost. All find profit and benefit besides in relinquishing the old system and adopting the new, in striving toward the best.

In business pursuits strict methods and economy are pursued. In the recreations and pleasures of life come the lavish flow, the costly display, the gratification of the taste regardless of cost. It is an error that fewer men are rich than formerly. The fact is there are greater accumulations of wealth in the hands of a larger number than ever before, and that there is a larger proportion of rich men, of men in comfortable circumstances, possessed of a competency, and well-to-do, than at any former period, in this country. There are a large number of the actually poor and of paupers; but the reason of this is obvious and palpable. Many are brought to this condition by their own fault, their improvidences, or their recklessness. Tens of thousands are landed upon our shores from Europe every year to swell the number already here. They are the poor of Europe, the paupers of foreign lands, which make the bad showing that demagogues magnify. But as to wealth itself, there never was so much in the country; there was never greater prosperity; there has never been the equal of this period in enterprises and means which lead to the acquisition of riches and of great wealth.

This broadly scattered and diffused wealth, distributed among the much larger number than ever before enjoyed it, is the cause and support of two variant and dissimilar, though not opposing or conflicting conditions in community. The overplus of capital compels the quest for new fields for its safe employment and investment, its profitable and beneficial use; also, it excites the disposition and enables its possessor to indulge in the gratification of his desires, even to extravagance. Mankind naturally have fancy for all the domestic animals. As horses and dogs are of these the most companionable and most devoted to man, they are his favorites. As men acquire riches they indulge this fondness. Very naturally a fine horse or a fine dog is preferred to one of low degree. The price is a matter of small consideration where fancy and desire are the prompters and the purse is of less care. There are now a greater number of men who can afford to buy fine horses than ever there has been; consequently more fine horses will be bought, and the supply is not likely to exceed the demand, no matter how many embark in the pursuit of breeding to sustain the market.

The fondness for fine horses is not a "craze" of a day or a generation, as was that for tulips, for the moris multicaulis, for party hats, etc. In every age of the world, every people blessed with knowledge of the horse—the savages of the plains, the nomads of the desert, the most enlightened—have prized the noble animal. It is only within the century that attention has been devoted in our own country to the superior breeding of the horse, and the ordinary common, low bred horse was the horse of all classes alike. Only the rich and the prideful took the care and paid the price to obtain fine horses; only the sagacious breeder has the foresight to import thoroughbreds, to breed for racing mainly. But thoroughbreds are of less value to the farmer and the people generally than the fine trotters, which are roadsters, and make the best of horses for driving and pleasuring, for farm use and city work. As the breeding is improved the quality of the horse is bettered.

Forty years back there was not in the entire United States a breeding farm devoted to the production of trotters. Now there are breeding farms in nearly every State; fully from two hundred to three hundred in all; and although more attention than ever before is devoted to thoroughbreds, still greater attention is devoted to the breeding of trotters. Many millions of dollars are invested in the pursuit, and among the owners of these grand farms are the first men of the country in public and in private life—the first in character and public estimation, the first in wealth and great benevolence, the first in intelligence and enterprise. California contains a generous proportion—the farms at Palo Alto, at San Mateo, at Del Paso, at Santa Anita, at Rosemeade, at St. Miguel, the Holly Farm, at Pleasanton, and others. The oldest of these is within fifteen years of age, yet from them has been produced upwards of one hundred trotters in the 2:30 class, some of which have records as low as 2:12. Besides these are the many which have developed into finest roadsters and horses for pleasure driving, valuable for city use, for the farm, for general work. The other Pacific States are similarly progressing. In the States east breeding farms are increasing and prospering. More pride in horses is taken, and much better prices are realized for the horses. It is gratifying to contemplate that the horses bred in California command the highest prices at the large sales in New York and other cities on that side. This is proof of the quality, proof of the profit in the breeding.

The farmer appreciates that it is a false economy to give twenty dollars for a poor farm implement which will neither answer his purpose nor return him its cost; that the true economy is to pay for a first rate implement which will richly compensate by its worth. The same with his live stock—to breed in cattle for the best for the dairy, or for beef; in sheep, for the best in the fleece, or for mutton; in swine, for the best in pork. So, in horses, to breed for the superior qualities which make horses most valuable for use or most prized at sale.

A visit to the farming counties and to the interior marketing towns of the State will satisfy the visitor that the breeding and purchase and use of fine and good horses is becoming more and better appreciated by all. Every well-to-do farmer has his fast roadsters for his own prideful driving, in team or single; his handsome pair for his wife and his sons and daughters to drive to town. The town notables likewise have their speedy trotter and natty rig to take the road from any they meet. To the express wagons and all in delivery line, good horses are attached. Plugs have no call—only the poorest and meanest have them. The demand is for good, fine, superior, speedy, fast horses, for trotters with record low in the turf figures. It pays to raise horses of these qualities. Every farmer can raise his own, and for sale.

Racing at Eureka.

The reorganized Jockey Tuesday Club of Eureka, gave their initial meeting, commencing July 2nd. The day was all that could be wished for, and as a consequence, the attendance was larger than usual on a first day, but still not what it should have been, nor what the sport warranted. Horsemen from all over the State were present, and many of the horses that contested at the last meeting of the Pacific Coast Blood Horse Association had been taken up to contest for the rich purses, hung up by the Eureka Club. Many improvements had been made by the Executive Committee, and the spectators as well as the horsemen were prolific in praise, for what had been done for their additional comfort. The pool selling and mutual pools, were under the charge of Al Leach, of San Francisco, that gentleman giving general satisfaction to the patrons of "the box." To add to the brilliancy of the occasion the ladies stand was well filled, the elegant costumes lending a charm to the scene. The members of the association did everything in their power to make the visit of strangers a pleasant one and there is not a person who attended but will try to be present at the next meeting.

The judges of the day were Messrs. Roberts, Devoy, Murphy and Pine.

The preliminary race was the Introduction Stake for which the entries were Hot Spur, Laura Gardner, McCormack, Shiner, Welcome, Jack Brady and Applause, but only the last three faced the starter. Brady and Welcome alternated as choice in the pools, Applause having but poor support, this being his first race of the season. As usual Welcome wore the "rogues badge," which seemed to cause surprise among many of the spectators, they not being used to see horses run in blinkers. Jack Brady got the best of the send off by a clear open length, which he kept almost to the half, where Welcome was given her head and rapidly passed the Davis entry. From there out the race was virtually over, as Welcome was never headed, winning easily, Brady second, with Applause a good third.

SUMMARY.

A trotting race for district horses was the next event on the card and was productive of much betting, the starters being Pete Steinway, Waldstein, and Poscora Hayward Jr. In the first heat there was considerable delay in giving them the word and it was not until the seventh attempt that they were sent off with Steinway leading. Owing to a break Waldstein was soon in the rear, but settling rapidly, he gradually forged ahead, and at the three-quarter pole was leading his field. From there out he won the heat handily in 2:39½, Poscora Hayward Jr. distanced. Waldstein won both of the next heats easily in 2:40½ and 2:41¼, In the last heat Steinway's driver was changed, owing to the dissatisfaction of those who were backing the grey gelding, but the change made no difference, as in the final heat Steinway was distanced.

The amusements of the day finished with a novelty race, in which Sleepy Dick was first at the quarter pole, and Lida Ferguson at the half, while Susie S. was too fleet of foot for the balance of the field, and gained the three-quarter purse, also winning the mile end of the division.

SUMMARY.

Running—Purse $300. Novelty race; free for all. Dash of one mile. Quarter $50; half $65; three-quarter $75; mile $110. All paid up entries over four to be added and equally divided between winners.

Sleepy Dick winner of the quarter, 24½; Lida Ferguson of the half, 50½; Susie S. winner of the three-quarter and mile, time 1:49.

WEDNESDAY.

If ever a day was perfect for racing Wednesday, July 3rd was, and that the sport had "caught on" was evident from the increased attendance. Matt Storn was given the flag for this day's sport, and it goes without saying that the work was satisfactorily completed. The opening event was a five-eighths dash, the only starters being Pliny and Emma Nevada. The former had things all his own way from start to finish, the namesake of the Cantatrice, never being in the hunt.

SUMMARY.

The second race on the card was a mile dash which had Welcome, Dave Douglas and Laura Gardner for starters. The latter mare was the favorite in the pools, but Welcome was the first to catch the judges eyes, under the wire.

A fitting termination for the day's sport was the three-quarter mile and repeat, four aspirants for honors came to the front, they being Jack Brady, Hotspur, McCormack and Asa. THURSDAY.

On the Fourth of course every one, man woman and child, turned out in splendid style to go to the races, and all went home perfectly satisfied with the day's sport provided. The first race on the card was the six furlong free for all, with four starters. Pliny was made a red-hot favorite in the pools and justified the confidence placed in him by jumping off in front and keeping there until the wire was reached, with Emmr Nevada a good second.

SUMMARY.

Running. Free for all; selling purse $350. Second to receive $50. Horses entered for $1,000 to carry full weights. Three pounds allowed on each $100 to $700; two pounds on each $100 down to $300. Winners to be put up at auction valuation to be given to the Secretary the night poeceding the race by 6 o'clock. Six furlongs.

Time—1:14¾.

The Eureka Derby, rather a misnomer, for it was for 3-year-olds and over, brought out four starters. Laura Gardner was at once installed favorite and backers were once more jubilant, for the pretty little chestnut went right to the front, and making all the running, romped home an easy winner, with G. W. second.

SUMMARY.

The heats in the half mile and the trot were sandwiched. In the half mile and repeat there were three starters, all well known crack sprinters. Sleepy Dick was made favorite, and readily accounted for the first heat in :49.

The second heat was productive of a slashing race all the way, the two mares (Susie S. and Lida) running a dead heat, Dick only a short length off in 0:48¾. The third heat was won cleverly by Susie S. in 50 seconds, with Dick again third. All three started in the fourth heat, which Susie again won, this time easier than before. Time 0:51½. There was a good deal of argument as to which horse should start in the last heat, and finally the judges allowed all three, which luckily did not affect the race; according to rule 84, Blood Horse Association Rules, Sleepy Dick ought to have gone to the stable.

The Free-for-all had three starters, two trotters and Damiana pacer. After a short delay Perihelion and Covey went out in front, and Covey going fast took the pole at the quarter, but Perihelion settled down, and trotting in good style went past at the half, and though squeezed by the pacer, won the heat by a length in 2:35, Damiana second. The positions were reversed in the next heat, Damiana winning readily. Perihelion second. 2:36¼. Damiana was not pushed in the third heat, allowing Perihelion to win nicely from Covey. The last two heats were easily won by the pacer, Perihelion going all to pieces, finishing last in each heat.

FRIDAY.

There was a noticeable falling off in the attendance, the weather not being quite as good as it had been, the wind especially being troublesome. The first race was a mile and a quarter, with four starters. In the pools Gardiner and Welcome alternated as favorites. A very fair start was made, and G. W. at once rushed to the front and made the pace for six furlongs, where they all closed up, and a very sharp tussle ensued until the draw-gate, where Gardiner drew out, winning cleverly at the finish from Welcome.

SUMMARY.

Free for all. Purse $400; second to receive $50. Winner of Introduction Stake or Derby to carry five pounds extra, if winner of both eight pounds extra. Mile and a quarter.

An amateur foot race, 100 yards, for championship of Humboldt County and a fifty-dollar gold medal, was then brought off, the two contestants making a splendid race to the wire, which Charles Freese reached two yards in front of Fred Hanson. The half mile and repeat had three starters. Stoneman sold a big favorite in the pools, and did not give his backers a qualm, for he won in straight heats, both in 48½, in the easiest possible manner. Purse, $250, of which $50 to second, for Humboldt County, half mile and repeat.

The last race of the meeting was a trotting race, with Electric, Steinway and Waldstein. Waldstein sold for $20 to the field $8. After a long delay scoring, Steinway went off in front, and with the favorite breaking badly Electric passed Steinway and led to the three-quarter pole, when she broke and Steinway passed her and won the heat, Electric second and Waldstein, who had not gained any of his lost ground, a bad third. Time 2:40.

Waldstein sold for $40 to the field $32.

Steinway was in front when the bell rang, and trotting steadily won handily, while Waldstein, who was very erratic, finished second. Time 2:38.

Steinway now sold a big favorite, bringing $10 to the others' $8.

Waldstein took the lead and pole shortly after the start, and held it throughout the race, opening a wide but evenly divided gap between the other two, and taking the heat in 2:35¾. Electric trotted very well, but the company was too good, and she was run in to save distance. Steinway went to pieces and it was only by running him the last quarter that he managed to save his distance. After some deliberation the judges gave the heat and race to Waldstein and distanced the other two.

SUMMARY.

Trotting. 2:40 class for Humboldt horses. Dandi Moore barred and Lady Macbeth to go to wagon. Purse $350, of which second to receive $65, third $35. Mile heats, 3 in 5.

SATURDAY.

The stewards being well satisfied with the attendance and sport provided, decided to have an extra day. The attendance was not as large as it had been on previous days, probably owing to the excitement caused by the fire. The first race was a consolation purse of $150, of which $50 to second, and $25 to third, for beaten horses, seven furlongs. After a few false starts, the timer's and and assistant starter's flags were dropped, and Applause won handily, but as the starter had not dropped his flag they had to come back, and after a short interval they were again sent off, the favorite (Applause) winning easily by two lengths from Asa; time 1:37¾. The second race was for a purse of $100, of which $25 to second; nine-sixteenths of a mile. Furgeson sold favorite over Susie S and Edith R. as a field. They were despatched at the first attempt, the favorite winning all the way, with Susie S. second. Time, 55¼.

The last race of the meeting was an owners handicap, one and one quarter mile, for a purse $150, second to receive $25, Applause 95 pounds; Black Pilot 83 pounds; and Dave Douglas 80 pounds. The first pool sold was $20 Dave Douglas choice. Black Pilot brought $5 and Applause $2, but at the finish there was no bid for the field against Douglas. Black Pilot jumped off in front and made the running for a mile with Applause second and the favorite running easy, third, when well in the stretch Douglas rapidly closed up and passing the other two won pretty easily. Pilot beating Applause by a neck for second place after a tight finish. Time 2:13¾.

Second Payments Made.

BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN: With the exception of the three-year-old filly Una Wilkes by Guy Wilkes, second payments have been made on every entry in the Breeders' stakes and purses.

PENN'S GROVE, July 6, 1889.

shooting over, and the party fitted out with guns, 22 calibre flies and a load of ammunition. Going down, the road leading direct to the school house was followed, and when returning the new avenue running by the red house on section 17, where the trials began two years ago, was used. The cover on the reserved sections is good, stock having been kept off and the grasses permitted to grow luxuriantly, the result being that the quails from surrounding sections have been attracted and have nested upon the land until they are almost too abundant. Not less than thirty bevies use on sections 17 and 18, and as shooters will be religiously excluded, the field trialers can rely upon the best possible conditions in January next. The ditches running through the reserved sections will all have water turned into them at intervals, so that the birds will have no reason to wander. Those who have attended the trials hitherto can appreciate the delight felt by the writer in being upon that familiar ground, but one thing being lacking, and that the presence of Joe, Henry and George Bassford, Post, J. G. Edwards, Foote, Rose, Meriweather, Schreiber, Linville, Payne, Taft, Vandevort, Shafter, Chipman, Barney, Haas, Dunham, and all the rest. Every one of those who has attended former trials is remembered by the Knights of the Trigger with high regard, and numberless questions were asked and answered about them—the hope being invariably expressed that they would all be spared to be present at the next trials. After inspection of the grounds, a little drive was made to a ranch owned by Mr. R. E. Houghton, a brother to that marvellously enthusiastic, energetic and likeable sportsman, W. E. Houghton, to whose effectiveness and generosity Bakersfield owes its prominence as a field trial center. At the ranch the major domo, Mr. J. P. James, an old time reader of the Breeder and Sportsman, welcomed the party, and immediately turned this scribe loose in the poultry yard, with carte blanche to knock over as many young chickens as he thought necessary to furnish forth a dinner table. The scribe killed some half dozen or so, which would have been plenty but for Mr. Borgwardt's absent-mindedness. When the chickens were perfectly broiled and served and placed before Borgwardt, that royal good fellow was in a reverie, and continued taking pieces of chicken until none were left, when bread, cucumbers, claret, milk, tea, and everything else were absorbed by the Sullivanesque diner, who had to be abruptly enjoined or he would have gone on indefinitely. The only excuse he offered was that he didn't feel very well, and was thinking of something. While waiting for luncheon, Houghton, Ed. Lechner, Borgwardt and Lightner went over into an adjacent field and killed five dozen doves, and after the meal the shooting was resumed, the result being the addition of three dozens to the bag. Toward evening the party drove back to Bakersfield along Union Avenue, a twelve-mile drive recently constructed, which runs by the red house on section 17. Many of the business men of Bakersfield were met, all of whom joined in expressions of pleasure at the success of the Knights of the Trigger and the field trials.

The dailies of Sunday announced the destruction of Bakersfield by fire. Thirteen blocks, mostly business houses, were destroyed, not a single store or warehouse being left. The new hotel and the Arlington were both burned, as well as the Weill block, where so many sportsmen have roomed. Every restaurant, grocery and market was obliterated and a large number of houses. The loss aggregated $1,250,000, with $324,000 insurance. The elegantly fitted rooms of the Knights of the Trigger, just finished with every necessary for comfort and convenience, were burned, not a thing being saved. Among the sportsmen the heaviest losers were the Lechner Brothers, Houghton and Lightner and H. L. Borgwardt, Jr. The energy and recuperative power of the Bakersfield community was well shown on the day after the fire. No appeal for assistance was sent out, but the citizens whose homes were not burned apportioned the homeless among them for shelter. Messrs. Haggin and Carr and Miller and Lux gave orders to supply all wants in the way of food, and rebuilding was at once begun. Two days after the fire twenty-six temporary structures were up and open for business. Bakersfield is bound to be a great business centre, and the fire, while disastrous, cannot stop the push and foresight of the men who have made a paradise of that portion of Kern County. It is a pleasure to know that no lives were lost, and to the sportsmen particularly many expressions of sympathy and regret are conveyed.

The Grand Circuit.

There is the interesting matter of $50,000 in view for the contention of runners and trotters in the grand circuit this season, embracing Napa, Santa Rosa, Petaluma and Oakland. The stakes are placed; the purses are liberal. Bear in mind the dates: Solano and Napa Agricultural Association Fair, August 12th to 17th; Santa Rosa, August 20th to 24th; Sonoma and Marin, at Petaluma, August 27th to 31st, and Oakland, Golden Gate, from September 2d to 7th. Running, trotting and pacing have each good play.

At Napa, the first day will come running—first race, free for all, three-quarters of a mile and repeat, $25 entrance, $10 forfeit, $200 added, $50 to second; second, one mile and repeat, $25 entrance, $10 forfeit, $250 added, $50 to second; third, one and one-half mile dash, $25 entrance, $10 forfeit, $200 added, $50 to second.

Ventura Racing News.

A very merry crowd went down to Ventura on the 4th to witness the races there. The ride down, of thirty miles, was a glorious one, for the train goes along the seashore all the way; and we sit in the comfortable cars and look out into the broad sea, and those whose poetical spirits are enchanted by the scene before them, with joyous souls sing out:

> "The sea! the sea! the open sea!
> The blue, the fresh, the ever free!
> Without a mark, without a bound,
> It runneth the earth's wide regions round;
> It plays with the clouds; it mocks the skies;
> Or like a cradled creature lies"

When we arrived at Ventura we had but half an hour in which to eat our lunch. We all hurried through it, and then down to the track we went. There were women, men and children cheering the proud horses as they came on the track. The first race was for named horses, and the five that came out to trot were too many for the narrow half-mile track of Ventura. Of the five horses that started, four of them were sired by A. W. Richmond. All of them had plenty of speed, but surely they had not been very well handled, for they broke when going slow, and when urged a little they would sulk. Ben Harrison was very quiet, and he was well driven by L. J. Rose, Jr. The pools sold; Ben Harrison, $10.00; Rosco Conkling, $10.00, and the field $3 00. The g g. Romeo was very stubborn, and his driver, James Mack, wanted to withdraw him, but the judges told him to do the best he could with the horse; so, after scoring a dozen times—it was trying on our patience—the horses went off to a fair start. Ben Harrison led to the first quarter, then Conkling came up with a rush and found him. The two horses trotted like a double team, but under the wire Conkling's head got there first; Harrison second; Barney third; Stertengund and Romeo away behind. Time, 2:45 The track is very heavy and uneven. Second heat was a repetition of the first time—2:45. Third heat was easily won by Conkling; Barney second; Ben Harrison third; time, 2:48.

Rosco Conkling, that won the race, is a fine five-year-old gelding by A. W. Richmond. The dam is untraced, and Mr Baertel gave fifty dollars for her. Conkling has a fine open gait and is true, and they say that he is game.

The second race was a very closely contested one from wire to wire. Pools sold: Eli, by A. W. Richmond, $10.00; Maben, $8.00, and Werte Wilkes, by Guy Wilkes, for $2 00. It did not take long to send off, to a good start, the three two-year-olds. Eli and Maben trotted nicely, for nearly the whole mile, and they came under the wire head and head, and though many declared that Maben had won the heat, the judges decided it a dead heat. The mile was trotted in 3:12. Very good time considering the track and the green colts. Werte Wilkes made a poor showing. He hopped around and came in away behind. The sports rushed to the pool stand and Eli sold for $10.00; Maben, $10 00, and Wilkes $1.00. This heat was also very closely contested, and Eli managed to get the heat, Maben making a bad break just before reaching the wire. Time, 3:05.

The third heat was very interesting. Eli and Maben trotted head and heel all around and twenty yards from the wire. Eli broke and run in ahead. The judges gave the heat and race to Eli. Many thought that Maben won the race, but the judges gave it to Eli, and the Eli men were jubilant. The last heat was trotted in 3:04.

The third race caused great laughter, excitement and repentance. The horses that started were:

G g by A. W. Richmond's Jeff, entered by Frank Treanor.
G g by A. W. Richmond's Leon, entered by Leon Lehman.
B h by A. W. Richmond, Richmond Jr., entered by E. Hattery.
B. M. Lacer, Arabella, entered by I. F. Cooper.

The betting on this race was spirited, Arabella selling for $10, Richmond for $8, and the field for $3. Arabella is a small brown mare owned in Santa Barbara and the boys from there were so certain that the mare could win, that they hung closely to the pool stand and placed their money on Arabella. It did not take the four long to get the word, go. Richmond led very easy all the way around. The brown mare broke. Cooper got the lines entangled in the wheels, but this little accident did not dismay the amateur jockey. He took them out and brought them down on the mare with a vengeance, but he was too late and Richmond won the heat in 2:48, Arabella second, Jeff third, and Leon fourth. The Santa Paula boys were not at all discouraged. They wanted to bet $20 that Arabella would win the next heat. Pools sold livelier than before, and when the horses came up for "go" the Arabella boys shouted themselves hoarse. The horses were sent off to a good start. Soon after they left the wire Arabella broke. Jeff broke and so did Leon. Richmond Jr. trotted as he liked and won easily, time 2:48, Jeff 2nd., Arabella 3rd., and and Leon fourth. The shouting died away and you could hear but the low murmur of the ocean. The loud wind ceased, and the high rollers disappeared.

The third heat came at last. Arabella could outpace Jeff and Leon. Both settled down to trot and they crowded Richmond Jr. when Jeff's sulky struck the fence and sent the driver in the air. Leon won the heat, Richmond Jr., second, Arabella third and Jeff away behind trying to get away with the smashed sulky. When the drivers dismounted, Mrs. Cooper, wife of J. F. Cooper, came down from the grand stand and took possession of her mare Arabella. She declared that the mare was being abused and that she wouldn't let her start another heat. The crowd became again boisterous. The judges were wrath and they swore that Arabella would start again. They ordered the marshal to take possession of the mare, but Mrs. Cooper was determined, and finally the judges decided to give the mare to Mrs. Cooper and rule the mare off forever.

The fourth heat and race was won by Richmond Jr. Time, 2:44. Richmond Jr. is a level-headed gelding, and his dam is a fine thoroughbred mare sired by Benuode. Thus ended the races at Ventura. The unfortunate losers are sorely disappointed, and the winners had never witnessed fairer and better races.

Ventura Co. is progressing rapidly, for on every farm you will now find fine horses and mares. Chritman and Willoughby take great interest in horse racing and they are ever ready to assist. They have fine fillies that they are breeding to good trotters. J. Hill has many fillies by Ben Wade and Wildidle that he is breeding to trotters. Dewdrop, sired by Algona, is owned in Ventura County; so is a fine bred and well proportioned son of Sultan.

The President of the Ventura Driving Park Association, J. M. Kaiser, Esq., is a most enterprising and energetic gentleman, who takes great interest in horses, and to whom Ventura owes much for his indefatigable activity. Ventura track at present is heavy and too narrow. There is sufficient land to make it a mile track, or they can widen the half-mile track and improve it wonderfully. They lack stalls and a roof on their grand stand.

It made my heart joyous to look upon the beautiful black mare Dolly Dimple. She is a handsome mare. She has a noble face, kind eyes and a most gentle disposition. If Mr. Hill were to ask me what stallion I should breed her to, I would without any hesitancy suggest Emperor of Norfolk. I have been kindly invited to take a trip through the northern part of Santa Barbara County, and I shall the first opportunity I have. I want to see J. M. Rochin's fine brown stallion sired by A. W. Richmond, dam Monte Belle, she by Tenbrock, second dam Mary, dam of Tom Stout, record 2:24. When I sold the stallion to J. M. Rochin he promised great speed. Merrit & Murray, of Santa Maria, have a four-year-old stallion by Electioneer, called Elector. They say that he is very fast and trots and acts like the best sons of the great producer. He will give the stallions in the fall race a close call. My tip for the stallion race is Don Patricio. I have great faith in this gray stallion, and I am confident that Gus Walters will have the horse in fine condition for the race. I. K. Fiske, Esq., proprietor of Don Patricio, is a keen, level headed horseman, and if he starts Don Patricio in the race the horse is very likely to win.

Fourteen miles from the city of Santa Barbara is situated the loveliest stock farm in Southern California It contains six hundred acres, is well watered by a mountain stream, and one hundred acres of which can be irrigated in case of an extreme dry season. The farm is owned by a wealthy gentleman of Santa Barbara, who will stock it with five mares and a beautiful brown stallion sired by Stamboul, dam Carrie B. by A. W. Richmond; second dam Silian, she by Crichton. This gentleman means to purchase the finest and to breed exclusively for trotters.

With the advantages that Santa Barbara climate has on all other counties, the colts raised and trained here will knock all previous records "silly." What have we raised in Santa Barbara that has shown speed and endurance, many may ask? Well, we have raised one that has been trained by skillful hands, and what did he do? He can pace, I really believe, in 2 flat, and his name is Arrow.

When Arrow was brought from Los Angeles he was eight months, I believe. He was so poor, so sickly and so small for his age, that no one thought that he would live. He was turned out, and when eighteen months old, we drove him into a corral and lassoed him, and in a few minutes he was a gelding. We turned him out and did not see him for three months. When he was two years old we brought him to Santa Barbara, and broke him to harness. He had not been broken two months when we shod him to make a trotter of him. Eighteen ounces in front and eight behind, and six ounce toe weights on each front foot. We did not know how to drive him. The climate did it all, and so will it be with every colt trained here. Why, Harry Stamboul, sired by Stamboul, will trot a mile in 2:12 when three years old, and his brother, by Alcazar, will trot in 2:10 when four years old.

E. R. Den, the proud owner of Harry Stamboul, has also a fine three-year-old by Hock-Hocking, and also a very speedy filly by Wildidle. They are now being trained for the fall races by P. Menchachs, the brave jockey who rode Dotty Dimple so successfully, and who rode Wildidle when he won the great race at Oakland against such horses as Lucky B., Jocko, McKinstry and others. That was a great day for the rubbers of Wildidle. I shall never forget a darkey who stood around the pool-stand with fifteen dollars in his hand anxious to buy a pool. Lucky B. would sell for two hundred, Jocko reserved and some other have third and the field for thirty and forty. At last the darkey bought a pool for fourteen dollars, which called for over three hundred, and when he bought it he remarked, "Won't I's have a time if I wins." I would like to have seen him when he cashed his ticket. T. M.

REMARKS.

The intention of the Directors of this Association is to make this place a central point for racing in California. They recognize the fact, that in order to do so, they have got to give large purses in order to get first-class horses. Knowing they have as well-appointed grounds and as good a track as there is in California, having first-class stabling and the best Club House on any track in California, and plenty of fine grass for horses the whole year, and by dealing justly and fairly with the horsemen, we hope to receive their patronage. We are situated about half way between San Francisco and Los Angeles, which makes it an accessible point for the patronage of the whole State.

Being aware that the responsibility, to a great extent, of the Association, is not known outside of our own State, we herewith attach a certificate, signed by the Banks of this City, as to the responsibility of the Association.

We, the undersigned, do certify that the Fresno Fair Grounds Association is perfectly responsible, and its statements are reliable:

Cream of Irish Setter Blood.

A high-class champion-bred, thoroughly broken, all red, 3-year-old bitch, litter sister to the well known Birmingham and Crystal Palace prize winner Killaloe, and equally handsome. Also two brace of youngsters by Frisco (the famous prize winner and sire of the Field Trial winner Dr. Gheda) ex Maureen by Chieftain (sire of Killaloe, Kincora, Colonel II, etc.) ex Kathleen by Palmerston II, ex Sal, niece to the once noted Plunket. In these puppies are combined the blood judiciously crossed of the three great families of Irish Setters, whose progenitors have been alike successful on the bench and in the field. Rare in form, grand in coat and color, with absolutely perfect heads, they should prove a desirable addition to the kennels of the West. Particulars, prices, and full pedigrees from

KALAMAZOO, Mich., Sept. 15, 1888.

GENTLEMEN:—We have used Ossidine for the past two years and consider it invaluable for Sprung Tendons, Curbs, Ringbone and Spavins; there is nothing equals it; and for us it effected a permanent cure where firing failed, although performed by one of the most successful veterinarians on the continent. We have recommended it to others with like success, and believe it has more merit than any blister ever used.

Very respectfully yours, S. A. BROWNE & Co., Prop's.

This scientific preparation is an absolute cure for all bony or callous lumps on horses, and is a more powerful absorbent than "firing," without creating the slightest blemish. After a few applications the excrescence is so palpably reduced that even the skeptical frankly acknowledge that it is by far the most valuable outward remedy for horses ever invented.

The ONLY preparation in the world that will remove a Bone Spavin after it has become ossified.

Price $3.00 per Large Bottle,

Owner of Eole, St Saviour, Eolist, etc, says; I have long used it in my stables, and find it to be all that is claimed for it in removing callous and unnatural bony growths, without leaving the slightest blemish. From my experience, I most strongly recommend the use of Ossidine, and feel that it is a necessary adjunct to every stable. Yours respectfully,

As PRIZE WINNERS we challenge any other make of Gun to make a showing like the following:

All Previous Records Broken.

Never before were 100 live pigeons killed straightly in a similar match under same conditions, until the L. C. SMITH GUN was made and did it. In the hands of Mr. Al Bandle, of the firm of Bandle Arms Co., Cincinnati, Ohio, this wonderful score was made. Capt. A. H. Bogardus scoring with a 12-gauge L. C. Smith in the match against Bandle, the very high score of 95. A remarkable score with a 12-guage.

By Grim.

There are farms and farms, but the one par excellence of all I have visited in the State is that belonging to Mr. Josiah H. White at Lakeville, Sonoma County. This celebrated stock farm is located about six miles southeast from Petaluma, the drive from town to Mr. White's being over a more than average country road. On our arrival we are saluted by a perfect army of children, which Mr. White hastens to inform me are not all his own, for which information I heartily thanked him, as it seemed to me that there were young ones enough for at least half a dozen families. However, it only takes a moment to learn that Master Ed White and Miss Edith, his sister, are having a birthday party and all the neighbors' children are helping to celebrate the great event; and how they did enjoy themselves, far beyond the comprehension of their elders, and in a way that the most versatile writer would fail in the attempt, if he tried to pen their doings and happiness.

Mrs. White met us at the door with the cordiality always extended by a California hostess to a stranger, and while supper is being prepared a look is taken at the local buildings and grounds. Stables, barns, carriage house, grannery and houses for the help, all built separate and distinct, so that in case of fire there is a strong probability that only one of the mammoth buildings would be destroyed. There is water in abundance taken from a reservoir on a hill some little distance from any of the structures.

Mr. White's residence is situated on a rise of ground, on the Eastern side of Petaluma Valley, from which a magnificent view is obtained of the great expanse, the eye being able to distinguish for many miles farm after farm, with fine substantial buildings, relieved from monotony by the windings of Petaluma Creek, which meanders through the open valley, looking like a great mass of molten bullion, as the sun reflects back the silvery sheen. The small coast range of hills, dotted all over with vineyards, adds to the beauty of the scene, presenting a landscape that is rare, even in this State, where eye pictures are so plentiful and varied.

The estate contains 1,800 acres in all, being divided about equally between hill and valley land, the latter used for hay and grain, while the uplands are devoted to the fine trotting horses, and large herds of Holstein cattle, for which the farm is deservedly celebrated. In the immediate vicinity of the house is a small orchard and a very fine vineyard, which is very prolific. As it was late in the afternoon when I arrived, a look at the stock was deferred until the following morning, but a pleasant evening was spent in recalling old reminiscences of the turf, and trying to sort out tangled pedigrees, many of which have been changed within the knowledge of both Mr. White and the writer. My host has a remarkable memory, and many a good story was told of races and race horses in the days gone. A good night's rest, and we were ready for work in the morning. I should not say work, for pleasure can hardly be termed labor, and surely it is a pleasure to see such fine broodmares as those in the possession of Mr. White. Whether it is the climate or the field that has such a wonderful effect on the stock I'm sure it is impossible to say; but a finer looking lot of foals and yearlings cannot be seen anywhere. It is really no exaggeration to state that the large majority of the yearlings are apt to be mistaken for two-year-olds by those ignorant of their age.

Fanny, one of the queens of the harem, is probably better known to the citizens of San Francisco as one of the celebrated Dean team, for which $8,000 was refused. She is a handsome light chestnut, of fine conformation, and should prove a valuable adjunct to the Stud. Fanny is by General McClellan, dam Maggie, a very fast trotting mare, whose pedigree is untraced. She has at foot a fine sturdy horse colt by Hernanni, which should be a prize.

One mare was criticised closely, simply because she is by Alexander 490. She is called Mattie Mac, and has a record of 2:42½. Why so much attention was paid her can be told very easily. There is every reason to believe that a son of Alexander will make a very low record this year, and we already have Yolo Maid, 2:14, from a son of his, and if all accounts are to be believed, there will be several others of the same family that will get records low down in the "twenties," if not in the "'teens," before this season closes. Mattie Mac is a grand individual, and has by her side a splendid filly by Hernanni, as magnificently proportioned as she is herself, which is saying a good deal.

Kate, is by William's Bellfounder, 1st dam by Waterloo, 2nd dam by Biggart's Rattler, and is a shapely matron worthy of gracing any field of brood mares in the country. While the mare has arrived at such an age that she is usually designated as old Kate there is still life enough in the aged party to claim the maternity of an exceedingly well put up colt by Hernanni, and as she is still as frisky as a filly, there is a prospect of her adding several more youngsters to the produce of Mr. White's farm.

Miss Kohl, is a daughter of Irvington, dam by Speculation, and she has joined the corps of matrons by producing an elegant filly by Admont. This is a very pretty little Miss and already shows good trotting action.

Another of the fine mares is H. D. by Gen. McClellan, dam by Littlejohn, he by Belmont. H. D. has evidently made up her mind not to be outdone in the size of foals for she has given birth to a very large filly, but still the young one is powerful and well proportioned, notwithstanding her size, and should be a credit to her dam and sire Hernanni.

Annie is a fine specimen of the typical brood mare, and for general looks is a hard one to beat. She is by General McClellan, dam Lady Franklin, by imp. The Lawyer. She lost a fine foal lately, which was by Hernanni.

Among others of his choice mares, Mr. White is able to number, the well known Ralston mare, which was brought to California a number of years ago for W. Ralston Esq. She is by Alexander's Abdallah, and is in every way a great individual, having the strongly marked characteristics of the Hambletonian family. She also has a foal by Hernanni, which makes the youngster an inbred Hambletonian. Mr. Requa, of Oakland, has a very fast colt out of this mare, of which much is expected this season.

I also saw the old thoroughbred mare, Mary Givens, the dam of Wild Oats. She has had no foal this year, but her yearling by Hernanni, is a natural trotter if ever there was one.

Another splendid yearling is an unnamed sister to Mountain Quail, which Mr. White has in training at the Petaluma track. She is by Hernanni, dam Annie by Gen. McClellan.

The Dude is aptly named, for he is a very stylish two-year-old, and carries himself with a great deal of dignity. He is by Marco, dam Susie by a son of Gen. McClellan.

Still another handsome yearling, is a son of Guy Wilkes, out of Miss Helen by General Benton; Miss Helen out of Nettie George by Norfolk. This should be a rare good cross, and as the colt is far above the average, it will not surprise me to hear great things of him on the turf some day.

Of all the yearlings, however, I am inclined to pin my faith on one by Hernanni, out of Miss Kohl. He is a fine, big, strapping fellow, full of ambition, and as he is admirably put up should make a name for both her sire and dam. Like all the balance of the "lads and lassies," he has excellent legs, in addition to massive shoulders and quarters, and is full of promise for one of his age. Those who are watching the good young ones throughout the State, had better keep their eyes on this one.

Miss Kohl is also the dam of Lola, a nice appearing two-year-old, by Billy Lyle, he by Morrow's Elector 2:21¼. Lola is a pure gaited trotter, and should have been trained this year, but Mr. White has a dozen at the Petaluma track now, and he could not send all that he had.

One of the two-year-olds, which is rather prepossessing in appearance is by Billy Lyle out of Mattie Mac. The youngster is a pure trotter and seems to know no other gait.

Still another of the good two-year-olds is Agnes by Billy Lyle, dam Accident by Frank McClellan.

Julia is a handsome bay, two years old, by Hernanni, dam Mesquite by Washington (a son of California Smuggler), 2nd dam a full sister to St. Helena, 3rd dam Buttermilk Sal.

Lillie Franklin is by Billy Lyle, dam Annie by Gen. McClellan, 2nd dam Lady Franklin. Lillie is a likely looking filly, and will in all probability be kept for breeding purposes.

It is usually supposed that horses named after great personages never amount to much, but the light chestnut two-year-old by Billy Lyle, which Mr. White has named Ben Harrison, is a great trotter at present, and is full of promise.

There are many others running loose in the various large fields, but the above will give a fair idea on what lines the proprietor of all these broad acres is breeding. Not to be outdone by the other prominent breeders of the State, Mr. White has a full mile track on his premises, which by many is considered the fastest course in the State. It is here that his colts are given their preparatory work, and their speed tested, before they are sent to the tracks for public exhibition. Already, as stated above, quite a number are at the Petaluma track, under the charge of Mr. A. N. Burrell.

But says the reader, "You have mentioned a lot of Hernanni's get; now who is Hernanni?" Well, I will tell you. He is a son of Electioneer, dam Gipsy, by Paul's Abdallah. Hernanni was foaled in 1880; is a beautiful bay, with dark points, almost 16 hands high, and although 2:35 is his record, he can trot in better time to-day, although only just taken from the stud. Hernanni is well proportioned, except that I think he is a little too long in the coupling; has splendid legs, grand shoulders, great depth of chest, and is a worthy son of a worthy sire. His get are all large and possessed of great power, and as he is a sure foal getter, is altogether a valuable horse for breeding trotters.

Now, one would naturally suppose that the farm and the horses would keep Mr. White's idle moments fully employed, but besides these varied pursuits there is time found to look after a fine herd of Holstein Friesian cattle, which is second to none in the State. When it was determined that this breed of cattle should be purchased, Mr. White did not pick them up here and there, but sent direct to New York and purchased forty-two head in quarantine, getting an excellent lot, and as good as money could purchase. This herd is celebrated for its quality, and individual members of it have taken first prizes wherever shown.

Among the families represented in the herd are the Pieter, Netherland, Aaggie and Kœningin, the very largest milk record makers in the world. In personal merit, beauty, performance and pedigree this herd cannot be excelled in the State, and its excellent producing quality is evinced in the fact that on the common feed many of the cows produce from fifty to sixty pounds of milk per day. The butter made from this milk also has an enviable reputation, and the wholesale dealers who contract for it give five cents per pound more than for the very best of ordinary dairy butter. Mr. White now has 115 head of pure bred Holsteins, and also vast numbers of graded ones, his favorite cross being with the Ayreshire. There are many farmers who wonder if the buying and breeding of fancy cattle pays. Let me whisper just a word. Although this Holstein herd was only purchased a short time ago, the increase sold has more than paid for the original purchase. Can it be doubted that breeding the best of everything pays? The three choice bulls which are kept for service are Aro Blancho 348 H. F. H. B., a rare fine specimen of the breed, and a prize winner wherever shown. Mr. White will not show at Sacramento, as the judging has been in the past so palpably unfair that he will not compete where there is no chance of having a fair decision. Mr. White takes an active interest in the Petaluma Fair Association, and will take especial pains to have several of the herd prepared for show purposes.

As yet Mr. White has been very unfortunate in not having had much success with his trotting-horses, but it is to be sincerely hoped that the year 1889 may see many of them drop into the "30" list. The more the merrier, and there is no one who will grasp "Siah" White's hand with more sincerity than Grim, if every one he has in training should do the trick.

"District" Colt Stakes a Misnomer.

Almost every fair in the State gives so-called "District Colt Stakes," the avowed purpose thereof being to encourage the "home" breeding of the higher classed trotting-horse, and to offer inducements for its development by protecting the small breeder from unequal competition with the larger breeding farms all over the State. Where these extensive breeding farms are within the district limits they are, of course, "barred" The object is certainly laudable, inasmuch as it certainly does cause the development of many a superior colt whose merits would otherwise remain unknown.

These district stakes are annually increasing in value. They have now reached that point where they offer an inducement and make it an object for others than breeders, with whom the stake is generally a secondary consideration, to desire to win them. The others whom we refer to are generally drivers and horse speculators—men who care nothing whatsoever for the breeding interests of the district, and whose only purpose is to win back a colt's purchase money in his first race, and to sell him at a profit. They may occasionally start a stallion or a mare; but as a gelding is, as a rule, a cheaper investment and a more "sure-monied" article to bet on in colthood, there is every probability that the majority of entries from this class of turf patrons will have no ability to "breed on," whatsoever their individual merit. If these geldings had been bred in the district, the point herein made would, of course, fall to the ground; but, as long as district stakes are open to colts, wheresoever bred, we think it timely to call attention now to what may hereafter prove as great a hindrance to the development of colts by small breeders as in the present "bugaboo" about the superior advantages of the larger breeding establishments.

In examination of the conditions of these district status, it will be found that the only restriction placed upon the entry thereto is that the colts shall have been owned in the district a specified number of months before they are trotted; not a word is said as to where or by whom they are bred.

Under this limitation, as soon as one of these speculators has estimated the worth of the stakes offered by the various fairs in his district, he may go outside of his district, buy the best developed colt he can lay his hands on and enter him in the district stakes; whilst the man who bred and developed the colt, who would probably have entered him and several others, and have made the stake and the race so much more attractive, is debarred the privilege of competing at all, merely because he does not reside within the district limits. In short, then, our district (?) stakes are open to all colts, wheresoever bred, provided the ownership lies in a resident of the district.

We cannot see that this limitation does away with the "bugaboo" already alluded to.

The purpose aimed at is not achieved; an injustice is done to the enterprise of the bona fide district breeder who imports valuable and costly sires and dams to the district; to the neighbors (generally small farmers), who patronize these stallions by stinting their mares to them and to those searchers after good blood lines, who may send their mares to be covered by stallions outside of the district limits.

These men who are spending their money freely and using their intelligent labor to improve the breed and value of the district horse; who are endeavoring by the development of their homebred colts to prove that their enterprise has borne good fruit; who, in short, are district benefactors, inasmuch as they attract a class of customers thereto that would not otherwise have come, may at any time, under present restrictions, have their plans, their hopes, and their aspirations frustrated; the cup of bliss which they had toiled and striven for years to win, is dashed to the ground at the very moment it was to be quaffed. By whom and by what? By a turf speculator whose keen and watchful eye has carefully noted every step the breeders' colts have taken; whose cupidity sends him at the last moment in search of a gelding bred and developed outside of the district and that he knows for a certainty has "the foot" of the district bred colts.

We do not say that this has happened; nor would we venture the assertion that it has not. It is morally certain however, that it will occur, and the surest method to prevent it is to take such steps as will protect the district and small breeders generally from any such discouraging and disgusting experience.

Give a small breeder a chance to prove that he can win a district stake or two and you will soon find him competing in the 'open to all' stakes. A breeder has pride in, and he wants reputation for his stock;—hence, with but limited encouragement in the district field, he will soon be found aspiring to conquests in a 'free-for-all' fight.

The turf speculator is not that kind of a bird; he wants coin and he wants it at as small a risk as possible. The district offers less competition or at least calls for a lower rate of speed and he will therefore give that his preference. Whether he lives in the district or out of it, makes no difference; there are plenty of driver 'pals' who will accommodate him by owning his horse for a few months.

Therefore, we suggest that the avenues now open to the turf speculator be more closely guarded, thereby to protect and encourage the district breeder. Don't shut out a colt sired by a district stallion, merely because that colt is owned outside of the district. Its success is an advertisement of and a benefit to the district. Others will be encouraged thereby, to come and breed to its sire. Hundreds of small breeders reside in San Francisco; they own no farms; their district gives no colt stakes and when they breed to your stallions, you shut their colts out simply because the owners don't live in your district. Is this good policy?

Restrict your district stakes as follows:

1st. To the produce (wheresoever owned) of stallions owned and standing in the district.

2d. To the produce of mares owned in the district, whatsoever stallion they may have been bred to.

Some breeders will undoubtedly cavil at having their "imported" stallions and mares shut out of the district stakes, but this temporary inconvenience will be more than offset by the increased advantages given to their produce. Besides, if a breeder is purchasing stallions elsewhere to improve district stock, he should be careful to buy the best, and the best should be fit to start in the open to all stakes. FOLIO.

Los Angeles Turf Items.

Los Angeles County will be well represented at most of the leading California Fairs this year, and there is considerable activity in the trotting world just at present. Charlie Durfee will be out with Gossiper and Don Tomas. The Simmons stallion has developed very much since last season and is now one of the handsomest and most symmetrical trotters that I have ever seen. He has not yet been sent a fast mile, but was driven a quarter several days ago in 32½ seconds. He will have to be a phenomenal horse, however, to get away with some of the crack four-year-olds that will be seen on the circuit this year. It is also expected that Don Tomas will clip two or three seconds off his record. This horse is owned by Major Hazard.

George Baylis will have in his string Atto Rex, Belle B, Glendine and Raymon. Atto Rex is the sensational stallion that all San Diego pronounce to be the coming world beater. He is by Attorney, who is by Harold, the sire of Maud S. Glendine is owned by Dr. K. D. Wise and is a very promising animal. Baylis expects to open the season at Napa.

At Rosemeade some half a score of trotters are being trained, but not more than five will be taken on the circuit. The star of the aggregation is Alcazar, and Senator Rose has great expectations from the son of Sultan—Minnehaha. Alcazar as a three-year-old showed 2:23, and will be a dangerous competitor in any company, provided his leg does not go back on him, his work so far has been very gratifying to his trainer Walter Maben. Dubec is also showing up well, and has already beaten 2:20 in a trial. Reverie, a two-year-old by Alcazar, out of Lady Day, has shown 2:30. She is a beautifully gaited bay filly with black points. A sensational youngster that will be along is an Alcazar yearling out of a mare by Arthurton. She is a bay filly of splendid conformation and can trot a quarter in 37 seconds any day in the week. Another Alcazar yearling out of Lady Mackay is also to be taken north. A five-year-old Sultan nicknamed Jumbo is also being worked, but it is not yet decided whether he will make the circuit. He is sixteen hands high and weighs anywhere between eleven and twelve hundred pounds. Jumbo has shown better than 2:22 already, and Walter Maben has great confidence in the big animal. The Stamboul yearlings, one out of Dido and the other out of Eva, are being exercised, but they are not to be campaigned.

Dane Bridges will be on deck with John Treat and a Hock Hocking filly, the property of L. J. Rose.

Harry Rose will have for his representatives Daniel M. Murphy and Rosemeade, better known as the Wild Idle Dutchess filly. Dane Sheehan is training these horses, and it is expected that they will set the ball rolling at the Ione meeting.

Peter Dornalech will have Dell and Naicho B. Dell's leg is now all right.

George Vignol will probably be along with What Ho and Sunrise.

Mr. Bexby, of Cerritos, has several trotters at the new Seabright track near Long Beach. He is the owner of the stallion Shadeland Hero by Sattelite, by Robert Bonnor by Rysdyks Hambletonian

There are (47) Sucklings at Rosemeade, (23) by Stamboul, (21) by Alcazar and (3) by Harvester.

The programme for the fair of the Sixth District Agricultural Association is out and will no doubt be advertised in the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Ed Smith is a great admirer of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN. He is one of the best posted horsemen in Southern California. Mr. Smith also owns some good trotting stock.

DAGWORTH.

The Standard.

The following sensible letter was written by J. B. Jackson of Pleasant Prairie, Wis., for the Horseman, and will amply repay perusal:

I have noticed in certain quarters a lively fusilade against the standard adopted by the National Association of Trotting-Horse Breeders. One must infer from the vigorous fulminations of the protestants that the rules of standard rank had laid their stock hors-de-combat. I have failed to see in the logic of the opposition anything except that all horses are good, some are better, and the non-standard animal is the superlative horse.

It is impossible to formulate a set of rules that will be absolutely perfect in all their details, or to establish a standard that is above criticism. That the present rules are imperfect at many points is admitted by the friends of the standard, and there is no doubt but what they will in the near future be revised in the interests of progressive breeding. But in all the controversy of the opposition we have failed to see any improvements suggested, and the only desideratum by them devoutly wished is to annihilate the standard. All criticism of an existing rule that does not suggest a substitute shows shallowness and insincerity in the critics, and if the present standard is to be annulled what new system is to take its place? Is the progress of twenty years' improvement in breeding trotters to be ruthlessly abandoned, and the whole science of the standard to be remanded to darkness and chaos? Fortunately for the trotting-horse interests, the standard is indorsed by the largest breeding establishments in the country, whose proprietors rank among the most astute and intelligent students of the breeding problem. This fact in itself lends plausability to the assumption that if the rules defining what constitutes a trotting-bred horse are not altogether perfect, they are at least so near the truth that the opposition fail to suggest improvement.

The advantages of the standard are seen in the discrimination it makes and the value it gives to lines of breeding that not only perform but also breed on. Destroy this feature of the standard and its value as an educator is gone. Divest it of the element and all opposition ceases. For without this distinction all horses are reduced to an equality and will be valued according to their individuality.

The breeding interest has assumed such magnitude that standard registration becomes imperative to protect the public from fraud and to preserve and give prominence to lines of breeding of intrinsic merit. If it were not for standard registration, to preserve the age, breeding and identity of horses, how many bogus Electioneers, George Wilkes, Nutwood, Lord Russells and Dictators would be advertised for service all over the country? If it accomplished no other good, the standard is worth all it costs in the protection it affords breeders against frauds and impositions. I do not know a single writer against the standard that now owns or even bred a horse that made himself standard by performance, while the patrons of the standard comprise the most successful breeders In fact, the oldest and largest breeding establishments are its warmest friends.

The standard is an educator by defining the characteristics that constitute a trotting-horse. It is based on the merits of performance and transmission of speed. It could be improved in the interest of progressive breeding by restricting standard rank to immediate progeny as well as immediate ancestors. At least if this were enforced in the male line, it would weed out the mountains of rubbish that are now overwhelming the register with standard horses that can neither perform nor produce performers.

A lusus naturæ, a horse out side of the lines of breeding, comes out and makes a 2:30 performance, and not only makes himself standard but also his dam and all the progeny out of her by a standard horse But if this sport should trot in 2:00 it would not effect the standard rank of his ancestors in the second generation and therefore why should his performance carry forward any farther then it reaches back? His performance reaches back only to immediate ancestors, and why should his rank go forward further than immediate progeny? If the standard is founded on the merit of a 2:30 performance or the ability to produce a 2:30 performer, why should it be burdened with a mass of trash that can neither perform nor produce trotters? A volumn of the register every year will soon make it a burden to breeders and an expense not justified by the quality of two-thirds of the animals registered. Nearly every animal registered standard comes into the select circle by inheritance through the illustrious deeds of royal sires or queenly dams and now let these horses that become standard by vicarious heredity prove the potency of their birthright by performance or by breeding on before the progency is admitted to registration. The standard ought to be based on the merit of immediate ancestry, individual performance and for the ability of immediate progeny to perform.

There is nothing grander than success. There is nothing greater than true merit. They silence all argument. They demonstrate truth beyond all cavil or doubt. And the standard is designed to represent the highest principles in the science of breeding, the laws by which the greatest success has been achieved. If each breeder will insist on good individuality and standard will contain the greatest number of points of success of any rules ever formulated to govern the production of trotters. Let the standard survive on the qualities of immediate ancestors, personal merit or the performance of progeny.

ATHLETICS.

Athletic Sports and Other Pastimes.

Edited by Arphippus.

SUMMARY.

Affairs in the athletic world were quiet during the past week. The wrestling tournament at the Olympic Club rooms was the only event of importance that took place. Owing to the rough state of the weather bay fishing on Sunday last was very poor, and many anglers had to return home with empty baskets.

RUNNERS, WALKERS, JUMPERS, ETC.

Sexsmith is practicing hard with the intention of lowering the Pacific Coast record for the pole vault at the games of the California Amateur Athletic Club next month.

William Zehfus, the pedestrian, announces his intention of appearing on the track again this season. He will probably oppose C. M. Yates at the champion meeting of the C. A. A. C. The men are evenly matched, and should finish close together.

The question is, will Coffin and Gafney receive a start from Jarvis at the next out-door meeting?

One of the athletic clubs should hold an in-door meeting at the Mechanics' Pavilion during the coming winter. In the past those in-door tournaments have always been well patronized, and now that there is such a great interest taken in athletics, there is every reason to believe that an evening handicap meeting at the Pavilion would be hailed with delight, not only by the athletes themselves, but by the general public.

It is high time that the O. A. C. was issuing its programme of games for September 9th.

Dave Egan of the C. A. A. C. has declared his intention of giving up "cigarettes" in the near future. He vows that he will train hard for the games next month, and if all goes well he expects to do the "hundred" in less than 10:1½.

Purcell will probably not compete in the Admission Day games, as his business will not allow him to train, and some training is necessary in order to overcome severe handicaps.

Should the track at the new grounds of the O. A. C. be in good order on September 9th, several records will undoubtedly be broken.

The O. A. C. should include a steeplechase, a running hop, step and jump, and an obstruction race on their programme for Admission Day.

The habit of making changes in programmes at athletic meetings should be done away with.

IN THE SURF.

At the quarterly meeting of the Terrace Swimming Club, held last Sunday, the following officers were elected to serve for the ensuing term. President, George Dall; vice-President, Joe Greenbaum; Secretary, William Hunt; Treasurer, George W. Spiller; Captain, John H. Vollmer.

The graceful and daring evolutions of the famous Olympian, George A. Dall, locite much admiration at the Terrace Swimming Baths. This genial athlete is an aquatic wonder, and his imitation of the porpoise is inimitable.

The critics of Monterey are unanimous in their opinion that Misses Birdie Fair and Alice Rutherford are the two most graceful swimmers at that famous resort.

Jack Vollmer, of the Terrace Swimming Club, is an excellent high and long diver. On several occasions Mr. Vollmer has remained under water for more than a minute.

Peter J. Fay, the well-known amateur swimmer, is training at the Shelter Cove Baths, and the chances are that he will accept Pinkham's challenge to swim a one hundred yard match race.

The proprietors of the Harbor View Baths should anchor a raft a couple of hundred yards out from the shore in order to afford long distance swimmers a chance to rest themselves, the tides in that neighborhood being so strong and uncertain that a bather is liable to get exhausted at any moment, and with no raft at hand his chances of escape from drowning would be very small.

The operation of changing the water in the Crystal Swimming Baths, which is done every day, is worth an hour's study. It comes clear and bright from far out in the clean tide from the sea, and is warmed as it enters.

THE WHEELMEN.

Since Elwell married he has been unable to find time to train and in all probability he will never appear on the track again.

Fred Cook has grown exceedingly "fat" of late and says that there is too much trouble attached to reducing. He has also joined the retired band.

Henry Lichtenstein is practicing hard for the O. A. C. games and hopes to be able to win a medal.

A bicycle tournament will be held at the Haight Street Grounds in the fall.

The wheelmen are grumbling because the track at the new training grounds of the O. A. C. will only be six laps to the mile. A bicycle track should be at least a quarter of a mile in circumference. On a small track it is impossible to make fast time, and there is much danger attached to the sharp turns.

H. A. Mathews is one of the best long distance riders in California, and can make it pretty lively for any of the "Boys" up a steep hill.

AT THE OARS.

The Station B Post-Office Crew has resumed practice.

Quite a number of amateur crews were out last Sunday, and several impromptu races took place.

There is some talk of organizing a rowing club at the North Beach. Such a club is needed there, and if organized would no doubt meet with success.

CLUB JOTTINGS.

Cress Unger, sportsman, athlete, musician and general genius, has returned to the place in the Custom House which he filled for many years so acceptably.

To-day a party of athletes leaves for a summer outing, which embraces a lot of champions. Headed by Ed A. Kolb, with Ed. Ryan as adjutant, DeWitt C. Davis as sutler, Prof. George] Miehling of the Olympic Club as cook, and Prof. Joe Acton of the California Athletic Club as cook's helper, the party will make it sultry for anybody who thinks he can down the world in wrestling. Martin's place ten miles from Cazadero, on the headwaters of the Qualala, is the objective point, where deer, trout and bear abound. Prof. Miehling desires to try Samson's feat, killing a bear by turning him inside out with a "tail holt" taken via the throat. The chances are the bear will be Miehling on the Professor before the bout is finished.

Professor Acton is said to be a lovely cook's helper—he can boil potatoes without any oversight. Whether Ed. Kolb will be accompanied by his son or not cannot be learned.

Secretary J. J. Jamison, of the Golden Gate Athletic Club, states that his club has no intention of applying for membership to the California Amateur Athletic Association. The G. G. A. C. is one of the associate clubs of the Pacific Coast Amateur Athletic Association, and at the next out-door handicap meeting of the Olympic Athletic Club a strong team of the Golden Gate Athletes will struggle for supremacy against the teams of the other associate clubs.

The first "member's" out-door meeting of the C. A. A. C. will be held at the new training grounds at Harbor View some time next month. All the events will be handicap, and valuable medals will be awarded the different winners.

The Pacific Athletic Club will apply for admission to the P. C. A. A. A. in the near future. This is encouraging to the association, and its next championship meeting will no doubt be a monster affair.

The following circular has just been issued by the Directors of the G. G. A. C.:

At a meeting of the Board of Directors of the Golden Gate Athletic Club, held June 25, 1889, a committee was appointed for the purpose of improving the annex to the Club, whereby young men (for a reduced initiation fee and dues), would be entitled to the use of the Club apparatus, etc.—in fact, have all the privileges of regular members, except that of witnessing the monthly contests.

At the regular meeting on July 9th the committee presented the following report, which was unanimously adopted:

The development of man's physical powers has always been his study, in ancient as well as in modern times. In truth, the higher man's civilization the more earnest his search for the best means of developing his powers to the highest point of perfection in endurance and strength. In our colleges of learning the cultivation of the physical powers is an indispensable as that of the mental powers. Exercise is deemed as essential to the mind as study.

Athletic clubs abound all over the land, where men, young and old, amateur and professional, may enjoy the exercise and training the body is ambitious for. Some run, some ride, some wrestle, but the hobby of the times seems to run to boxing—and numerous clubs are organized to encourage and protect this sport, and such prominence is given to it that the impression sometimes erroneously goes out that it is the sole purpose of a club's existence.

We, however, desire to say to the world that while we keep abreast of the times in boxing matters, we do not lose sight of the necessity of general physical exercise and development. Among our young men especially do we seek to encourage the love of exercise. Our club is open, our appliances and instructors at hand, and our ambitious amateurs have abundant opportunity for attaining the highest proficiency in all athletic sports. That they have availed themselves of these opportunities is evidenced by their success in the recent tournament.

To encourage the development of amateur talent, we have an annex to the Golden Gate Club for symmetrically and healthfully developing the physical powers of young men. The admission to such annex is $1.50 Initiation Fee, and the dues are $1.00 per month, which entitles the members to all the advantages and privileges of the club, except that of witnessing exhibitions not held under their own auspices.

OLYMPIC WRESTLING TOURNAMENT.

On Thursday evening last at the Olympic Club an amateur wrestling tournament in catch-as-catch-can style was begun. The referee was Mr. W. B. Short, O. C. Judges, Major J. W. Tompkins, Reliance Club, and J. B. Tibbatts, O. C. Timers, James Jeris and S. V. Casaby. The first pair, in feather weights, were Mr. Eugene S. Van Court, O. A C., 112 pounds, and F. A. Grimm, O. A. C., 125 pounds. The men went to work at 8:22, both being in fair condition, Short rather the better. Grimm was the stronger, and Short the quicker and most experienced. Most of the work was done by Short, he being on top all the time. After ten minutes Van Court took the bout with a neck lock and a roll. If Grimm had taken more chances he would have done better. The second pair in feather weights were C. E. Wilson, O. A. C., Juvenile, 125 pounds, and R. C. Jones, O. A. C., 125 pounds. Both stripped well, and went to work in lively fashion, Wilson constantly inquiring, "How's that?" whenever in tumbling about his opponent's shoulders were brought within six inches of the mat. The men wrestled twenty minutes without fall, and, according to rule, the wrestlers were given three minutes' rest. Resuming after a rubdown, they went to work vigorously, but were so evenly matched that neither could secure an advantage. After ten minutes, neither having gained a fall, the rule stopped them, but as neither had done decisive work, judgment was suspended and the men ordered to remain in readiness to resume.

While the light weights were getting ready Vice-President Hammond stated that the tournament was for the championship of the West at the various weights, and the judges consequently desired to give each contestant the fullest opportunity to display his skill. About the out-door exercising ground scheme Mr. Hammond said that after appointing a committee to select ground the great expense rather deterred the directors. There was a feeling of lukewarmness on the part of certain members who cared for nothing but in-door life. However, a block of land had been leased and arrangements made to expend at least two thousand dollars in erecting a house, track, etc. The ground was now being fenced and cleared. The committee expected to receive a fair amount from the market-street Cable Company. The ground selected was block 665, bounded by 8th and 9th avenues and H street and is two or three blocks from the Haight street line.

The first pair of light weights were J. F. O'Conner G. G. A. C., 135½ lbs., and L. Greenbaum O. A. C., 128 lbs. Both were on the defensive from the handshake. In eight minutes after O'Conner had been on top most of the time, Greenbaum got on top and soon put a hammer lock on O'Conner and won the fall. Second drawing light weights were W. P. Henry O. A. C., 130 lbs., and R. Y. Cole O. A. C., 139 lbs. Both were keen, but Cole was too clever, and won the fall with a half Nelson and Crotch lock in fifty seconds.

Messrs. Jones and Wilson, of the feather weights, were then brought on to finish their unsettled bout. They were as lively as at first, but too evenly matched to do more than give a pretty exhibition of their style. The time was wrestled out and decision suspended.

The middle-weights, E. A. Kolb O. A. C., 152 lbs, and P. P. Bernhard O. A. C., 136 lbs., then took the carpet, Kolb immediately going to the mat, and Bernhard putting in a good deal of ineffective work on him. Kolb soon showed superior skill, however, and in 9 minutes and 19 seconds rolled his muscular opponent flat upon his shoulders and won the bout.

Fred F. Caire O. A. G. 163½ lbs. and R. Y. Cole 139¾ lbs. went into their bout as though they enjoyed it. Cole showed more knowledge of the game and although only a juvenile, he won the bout in 1 minute and 33 seconds, with an arm roll.

Jones and Wilson again were called out and wrestled ten minutes and were then given three minutes rest when they pitched in again. Wilson immediately protesting that Jones had put something improper on his hair. The referee examined the head but found that it had merely been rubbed with alcohol in which a little oil of sassafras had been dissolved, Judge Tibbatts remarking "sassafras is very lucky, a regular Mascot." Another ten minutes and a rest, and then on resuming, in 5 minutes and 5 seconds. Mr. Jones won a fair fall and the bout.

Messrs. R. Y. Cole, O. A. C., 139¾ pounds, and P. P, Bernhard, O. A. C., 133¼, then took the floor as light weights both being entered also in the middle weight class. Both were good, Cole seeming the better, but Bernhard took the fall in five minutes, 5½ seconds.

The two light weights Greenbaum and Jones then took the mat, Greenbaum winning in 2 m, 24 sec.

The bout closed the evenings sport, which was resumed last evening too late for our present issue.

Horse.

BY GRIM.

Did you ever experience the sensation of lying in bed with imperative orders from the doctor that you must not move out of it? Well, that has been my experience for the better half of a week since last the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN appeared, and, consequently, the pencil has not performed its usual amount of work this week. While weary of waiting to get up, and almost worn out from the effects of idleness, the idea occurred to write, and thus relieve the monotony. But what about?—that was the question. It is horse from one week's end to another, and it might just as well be horse now.

Webster gives the definition of horse as "a hoofed quadruped used for draught or the saddle." But that is not what I am after now, it is the etymon of the word I desire to get at. And how the time did pass, hunting up old books, and reading excerpts from old authors that lived so many years ago, that in the present day they are almost forgotten, and what a fund of information can be gained from these old writers. They had no Maud S., nor yet a Tenbroeck by which to guage of the speed of a horse, and yet in the very earliest days we find the primitive meaning of "horse" to be "the rapid animal." One would naturally suppose that horse back riding had been known from time immemorial, but such is not the case, for the earliest records fail to show that the Greeks knew anything of equestrianism, in the year 650 B. C. We find further on that riding and cavalry service was known during the Grecian Supremacy, probably about the year 450 B. C. In the first days of the Roman Republic, great attention was paid to the cavalry, and it was the most important branch of the service. The ancient Britons used horses for their war chariots, when assailed by the Romans, but at that day, they knew nothing whatever of the great uses to which their equines might be put for war purposes. As ages advanced the horses became better known, and we find that Athelstan had an enactment passed to prevent the exportation of horses, and imported running horses from Germany, and also high class horses from Spain, to improve the nation's breed. From the days of King Edward III, of England, the thoroughbred began to have a standing, and from the great care taken in breeding, racing was established, to determine which cross was the best to produce speed.

But here we are meandering away from the primitive word which we started out to find, and for a beginning we will have to go to the Aryan languages in which it is extremely interesting to note that the word is nearly similar in all of them. Taking the first, the Sanscrit, the word used is Acva; in the Zend, Acpa answers to the same, while in the Persian it is Asp; in Latin it is Equus; the Greeks called the noble animal Hippos, derived from a primitive form which was only preserved by the Æolians; on appealing to the Gælic, there is to be found the old fashioned Epos; the Goths had a fitting word in Aihvus, and in the old High German the word in common use was Ehu.

All the other nations which are of preclassical date, or even classical for that matter, have had no proper word of their own, but in nearly every instance a word has been borrowed from the Aryan forms. Of the more modern nations, the following words are used: German, pferd; Holland, paard; French, cheval; Spanish, caballo; Russian, loschad; Turkish, sukh; Arabic, hozan; Danish, hest.

In England, shortly before the Norman conquest, a horse was rated at being worth thirty shillings, while a mare was supposed to be worth twenty shillings. It must be born in mind, however, that money was worth fifteen times more than it is at present. The first race course of which there is any mention made in old English works, was laid out on the site of the present Smithfield market in London. Fitz Steven, who lived at that period, gives the following account of how the contests were conducted:

"When a race is to be run by horses which in their kind are strong and fleet, a shout is raised, and common horses are ordered to withdraw from out the way. Two jockeys then, or sometimes three, as the match may be made, prepare themselves for the contest, such as are used to ride, and know how to manage their horses with judgment, the grand point being to prevent a competitor from getting before them. The horses, on their part, are not without emulation. They tremble and are impatient and continually in motion. At last, the signal once given, they hurry along with unremitting velocity; the jockeys, inspired with the thoughts of applause and the hopes of victory, clapping spurs to their willing steeds, brandishing their whips and cheering them with their cries." It would not seem that jockeying had changed much in the last 600 years, except that some of the riders try to see how many horses can reach the wire before they do.

But here is the doctor to examine the tongue and feel the pulse, and "horse" must be dropped for the time being.

Memoirs of Lexington.

These proposals were never accepted, and the discussion led to the Great State Stakes, which we will proceed to give, as given by the New Orleans Picayune:

"Rarely has a lovelier spring day opened on more brilliant hopes and expectations than that which yesterday dawned upon the thousands who, to a greater or less degree, were rushing forward to the great event of the day with the most pleasureable expectations. The race! the great struggle of States for superiority in that contest which had for months enlisted so much feeling, so much State pride, so much individual competition, had been the ruling idea in all circles, and scarcely any other topic had been discussed or thought of. Myriads of strangers, as the wonderful day approached, had thronged our city, and almost nothing else was talked of but the probable or possible result of this great sporting affair. Opinions of every kind and shade were freely expressed. Each one of the gallant States that had so chivalrously come into the arrangement had its hosts of representatives on the ground, and each indulged in earnest and eloquent eulogies upon his favorite. Banters were offered, bets were made, speculations were indulged in, predictions were ventured, hopes and fears were expressed, and the town topic that lasted up to the very moment when the tap of the drum gave signal for the start. Even then the ladies caught the infectious excitement, and made up their pretty purses. The fair Mosellans were strong on Highlander, and the Kentucky belles wondered how any reasonable person could doubt that Lexington would assuredly win. Mississippi relied confidently on Lecomte, without making much ado; while Louisiana deported herself modestly, and hoped her Arrow would go straight to the mark. The contest had been worth provoking, had it been alone for the pleasure arising from the sparkling of so many joyous laughs as sprung from its discussion.

"The day was fair, bright, clear and mild; the sky was all blue, the air all balm, the earth all beautiful. A lovlier day was never born of spring bitter to be the first of spring's fairest months. The warmest expectations that could have been formed of what the coming 'day would bring forth,' must have been more than doubled by the first glimpse at the morn that broke upon their waking vision. It was a day formed by the hand of Nature expressly for pleasure, and there seemed no room for so much as the possibility of disappointment. From an early hour all the roads, avenues and means of approach, by every possible kind of conveyance, were put in requisition. The city was comparatively deserted. Business seemed (we, who were not among the couldn't-get-aways, were told) to be suspended; everybody who was anybody, or wanted to be deemed anybody, had gone to the race. Dinner hours were postponed, engagements were forgotten, and should not at all wonder if bank notifications, in some instances, slipped some memories. The race for everybody, and everybody for the race."

The variety of the modes adopted, by which to reach the course, was a source of no little amusement to the curious lookers-on. The luxurious private carriage, taking its leisure and rolling on with confident security of being in time without hurrying, and as it turned out for a dashing pair of bloods, regarding its rivals with a bland, festina lente kind of compassion; the coach, the cab, the cart, the carriage of every sort, with one horse or four, and some even with the humble animal that the prophet Balaam was not ashamed to ride, made up a variety that was, in its way, far from unexciting. And then the plodders on foot, or en cheval (whose name is legion), and the many passengers on cars (whose names were many legions) all helped to swell the great stream of life, whose ocean was the race course. Such a moving panorama has never before been exhibited in these parts.

On entering the enclosure we were struck with the excellence of the arrangements that had been made by the proprietor for admission of the proper persons at the proper places. There was no unnecessary jostling or crowding to the inconvenience of those who came in good time, and who had provided themselves with the means of ingress, announced as necessary by the management. The next thing we saw that gratified us especially was the evident disposition of the occupants of all parts of the course appropriated to spectators to regard the regulations promulgated by the proprietor. And this remark will fairly apply to the entire day.

The liberal attendance of ladies was a delightful feature of the day. There were brilliant representatives of the beauty and taste of our fair State and many of her sister States. There were besides Louisiana belles and beauties, belles and beauties from Alabama, Mississippi and Kentucky, who took a most praiseworthy interest in the incidents of the occasion. The presence of ladies has always a benign influence, but we have never seen it more pleasantly executed than in this instance.

There were a great many of our most distinguished citizens from all parts of the Southern country present, including governors, judges, mayors and other officials, not to name all of whom, if any, would seem invidious, and we cannot remember half of them. Ex-President Fillmore and ex-Secretaries Kennedy and Conrad attracted and received a great deal of attention, and were politely invited by the judges of the race to view it from the judges' stand. They seemed to take much interest in the sport, and in the intervals, in the society of the distinguished company assembled in the members' and ladies' stand.

There must have been fully twenty thousand persons within the enclosure of the Metairie course upon this great and interesting occasion. Yet we never have seen more perfect order preserved among a large body of men than that which prevailed throughout the day. We were not cognizant of a single dereliction of the duty that one man owes to another, in any single respect; no drunkeness, no disputes, no quarrels, no unseemly or boisterous remarks. The incidents and result of the race we subjoin. But in closing our necessarily hasty and cursory general remarks, we cannot forbear noting the fact that Old Kentucky had, and fully availed herself of, a glorious opportunity of manifesting her characteristic State pride upon this occasion. It was inspiring to see the bright eyes of her daughters sparkling with joy, and to hear their ringing laughs and exultant shouts, as the champion of their State was going on "conquering and to conquer," and adding another to the already many noble trophies that have been gallantly won by Old Kentuck.

And now to incidents of the race:

"The judges' stand was occupied by ex President Fillmore and several other distinguished strangers, besides the judges of the race. The judges selected by the subscribers of the stake were as follows: Colonel Wade Hampton was the judge chosen to represent Alabama; Col. J. J. Hughes for Louisiana; Mr. Robert Evans for Kentucky; Judge Pickney Smith for Mississippi, and Judge J. G. Cocks, the President of the Metairie Jockey Club, presiding. The betting for several days previous to the race and yesterday morning, in the city, was brisk and heavy, Highlander being generally the first favorite and Lexington the second favorite. The field was frequently backed against Highlander at odds of two to one. On arriving at the course the crowd for a time appeared to feel impatient, fearing that they could not have a chance to lay out their money. Pocket books flew open, and for an hour the betting was very lively, but not much changed from what it has been. We heard many bets made as follows: Even between Highlander and Lexington; $50 to $100 that Highlander would take the first heat. There was of course a variety of bets concerning many minor points and the particular placing of the horses. The course was very heavy from the previous rain, and the strong wind which prevailed had so hardened the mud that it was very stiff and unyielding, clinging to the hoof with great tenacity."

First Heat—The horses came promptly up to the stand, and moved off without difficulty, well together, and passed around the first turn in the following order: Lexington leading, Arrow second, Lecomte third, with Highlander trailing. In this position the first mile was run, all being within a fair distance of each other. On entering the second mile Lecomte went up and lapped Lexington for a short distance, but they all soon resumed their original positions for the remainder of the second mile and the whole of the third mile, at about the same rate of speed. On making the first turn of the fourth mile Arrow began to feel the effects of the heavy mud and slackened his speed, Highlander passing him, taking the third position and gradually making up the gap between himself and his two competitors. Lecomte coming home, pushed for the lead; but Lexington held his course steadily and won the heat under a strong pull by about three lengths, in 8:08¾, distancing Arrow. The Kentuckians, who are a famous people for shouting, gave a loud cheer for their favorite and the betting people began to make new arrangements.

"Second Heat—After much discussing on minor points the betting appeared to settle down to about two to one on Lexington against the field, Lecomte generally being considered as the chief reliance of the fielders. Highlander's friends were in bad spirits, but some of them contended that he had not yet exerted himself, that he ran nearly all the first heat far from the pole, and they, therefore, took up the odds offered against him. On starting for the second heat Highlander took the lead on the first turn, with Lexington second, but all well together. On the backstretch Lecomte made a brush and took the lead of the party, entering the second mile in advance, and Lexington second. In this position they ran the mile. At the entrance of the third mile Highlander made his first and only brush; he went up to Lexington and nearly passed him for a short distance, but Lexington soon shook him off round the turn, Lecomte leading throughout the mile by nearly eight lengths. On the first quarter of the fourth mile Highlander began to exhibit distress, and gave up his stride near the same spot and in the same manner as Arrow had done in the first heat. Lexington, on the back stretch, now went to work in earnest, gradually closing up the gap on Lecomte, both striving hard for the supremacy and the pace increasing. On the third quarter Lexington locked Lecomte, and they swung into the homestretch side by side, the excitement running high amongst the anxious thousands and cheers rending the air. Down they came home, rushing like a torrent, each at the top of his speed, as if life depended upon every jump, but the speed of Lexington was superior and he shot past the judges, amidst cheers of the ladies and deafening shouts of the men, in 8:04, the last mile being run in quicker time than any other in the race.

Our readers who were not present at the race would sadly misjudge the merits of this great contest, did they only make up their opinion of the severity of the struggle by glancing at the time, which we acknowledge would appear slow if the track had been in good condition. Under all the circumstances of the case, the race was an excellent one; its varying chances, its uncertain termination up to the last moment, the severity of the contest, the amount of money at stake, and the immense number of persons in attendance, will render it a brilliant event in the racing annals of this country.

"One of the most pleasant incidents connected with the recent great State Stake, is the fact that although immense sums of money were won and lost, still the losers not only did not murmur, but took the defeat of their favorite horse with great manliness and good humor. It is a very old adage that when two men ride the same horse one man must ride behind. We are also pleased to observe that the winning party have borne themselves with great modesty, avoiding any attempt at exultation, as it would certainly be in bad taste to win a man's money and laugh at him afterwards. A portion of the winners on Saturday dropped on the race of Sunday a fraction of their quickly acquired gains, and thereby relieved their wallets with any plethora which good luck or judgment might have brought them. During the present and next racing week, those gentlemen who at the present moment were a "little behind the lighthouse" in their financial arrangement in relation to betting, will have many good opportunities to recuperate and "break even." Heavy betting is usually confined to a class of persons who can well afford to lose and laugh, for he who would grieve over losses should never tempt fortune for the gratification of winning."

"Another very gratifying incident, in respect to the late sporting event, was the extreme good order which prevailed, the freedom from drunkenness, dispute or brawls, and the happy exemption from all accidents. Many persons have always associated the race course in their minds with something horribly demoralizing. That, like the theatre, or any other amusement, it may be made so, when badly managed by improper persons, and not countenanced by the presence of the better class of both ladies and gentlemen, we admit; but who that attended the great race on Saturday last ever saw 20,000 people assembled on any occasion or for any purpose, where greater decorum of language, conduct and good feeling prevailed? It is sometimes apparently the delight of persons at a distance, and unacquainted with our habits, to decry the good name of our city, but on this occasion we take pleasure in saying that the many distinguished visitors from all parts of the country who were witnesses and participants in our manly and exciting sports, will bear willing testimony to the high tone of gentlemanly manner and conduct which prevailed, no less than to the agreeable vivacity and loveliness there assembled. The whole affair has gratified the reasonable expectations of its projectors and supporters, has brought many visitors to our city, been of benefit to the business of our people, cemented old friendships as well as formed new acquaintances, made our city more gay and delightfully attractive, and afforded to all classes an honorable, manly and exhilarating sport."

Horses at New Orleans dated their ages from the 1st of May, consequently Lecomte and Lexington were four, but ran as three-year-olds.

The following description of the race is taken from the New Orleans Picayune:

"The fashion of this world passeth away," saith the good book, and we have a new illustration of it furnished us by the events of yesterday's race on Metairie Course. Fashion's 7:32½ and 7:45 on Long Island in 1842, and George Martin's 7:33 and 7:42 here in 1833—the two best races that have ever been run—have been signally beaten by the winner of the day. Where is Eclipse now? exclaimed Young America when Fashion beat Boston in five seconds less time than was made by the conqueror of Henry. Where is Fashion now? we, in our turn demand, as we see her beaten in six seconds and a half less time than her own. Truly, we live in a progressive age, and what we are coming to who can tell?

"During the week past the question has been repeatedly asked if any of the contestants in the late State Stake race would run again during the present season. A feverish excitement pervaded the community in view of such a possible event, and the conviction was freely expressed that if it were to come off Lexington would be likely to have his well won laurels cropped, if not lose them entirely. A contest between Lexington and Lecomte was freely talked of as a thing that must be, and when, on Friday evening, it was announced on the course that an arrangement to that effect had been made, and that the next day would see its consummation, the news spread electrically, and we found ourselves again in the midst of an excitement, of course.

"Everything was in favor of the prospect of sport. The track was in tip-top order, confessedly. Everything seemed to favor the occasion. From an early hour to a late one all the roads were filled by travelers, availing themselves of every kind and description of locomotion. Everything, from a dray to a four-in-hand, was in requisition, and they who were "too late for the wagon" walked. Fully ten thousand people must have been present in the stands and in the field. The sight was truly animating. The ladies, as upon the former great occasion, made a great show upon the stands appropriated to them by the gallantry of the Club, and added no little to the day. Betting, which was by no means slow in any part of the course, ran amusingly high in this department of it, and we saw many anti Lecomte bets most cheerfully and smilingly paid by laughing losers, while many musical reminders that Lexington had lost suggested to as many overtaken gentlemen that place aux dames should be their motto in settling their books. We grieve to say that Lexington, by the bye, proved to be the favorite, to a great extent, among the ladies, who, we will do them the credit to say, paid up with most commendable promptness, so far as they could do so on the field. Of the gloves and handkerchiefs, and other petty trifles, which they wagered, we, of course, cannot speak with equal confidence. The race, of which we give below a detailed account, was indeed an exciting one. Since the races we have alluded to as hitherto among the greatest that have been run, there has been nothing like it; and in all its incidents, from the start to the victory, it will always be remembered as preeminently the greatest four-mile race on record.

"The betting was extremely heavy; still, it was less than on the last week's race, as there were not so many strangers in town, and money had not been sent here from abroad to be invested on the side of any favorite. Before leaving the city, Lexington was the favorite at even money against the field, but a few minutes before the race we witnessed some transactions in which Lexington was backed at 100 to 60 against the field or 100 to 80 against Lecomte. Much money was risked on time, but the lowest time that we could hear of being marked was 7:32.

"So far as we could judge, the horses all appeared to be in excellent condition and "eager for the fray," as they moved to and fro before stands, to the admiration of the anxious thousands. The drum taps and the horses dash off with a rush for the first heat, and on passing the first turn Lecomte led, Lexington being second and Reube trailing behind, but at as fast a gait, and as bold a stride as he could well accomplish. Their positions did not vary for nearly three miles, although the pace increased; the space between the horses at times increasing and diminishing, Lexington several times making a brush to take the lead, but Lecomte increasing his speed to prevent it. On entering the fourth mile, and on the back stretch of it, Lexington partially closed up the gap that Lecomte had opened on him, and attempted to outfoot him. The attempt was immense, and elicited the loudest encomiums of Lexington's friends and backers; but it was ineffectual. The spur was freely used to induce him to do what his friends claimed for him, that he was the fastest horse in the world at a brush; but Lecomte baffled all his efforts, kept the lead and won the heat amid deafening shouts by six lengths, in much the quickest time ever made in the world—7:26!

"If the result of the heat induced great shouting, the announcement of the time produced still more clamorous demonstrations of delight. All knew that the heat was very fast, but each one of the hundred persons who held watches could scarcely believe their own time, until the judges announced it officially.

"During the great excitement which was concentrated on the two contending horses, Reube had almost been lost sight of, but came home at a high rate of speed, making the best heat by far that he ever made in his life, although, as the red flag descended, he barely escaped being caught behind.

"Lexington, soon after the heat, appeared much dtstressed as he had evidently been hard driven nearly the whole way; but he recovered well during the recess; Reube, also, to appearances after the heat, showed evident symptoms that he had been running a harder race than he liked. Lecomte, who to all appearance had run much more at his ease, and with less effort than his competitors, not having been spurred during the heat was but little distressed considering the great time and heat of the day.

"The betting was changed about immediately, not less from the result of the previous heat than from the great apparent exertion that Lexington had made while running, and the aspect and condition of the horses after the heat. Reube's chances were considered hopeless with two such competitors against him. Most of the bets now made were for the purpose of hedging, and Lecomte was the favorite at $100 to $40 against the field. Each horse came up for the second heat with crest erect, and with a defiant demeanor cast proud glances from fierce eyes, determined apparently to win or die. Lexington this time led the way from the score for nearly two miles by about two lengths, when on coming down the stretch and passing the stands to enter the third mile, Lecomte, who had been bottled up, commenced his great brush, overhauled Lexington and passed him. Both now did their best, and the third mile was a constant strife throughout for the lead, and the quickest in the race, being run in 1:45, but Lecomte, although so hard pushed, never wavered, but ran evenly and steadily along, about two lengths ahead. On the first turn of the fourth mile Lexington, who at that point was nearly up to his rival, for a moment gave back and lost his stride, but he at once recovered it and pushed on with vigor, but with evidently great effort. All was of no use, for Lecomte came home a winner by four lengths in the astonishing time of 7:38¾, distancing Reube.

"The long pent-up feelings of the nearly frenzied thousands, who for some time had been almost breathless, now found vent, and all, losers as well as winners, ladies as well as gentlemen, shouted and applauded the magnificent contest, the glorious result and the gallant winner. We yesterday wrote and published concerning the race: 'We look today for a race, which for time and a close contest, can be matched against any ever run.' That prediction has been more than fulfilled, the race not only matching but far exceeding any of the fleetest of them in regard to time.

"For more than twenty years the race of Eclipse and Henry, over the Union Course, Long Island, on May 27, 1823, was the quickest on the record. The shortest heat in that race was 7:37. In Fashion's race with Boston, over the Union Course, Long Island, May 10, 1842, the time was 7:32½, 7:45. George Martin's first race was run in this city on the 29th of March, 1843, and time was 7:33, 7:43. It is a remarkable fact, as Lecomte is by Boston, out of Reel, that his sire should have run in the quickest race of Fashion, and his dam, Reel, should on December 11, 1841, have won a race in this city, the time of which was 7:40, 7:43.

"The subject is fruitful of speculation in regard to time and blood, that we must rein in our pen to suit our space, well satisfied that we have witnessed the best race, in all respects, that was ever run; and that Lecomte stands proudly before the world as the best race horse ever produced on the turf."

Racing at Spokane Falls.

The July meeting of the Washington and Idaho Fair Association was very successful. Racing was held on the 3rd, 4th and 5th of July. The track was in very good order, and the weather beautiful. On the 3rd the first race, Trotting, 2:35 class, was won cleverly by Little Frank in straight heats, Joe Kinney second, James C. third. The best heat was 2:35, just keeping the winner in the class. The two-year-old trot mile heats two in three was readily accounted for by Lemont Jr., who trotted his second heat in 2.45 without a break. The five furlong dash was a very pretty race, Kitty Van winning, Yellow Rose second, Pat Curran third. Time, 1:03¼. The quarter-mile sprint just suited McCullock, who got off in front and stayed there, Weasel finishing second, and White Cloud third. Time, 24 seconds.

On the Fourth a tremedous crowd turned out; the first race, half mile heats, three in five, trotting, was won by Lucy, Foxy second, Sancho third. The time of the best heat 1:32¼ was not good. The trotting 2:40 class was won in straight heats by James C., Daisy Warner second, Billy R. third, best heat 2:40. Billy R. dropped dead on the track after the last heat from over exertion. Coloma won the mile in running clever style after a pretty set-to with J. M. R, who finished a close second, Bingo third, time 1:47½. The half mile and repeat was accounted for by Smooth—Wire in 49 and 50 seconds, Laura D. second, Daisy R. third. The six furlong dash resulted in a close race, Fandango just beating Kitty Van out in good time 1:17½, Narrow Gauge third.

On the Fifth there was again a large attendance, and the pool-box was extensively patronized, the weather and track both being good. The trotting Free for all, was won by Antelope, Edwin C. second, Bishop Hero third. Time, 2:23½, 2:29, 2:28, 2:26.

The mile handicap running fell to Kitty Van, Bingo second, Laura D. third. Time, 1:46. The three furlong scurry was landed by Weasel, White Cloud second, McCulloch third. Sugar-in-the-Barrel brought no grist to the mill, being left at the post.

The meeting wound up on the 6th of July in good shape before a large and influential gathering of spectators. An unfortunate accident in the last race (and several suspicious races) marred the day's sport. Three of the horses crowded together half way down the stretch, and Yandell, who was riding Bingo, was fatally injured, his horse falling on him. Fortune and Barger, who rode the other two in the melee, were arrested, but have since been acquitted.

The first race was half-mile heats, 3 in 5, pacing, with three starters. Billy E. won the first and fourth heats, and Clatawa the second and third. The judges, not having much faith in W. J. McIvers, and thinking he was not out to win, took him out of the sulky and put L Lindsay up instead. The change was very beneficial, for Clatawa won the fifth heat and race. Time, 1:10; 1:13; 1:09½; 1:10; 1:11¼.

The five furlong dash was productive of a foul, and the judges decided to run the race over. The second attempt resulted in a dead heat between Bingo and Laura D., who divided first and second money. The seven furlongs was procuctive of a close race until well into the straight, where Coloma crowded in between Fandango and Bingo, and in the crush Bingo was knocked off his legs. M. R., with a clear course, sailed in in front of Coloma and Fandango.

The Check Rein.

Written for the Breeder and Sportsman.

This is a theme which has come in for homilies long and short for fifty years. Many men with knowledge upon the subject have placed their views upon record. Many other men without knowledge and without experience have seen fit to force their views upon an uninterested and long-suffering public. A great many amusing things—sometimes a trifle disgusting, as well—have been written by some well-meaning man as he sat "by himself, all alone, all alone," and endeavored to enlighten the world of horsemen on the uses and abuses of the check. The most dense and ignorant of all these revilers of something they know nothing about are the men who periodically attack the "overdraw" check without having owned a good horse in their lives, probably, and knowing nothing of the merits of the "overdraw" check, they stigmatize it as a cruel, inhuman and devilish invention brought into use for the express purpose of torturing good horses. They delight to have a picture appear in the newspaper column depicting a horse with his head pulled up until his nose points directly at the planet Venus. Just below this caricature is usually pictured a man drawing a heavy load by an improvised harness. He has a string through his mouth, and his head is pulled up until he gazes fixedly at the sun. The expression on the man's face is sad and pitiful in the extreme. These two cuts form the nucleus round which a harrowing tale of equine woe is entwined.

I saw an article some time since in a leading San Francisco daily, in which these electrotypes did duty, and some gentleman from the East, who was connected with some Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, placed his ignorance prominently before the people by an interview with a reporter. He was either grievously imposed upon by some one, or he deserved a medal. It never struck that man or others of his ilk, that horsemen never adopt the methods he advocates. He never appears to comprehend that the men who raise, train and trot horses know more than he does about their necessities and the general good and well being of the horses they have in charge.

Before saying anything upon the different devices for checking horses, I have to state, as a fundamental principle underlying all things, that the use is one thing; the abuse another. Almost anything, no matter how good, can be carried to excess, and there are always a few men in the world who are ultra in everything. Should these men own horses, and like the overdraw check, they would possibly make "star-gazers" of them all. There is a happy mean to be adopted in this thing. Some horses do better with one check than with another. Some horses drive and speed equally well with any kind. I have had horses that could be driven faster and steadier with an overdraw than with any other style of check. An overdraw is the only kind of a check to drive a nervous, easily frightened horse with! An overdraw is the only thing to drive a horse with that is liable to run away! An overdraw is the only safe check to drive a kicker with! An overdraw is the only safe check to drive a high-lifed colt with! An overdraw is the only safe check to drive a horse with that curves his neck, drops his jaw against his breast and then runs away! An overdraw is the only check generally speaking, to drive a trotter with!! A side check, if a trifle too short, pulls down on the browband of a bridle, and directly against a horse's ears in a painful manner. The principal reason, in my mind, why all trainers and drivers of fast horses use the overdraw, is because the "top check" in connection with the little upper jaw bit, works separately from the main bridle bit. This enables a driver to convey his desires to the horse with more accuracy and nicety than he could if the main bit was pulled by a side check rein. Again, the overdraw holds a horse steadier, and he can not, by suddenly flexing his head and neck, leave the lines loose in the driver's hands. This latter movement would not matter so much in road horses, but it is a matter of considerable moment when a horse is trotting a race.

Let every man comprehend that there is good in all styles of checks, and bad in all if they be used without understanding. On the majority of fairly stylish road horses a side check, for a journey of from thirty to fifty miles during the day, would be preferable. An overdraw can be let out, however, so it would answer the same purpose. A side check gives a horse more freedom than an overdraw, unless the horse is very stylish and upheaded; in that case it would make no difference. For short drives interspersed with brushes on the road, the overdraw is preferable, while for track work it fills a void long felt, as nothing else could do, and as nothing else ever will do, all assertions to the contrary notwithstanding.

For a puller the side check and overdraw combined is a great contrivance. This is effected by using a four-ring bit, viz., a regular bor or snaffle bit with two small sliding rings upon the mouthpiece, inside the regular bit rings. Buckle the overdraw to the small rings, and pass the overdraw straps through the loops in the headpiece; then buckle loops to the ends of the overdraw, letting them come about the same place the loops on a throatlatch would ordinarily come. Pass the side check through these loops and buckle it to the large rings. This is a self-steadying apparatus, and, if I remember correctly, was got up for the trotting mare Lady Wilkes. For horses that "lay down" on a check when going fast, a good check can be made as follows: Take an ordinary overdraw with a nosepiece on it; unbuckle the little bit, and take it off. Take a strap, say three-eights of an inch wide, that is the proper length, and sew a small ring in each end. Place the strap under the horse's chin, and pass the ends up (underneath the side pieces of the bridle) and toward the fore part of the horse's face; then buckle the ends of your overdraw into the small rings. You then have a check that performs its duty by pulling under the chin. This will not work unless the overdraw has a nose-piece in front, as it will keep sliding. It is a very steadying and satisfactory check on some horses, especially those who fight an upper jaw bit continually. The best upper jaw bit I have seen is called the "Maxwell covered bit." A bit that turns up past the corners of the mouth is preferable to one shaped like an ordinary snaffle bit. I have lived long enough to find out that some fast horses cannot be driven as fast or as steadily with an overcheck as with a side check. There is no doubt that the overdraw is many times of considerable annoyance and is rendered painful to the horse family. This is seldom seen, however, on a track or road horse. I have some times seen carriage teams in San Francisco that I thought more ruefully treated.

These teams were hitched to private vehicles. The horses would probably weigh 1200 or 1250 each, and were not naturally any too stylish. These rigs were owned by people who employ a coachman and gardener in one. This is a combination, as John Splan says in "Life with the Trotters" that don't work well in double harness. This groom hitches up, pulls the horses heads up to the top notch, folds his big-buttoned coat about him and drives Madame down town. He sits as rigidly on the box as does one of Dr. Cogswell's fountains on its pedestal. He does this because the people he works for say it is decidedly English, and is the "correct fad." He may be Irish but he has to do this nevertheless. Such is the irony of Fate! It is this picture that these good Samaritans see that cause these occasional drives at the vileness of the overdraw check. Every man should learn that the stupidity of an alleged groom does not prove that the overdraw is "an invention of the devil," as I once was told by a benevolent old gentleman. As this same old gentleman would shine more prominently while passing the contribution box at moring service than in attempting to render his views upon check reins. I did not reply. Harvey W. Peck.

Guenoc Coaching Party.

What a world of pleasant memories does the heading of this letter recall to the writer. Last week it was our fortune to be one of ten who comprised, I think, the first coaching party that ever "did" the beautiful county Lake. With several friends, on a visit to Mr. and Mrs. E. S. Fowler, at the La Gatina Farms (near the Guenoc Stock Farm), we were invited by Dr. C. W. Aby to accompany him to Lower Lake and Seigler Springs. Mr. and Mrs. Fowler were our chaperones. We started from the Guenoc Farm at 7 A. M., and did the 24 miles to Lower Lake in 3 hours. We were cordially received at the Clear Lake Hotel by Mr. Geo. W. Wood, and after a splendid lunch which was accompanied by sweet strains of music from a violin and guitar, placed under the window of the dining-room. At three o'clock our journey to the far-famed Seigler Springs was resumed. As we swung out of the court yard of the hotel, the grand cross matched team of bays and grays that blended so nicely with the English gold mounted harness and wood colored coach, the pride of Guenoc Stock Farm, and Dr. Aby's pets, our hearts were light and merry as the wind. The ride to Seigler was through one of the most enchantingly beautiful spots, as the narrow road ran along the bank of Seigler Creek, with bright sparkling water dancing merrily under the hanging boughs of willow and wild maple, with the sweet fragrance of wild jessamine and violet, which every now and then would call forth an exclamation of pleasure from all of us, as the sweet, wild intoxicating fragrance was wafted to our nostrils.

Fair and beautiful county of the Lake's, so snugly hidden away among the mountains, were thy beauties known to the world, how many happy hearts you would make.

Our drive was necessarily slow, as we were too happy to be in a hurry, besides the frequent sharp turns in the narrow road would not permit of fast driving. Turning suddenly a sharp point on the mountain, the beautiful race track belonging to the Seigler Springs came into view. In a cosy little dell surrounded by hills, is the track, where that prince of good fellows, Jno. Spaulding, works and drives his trotters. About half a mile away are the springs and the handsome hotel. After unloading, we at once set out to find our friend Spaulding. To our sorrow and chagrin we were told he had that morning started for Carson City. His place was ably filled by Mr. Harry Garrett, who showed us over the track and through the stables. A beautiful pair of bay mares especially took our fancy, by Milton R., he by Milton Medium, by Happy Medium, so long an honor to Fair Lawn, the home of the lamented Gen. W. T. Withers. Our guide next showed us the many and various springs that spring from the mountain side, and our parched lips were soon cooled with the most delicious soda water it has ever been our fortune to taste. Music and dancing was the amusement until far into the night.

After a hearty breakfast and a delightful swim, the journey homewards was commenced. Over the mountain our spirited team pulled up at Adams Springs. A halt was called by our conductor for lunch. This is a lovely place, but it seems to be managed by novices. We hope time will bring to them what they are sadly in need of—i. e, how to feed travellers. Glenbrook was the next halt. The drive through Cobb Valley beggars description. Words fail me when I try to describe the grand imposing scenery.

It was a most beautiful sight to see the stage in the valley coming towards the mountain with its load of humanity, as we wended our way down. We arrived home safely in time for a six o'clock dinner, and right well did we enjoy it.

The party was composed of Mr. and Mrs. E. S Fowler, La Gatina; Mr. J. S. Snook, Oakland; Miss May Snook, Misses Sadie and Addie Mahan, San Francisco; Miss Estelle Kelley, S. F.; Dr. Jno. Ginster, Ann Harbor, Mich.; Harry Mahan, S. F.; Dr. C. W. Aby, Guenoc Stock Farm, Lake Co. For a summer's outing there is no place in the world to equal Lake County for health, wealth and pleasure.

We extend our heart felt thanks to Messrs. Wood and Spaulding, and only hope it will be our fortune to repay their kind hospitality.

Guenoc Coaching Party.

Grim's Gossip.

There are lots of horses exercising at Ione track.

The race horses Naicho B. and Dell have been attached in Los Angeles.

Lucky Baldwin's horses are to be taken to Saratoga at the conclusion of the Chicago meeting.

It is not generally known, but a fact all the same, that Yolo Maid can trot at much better than a 2:40 gait.

At the Ione meeting there will be more thoroughbred horses than at any other meeting outside of Sacramento.

Alfred S. still keeps improving. Last Sunday he was given two good heats, Hickok driving him the last in 2:16¾.

S. N. Straube purchased in Pleasanton last week Nicodemus, a two-year-old colt by Clovis, dam Young Niagara.

Col. Thornton's stable of trotters will be removed to Pleasanton next week, Lambert having several promising ones among them.

A letter from New York notifies me that Mr. Fredric Gebhard will visit his stock farm in Lake County before many days.

Charley Hinchman, formerly of the Bay District track, has taken the Leland Hotel, Gridley, Butte County, and settled down with the cares of a boniface on his shoulders.

All persons wishing copies of the by-laws, rules and regulations of the National Trotting Association, can procure the same at this office, price 25 cents by mail 30 cents.

S. N. Straube, of Fresno, sold to Clay Austin and Andy Fergusson, of Fresno, his entire herd (33 head) of Polled Angus. It is Mr. Straube's intention to devote himself entirely to trotters.

Margaret S. is the only Californian left in the Spirit of the Times Stakes for this year. There are nine paid up and one doubtful one. Mr. Salisbury is very confident of winning.

Messrs. Nolan and Fiddes of the California Stables sold this week to C. F. Mullins the most handsome saddle-horse in San Francisco The price paid was $450, and a bargain at that.

Porter Reynolds, of Lake County, will prepare his horse Harry Whippleton for the Ukiah Races. He also owns two colts which will be put in training for the same meeting. They are undergoing their work at the track at Zeigler's Springs.

Eight horses worked heats better than 2:30 on the Pleasanton track the other day. Last Saturday Direct trotted a nice mile in 2:20, Gold Leaf pacing easily alongside; Homestake (no record) trotted in 2:20½, pretty good for a green one.

Mr. Straube, one of the Fresno Fair Association Directors, called to see me the other day. He says the 2:20 class trotting race closed with nine entries—five from California and four from the East.

One of the most promising fillies at the Petaluma track is Lorena, owned by Capt. Ben Harris. This little black maiden will surprise some of the talent before the year is out; 2:40 is her gait now with a whole lot left for an emergency.

The "three legged horse" Dawn is still pegging away at the Petaluma track. Last Thursday he worked out the last of four miles in 2:24, and Lee Shaner was holding him all of the last half mile, as he wanted to go faster. When the next of his legs give way he will be exercised in 2:18.

One of the great disadvantages trainers labor under at the Bay District track at this season of the year is the impossibility to procure a bite of green stuff for their horses. Green fields of wheat and oats may be seen to-day in Sonoma County, and green corn fodder may be had right into November.

On the morning of July 9th the following horses left Helena, Montana, for the Twin City meeting at St. Paul: Daniel B. Vice Regent, War Peek, X, Bay Blue, Nevada, Trifle, and Carrie Lee. Tim Lynch and Tom Bally also accompanied the horses having the old crack Jou Jou with them.

Mr. N. P. Edwards, of Petaluma, has taken a contract to lay the rails for a city railway in that pleasant little city. By the time the Fair opens on August 27th it is expected that the cars will be running from the centre of the city to the race track. This is a much needed improvement and will undoubtedly pay the promoters well.

Mr. C. L. Woods is sending Fred Arnold along at a merry clip now. The stallion, although still at service, is being put through his paces at San Luis Obispo, and he can be seen almost any day finishing miles in better than 2:35, and the track is far from being a fast one.

Mr. John Bielenberg, Deer Lodge, Mon., has purchased from Thomas Smythe, Squaw Creek, Idaho, the chestnut mare Pirouette, foaled 1873 (dam of Susie S., Avondale and Gem of the Mountains), by Harvey Villian, dam Farfalelta (Falsetto's dam) by imp. Australian, out of Elkhorna by Lexington.

Kingwood by Lowlander or Silvester, out of Mandane by Mandrake, died while en route for Buenos Ayres. Fleur de Lys, sister to Ormonde, has been sold and will shortly go to South America. She is slightly affected in her wind like her celebrated brother.

The Sire brothers have engaged J. E. Turner to drive and train some of their horses for the rest of the season. The general will be seen behind Harry Wilkes, in his $5,000 match against Belle Hamlin, at Buffalo, in August. Rosaline Wilkes will also be in Turner's string.

The Winters stable with McCormick in charge, arrived at Monmouth Park last Wednesday. El Rio Rey, Joe Courtney, and Don San Jose should gain still further honors in the East, for Mr. Winters who I hear by the way, has returned to Reno.

Last Saturday afternoon a match race took place at the Oakland track between J. C. Simpson's Rathbone, and Tom Williams's Byrant W. for $200 a side, the distance being six furlongs. As in the previous race, Rathbone had things all his own way and won easily.

Eastern journals are cautiously whispering to their readers that Budd Doble has something in his string that can beat Guy. The report probably originated with Doble, who was unable to secure the gelding for the present season.

The directors of the Willows Association have made a change in their programme, inserting a free for all trotting race. $600 is the sum to be contended for, which should be an incentive for a large field of horses to enter. See the advertisement and note the change.

It is just about time that some good friend of Senator Hearst should notify him that a change in his stable would benefit the public and at the same time be the means of saving the Senator thousands of dollars. As conducted at present the stable, in my opinion, is only a great sink hole, for the absorption of money. Let a change be made.

Mr. John Patterson, of Stockton has a pacer on the track there, that is a surprise to all who see the little beauty. She is only two-year-old and can beat 2:30 at any time. Last Wednesday she drove a mile in 2:32 one of the quarters being completed in 34 seconds.

The breeders of thoroughbreds throughout the State, should carefully read the announcement of the State Agricultural Society in reference to the Stakes which will be run off in 1890 91. As the entries close on August 1st., there is little time to spare, so that attention should be paid to this at once.

There is a strong probability that Mr. J. I. Case, of Racine, Wis., will send his well known stallion Phallas to California this fall, to prepare him for an attempt to beat his own record of 2:13¾. Mr. Case having wintered in this state is now satisfied that this is the proper place to keep good horses over the cold months, and give them records in the spring.

Mr. Straube of Fresno, has for sale a handsome bay colt, by Anteeo, dam Maud Medium, by Milton Medium. This promising yearling is called Anti-Medium, and can be had at a rare bargain. Any one desirous of purchasing this colt should address S. N. Straube, Fresno.

The Coney Island Jockey Club sent to this office a lot of entry blanks for the stakes that closed on the 15th inst. They arrived here on the 16th, too late to be of any use, although several promient breeders had sent to us for blanks prior to the stakes closing.

Mr. Edwin F. Smith, Secretary of the State Agricultural Society, has forwarded to this office a lot of entry blanks for the race at the coming State Fair, and also for the fixed running events for 1890 and 1891. Any persons desirous of obtaining copies can do so by applying at the office of the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Messrs. McAfee and Baldwin, of 10 Montgomery Street, have for sale one of the very best paying livery stables in the State. This is a rare opportunity for investment, as the profits will pay handsome interest on the amount asked for the plant. Those of my readers who are looking for "a good thing" cannot do better than communicate with the agents, who will supply any information not given in the advertisement.

Little Mike Kelly, who was sent East some time ago in change of the Porter Ashe stable, has had to be taken to St. Josiph's Hospital in Chicago where an operation will be performed on his leg. The injury he received at Fresno was not assisted any by the shaking up his got at the Bay District track, and it seems he has suffered from the wound ever since. Jimmy Tompkins is at present looking after the horses.

Miss Johanna Kemler, of Paradise Valley, Nev., is on her way to join Buffalo Bill's show in Paris. One of our exchanges says: She rides any animal that wears hair and hoofs, and cares no more for a saddle than does a wild Indian. She is as much at home on the side of a galloping steed as on his back. With her horse at full speed she can pass under his neck and come up on the other side, a feat that few Comanches care to undertake.

Lee Shaner has in training at the Petaluma track the smallest little bit of a thing in the way of horse flesh that ever faced a crowd on a course. The game youngster is twelve months old, by Sydney, dam by the Grand Moor, and I saw him go the full mile in 3:02; the first quarter was made in 38 seconds and the last in 42. The boys about the course call him Jack Rabbit, he is so small, and really it is a comical sight to see Mr. Shaner in the sulky behind such a pigmy. The lilliput is full of pace and has any quantity of endurance.

A gentleman friend of mine received a cypher telegram from a trainer in the East a few days ago, which stated that Honduras and Sinaloa would be started from the Baldwin stable that afternoon, and to back Sinaloa sure. But the gentleman read the cipher incorrectly, and told everyone he met to play Honduras for a place, and put $200 on at evens. Sinaloa was the one "tipped" and she got the place, Honduras nowhere. A second reading of the telegram showed him his mistake.

It is not long ago that I had occasion to mention in "Grim's Gossip" the fact of a horse starting to make a walk over for a purse, at one of the steeplechase meetings in France, and that as his rider was unable to get him over one of the jumps the race was declared off. Almost the same thing has happened for the Traders Plate at Athy in Ireland. Emperor and Erin-gobragh were the only contestants, and they both persistently refused to negotiate one of the fences and had to be ordered to the stable.

It is well known to almost every posted horseman that Col Sanders D. Bruce, has lost money on each volume of the American Stud book that has been issued. I would therefore suggest to the principal racing associations through out the country that they adopt the plan of the Australian jockey clubs and let each donate a purse to the enthusiastic Colonel, who has done so much for the turf interests of America in the past twenty years. The Australian associations each send £50 to the publishers of the Australian stud book.

A week or two ago mention was made in these columns that Mr. Corbitt would not trot his stallions in any contest which was open to mares and geldings, and that as there was no stallion race in which he could enter Sable Wilkes, there was a strong probability that he would not start the celebrated stallion this year. Now, I have it on undoubted authority that if any association will put up a free-for-all purse (Stamboul barred) there will be at least five entries, counting Sable Wikes, and probably six. The association that makes the first bid for this sensational race will make a big hit, for thousands will travel a long way to see the four or five stallions, whose owners have the temerity to try and down the great son of Guy Wilkes.

The State Agricultural Society has adopted a scale of points by which horses shall be judged; singular to say, it has omitted that provision in the rule which has heretofore required cattle to be judged by a similar standard. We were under the impression that there were in this State more competent judges of horses than of fine cattle. At least, we know that if we were going to judge cattle, we should want some other fellow to measure and weigh them, and even then to tell us which one to award the premium to, and yet we are credibly informed that we would not much discredit the judges who usually pass on cattle at our fairs.

An opportunity to inspect the work of a local carriage factory was taken advantage of last week, and our reporter expressed himself surprised at the perfection of skill and workmanship displayed. The proprietor, W. E. Shaw, at the factory, 1621 Market street, gives his personal supervision to and does most of the work himself. The main features of his work, and of which too much cannot be said in commendation, is the extreme lightness, combined with the maximum of strength and room, as well as the light running qualities of his sulkies. These sulkies are already in use on several of our tracks and are highly spoken of. Mr. Shaw being an old turfman, one familiar with the needs of drivers, has tried to produce a sulkey that in every respect will meet with such requirements, and we believe that in every respect he has succeeded. We hail the advent of all peculiarly California manufactures, and this one in particular. The advertisement of Mr. Shaw will be found on the last page of our paper, and we commend his modest announcement to the careful consideration of our readers,

A half pint of blood-warm water, injected in the rectum at the right time by a small rubber bulb syringe, is a simple, effective and prompt remedy of constipation in foals. Every young breeder should write this out and paste it upon every brood mare stall in his stable. Hundreds of young foals die from this causa every year. Some breeders apply a little oil or lard to the rectum, and think that when the foal passes the black meconium all danger is over. This is a mistake. Every foal dropped by mares not running to grass should be carefully watched for the first few hours after birth, and if any signs of pain are apparent, which can be detected by uneasiness, straining, carrying the hind legs forward until the little sufferer nearly pitches head first upon the floor, then give an injection of a half-pint of blood-warm water, with just enough soap added to make the water feel slippery to touch. This should be thrown up gently, for too much force is used it will cause the patient to strain at once, and the liquid will not be retained long enough to soften the congested matter.

At the Kedron Park (Queensland) races held on the 4th of May, a rather peculiar case cropped up, which is thus described by a Brisbane paper:—

Enid got away in the front when the flag fell, and led along the back, followed by Miss Newbold, who took up the running when approaching the turn into the straight Here, however, the latter ran into a post and knocked it down, and although she was first into the straight the accident threw her back a little, and Godolphin, who was ridden a good race by young King, came with a run, and catching the mare half-way up the running, beat her by nearly three lengths, Gladys finishing a good third. A protest was lodged against the winner on the ground that he had run inside the post which was knocked down by Miss Newbold, and the stewards, after holding an inquiry, disqualified Godolphin and awarded the prize to Miss Newbold. It appears that the post was broken off within 6 inches of the ground, and thrown some four yards inside the track, and the rider of Godolphin, not seeing the stump that marked the spot where the post had been, took his horse over the fallen stick, and it was in consequence of his admission of this that the winner was disqualified.

Mr. N. T. Smith in his communication anent Pacific Coast Trotting Association, stated that he did not know how many, if any, associations on the coast belonged to the American Association. As far as we have been able to learn, the following do so belong:

Anaconda Racing Association, Anaconda, Montana.
Deer Lodge Association, Deer Lodge, Montana.
Overland Park Club, Denver, Col.
Judson Driving Park, Salt Lake, Utah.
Wyoming Fair Association, Cheyenne, Wyoming.
Sonoma and Marin Agricultural Society, Petaluma, Cal.
Sonoma County Agric'l Park Association, Santa Rosa, Cal.
Napa and Solano Agricultural Society, Napa, Cal.
Golden Gate (Oakland) Agricultural Society, Oakland, Cal.
Fresno Agricultural Society, Fresno, Cal.
Los Angeles Agricultural Society, Los Angeles, Cal.
San Luis Obispo Agricultural Society, San Luis Obispo, Cal.
Eureka Racing Association, Eureka, Cal.

With probably half a dozen or more we know nothing about. Those named, however, constitute just about the cream of our track societies, and it looks very much as though the American Trotting Association had obtained a grip in this coast that nothing short of a Pacific Coast Trotting Association would loosen.

Members of the American Trotting Association enjoy a great advantage over those belonging to the National, inasmuch as they are given the privilege of keeping any disreputable characters off their tracks, whether such characters perpetrated their frauds on National Association tracks or even on tracks of the American Turf Association (running horse). This is as it should be. A man committing a fraud on one track should be punishable on all others; it is the only way to keep up public interest in turf contests. Imagine the effect of a driver or rider expelled for life for palpable fraud at the Bay District, next week appearing at Oakland behind the horses the public had the previous week put their money on. The rule adopted by the American Association reads as follows:

"All persons and horses ruled off for fraud by the American Turf Congress, or expelled for fraud by the National Trotting Association shall hereafter likewise stand disqualified from competing on the courses of members of this association; provided, that the Board of Appeals may at any time, for good cause shown, remove or modify the same; but until otherwise ordered by the Board of Directors, no other fine, suspension, expulsion or penalty ordered by or through the National Trotting Association shall be recognized or enforced by this association, except in cases where the same have been or may be ordered by members of this association."

By omitting to adopt a similar rule, the National Association virtually says to the public and to its own members: "Every thief is a gentleman, unless and until he happens to be detected stealing when driving, riding or training under our rules."

Interesting to Orchardi ts.

Cultivation in the Orchard.

Written for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

Cultivate deep. These two words, although small on paper, mean more to the orchardist and his business than the average man has any idea of. Shallow cultivation is poor at the best. While it may keep the orchard free of weeds and prevent the loss of moisture that they draw from the ground, it does not serve to hold the greater amount, which would be held in store by a deeper stirring of the ground. What do we cultivate for? A question simple enough in itself, but one not so easily answered in its full sense. Cultivation is not merely for the purpose of dragging a few blades of steel over the ground for exercise, nor for the purpose of simply keeping it free from weeds. To be sure, we want to see the marshmallows, pigweeds and mustard kept out of the orchard, and it is just as easy to keep them out as to have them in, and at the same time accomplish the great and principal object of cultivation; that is, to hold all the moisture that there is in the soil, and to loosen up the surface to a sufficient depth, so that the moisture retained may continually be allowed to be drawn to the surface as the trees, vines, or plants need it to sustain life. We all know the result if ground is allowed to bake. It first forms a hard crust, then cracks, and if allowed to remain will draw from the soil every bit of moisture it contains, and when it cracks around trees will be sure death to them. While shallow cultivation is better than no cultivation at all, still the ground will bake and crack to a greater or less degree it permitted to remain in that condition long. Heavy soils, although richer in food material for trees, have a greater tendency to break than more sandy ground, and consequently require a more thorough working. Still the benefits of thoroughly cultivating soils can be seen in more ways than one. The fruit will have a higher flavor, the trees show a thriftier growth and the ground be ready when the first rains fall to commence dissolving those elements which the small fibers of the roots of the tree take up for its daily rations. As to the general mode of cultivation, we will start from the first plowing of the orchard. Although this article is intended to treat only on the mere use of cultivators, coming after the ground has been thoroughly plowed. In the first place, give your orchard a good, deep plowing of say, eight inches, early in the season; then next, cross plow, going down a couple of inches deeper, the deeper the better, even if you throw your plow down up to the beam; after that, run your cultivator over the ground every three weeks or so, throwing your blades down as deep as possible consistently with the quality of the ground and the amount of work that the team can stand. All this time keep your trees well hoed around the trunks where the cultivator does not reach, but at the same time remember that the more work you accomplish and the closer you can get to the trees with the cultivator the less hoeing you will have to do. Do not run the side of the cultivator into the trunks of the trees and bark them. While a bark may not always seriously injure, it generally damages a tree to a greater or less extent, not always shown, but invariably telling in the growth, and in some instances, as with young cherry trees, killing them if badly barked, unless covered at once with a mixture of cow dung and clay or other substance, to keep out the air until the bruise is thoroughly healed over. The style of cultivator to be used is a difficult question to answer, as one cultivator may be adapted to a certain soil, while in another it may be totally unfit for the thorough working of the land. Every blacksmith and every agricultural shop and store will represent their cultivators as the best, and there are a great many different kinds in use, and more being invented all the time. Some are very good, while others with perhaps some particular good point about them lack the general qualities which, taken together, make the good average cultivator, easy of draft and thoroughly stirring and mixing the ground. For ordinary purposes for those who are uninitiated, probably the old diamond-tooth cultivator, with a knife attachment behind to cut weeds, which any blacksmith can put on, would give good satisfaction until some other is found that is particularly adapted to your soil. For light cultivating where there are but few weeds to interfere with the blade going down, the Acme is very good, harrowing and pulverizing the clods at the same time, and also leveling the ground.

After cultivating the orchard first lengthways, then across, you should run a clod-smasher over the whole, thus breaking and pulverizing all the clods that the cultivator fails to knock to pieces. This clod-smashing is not beneficial in very sandy ground, as the cultivator generally loosens it up enough and as it does not bake and clod as much as heavy land, it would be a waste of time in doing it, unless the soil is of a somewhat loamy nature, then it would assist in helping the ground to retain the moisture. On irrigated lands a good plowing is better and cheaper in the long run, after the water has been run over the ground, than to run over it with the cultivator. If you irrigate a large tract within a short time, and lack the requisite number of teams, this can not always be done, but by taking the land in sections and following each up as it dries, you will experience no trouble. Do not work the land while it is too wet, and on the other hand do not let it go too long after irrigating. Take it just at the time when it begins to be dry enough, without feeling soggy, when handling it with your fingers, then run over it with your plow or cultivator, and it will crumble up and not clod in chunks, sometimes as long as your arm, as it would do if left too long. Irrigation is often worse than no irrigation at all, if the ground is not properly handled afterwards, and I would advise all, excepting those of course in parts of the State, where irrigation is absolutely necessary, to cultivate more and irrigate less. But few imagine what a fine reservoir there is contained in a simple cultivator, a pair of horses, with a good man at the lines, who will use a little pedestrianism and elbow grease, in holding that supply until needed by the trees and vines, or whatever is planted on the land. If judiciously used this reservoir is worth a great many shares of ditch stock, and besides you are independent as to using it. You don't have to wait until somebody else is through with the water, which may be weeks. It is pretty hard to tell when they will be through with it, but all you have to do is to get forth at any time or hour that you may choose, for damming up this supply of water in your orchard at a small cost, and with a little hard work. Not so very hard either—still when a man follows a cultivator all day long in the hot sun, he is entitled to and generally gets a good night's rest. Trials have demonstrated the difference in the growth of trees and in the fruit, according to the amount of cultivation given an orchard. In a large isolated orchard the trees may make a fair growth and present a generally good appearance with but little cultivation. But take half that orchard and put double the work on it, cultivate deeper and oftener, and you will soon see the other half take a back seat and be nothing but a skeleton beside it. Great care should be taken not to run over trees or break off limbs. A patient man with a team in an orchard, is always the best, although he may not apparently accomplish as much as a man with a little more energy, but it is done better, and he will not fly off on a tangent when his team happens to go a little too much to the right or left and then commence jerking the lines and getting his horse entangled in the harness, when perhaps, they may turn and break and damage more trees than his month's wages amount to. Serious mistakes often occur by letting inexperienced teamsters work among trees. They may be first rate men hauling grain or driving a gang plow on a grain ranch, where there is nothing in their way, but get them in between trees twenty by twenty feet apart, and they are entirely out of place, being unaccustomed to keep a smart lookout for trees at such a short distance. Muzzling the horses should be done, where they eat the foliage. The muzzle may either be made of leather or wire, and buckled over the bridle. In old orchards, saw off the tops of the hames so as to prevent them striking against the limbs; and in low pruned trees average sized horses are the best, enabling one to cultivate much closer than with larger ones, besides, not being as awkward. Cultivation is, and should be one of the principal studies of the orchardist, and his regular season's work, from which an indefinite amount of knowledge is continually gained from observation. C. What is a Well Bred Trotter?

Written for the BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

What is a well bred horse? Ask this question of any crowd of horsemen you meet, and the reply from seven-tenths of the "old-timers" will be, "The Hambletonians are the only well bred trotters."

The Hambletonians are undeniably a great family, great in performances, and vastly greater in numbers. But let us examine them fairly and without predjudice, by the light of recorded facts, and see if their success as uniform performers and producers (independent of aid from trotting blood) has been so superior to other trotting families as to justify their partisans in arrogating to the claim of being the only "well bred trotters."

As their successes are blazoned to the world and repeated and enlarged upon, we will, for the purpose of a fair and intelligent judgment, consider some of their failures, as well as the aid they have had from other strains (without credit) in their successes.

RESERVE, No. 265, was foaled in 1859 (just thirty years ago), by RYSDYK HAMBLETONIAN. He sired OSCAR, record 2:30, and NO OTHERS.

PETER was by Hambletonion, and sired IOLA, 2:29¾, and no others.

Thirty-seven other sons of Hambletonian have, in a long life time, with the great opportunity the prestige of the Hambletonian name gave them, got just one each, and over four hundred others are still worse off, never having got a single one.

Take PICKERING, by Hambletonian, dam by Seely's AMERICAN STAR (the great "cross" that gave Hambletonian his fame), and these same men will agree unanimously that his is the "best breeding in the world," and for proof will tell you of Dexter and others that are bred in that way. Well, Pickering has a record himself of just 2:30, but never sired a 2:30 performer.

Again, take ARTILLERY, by Hambletonian, dam also by American Star, with not a single 2:30 performer, and you will get the same verdict—"the best bred trotters in the world," and they would patronize him "on his breeding," if he were within reach, and ask no questions.

Compare this showing with the percentage of performers and producers by THE MOOR, for instance—with no Hambletonian blood.

When we reflect that a filly without one drop of Hambletonian or Mambrino blood beat the best record in her class 12¼ seconds, and that a colt of the same plebeian origin held the best record in his class for two years, and that a stallion with no more patrician blood held the best stallion record for eight years, we have a right to question the arrogant claims set up for this family as being the "only well bred trotters."

While the Hambletonian name is renowned throughout the world, and most deservedly, it is not generally known as it should be, that by far the best and most famous of them, of all ages, sexes and classes are NOT inbred, but are outcrossed ON PACING BLOOD.

What the Hambletonians could not do within themselves, and failed to do with any other trotting cross, they achieved with the help of the PACER In every class, from the contest of yearlings to the marvellous exhibitions of the kings and queens, the best records, without an exception, stand to the credit of the "pacing cross."

These men, whose vision is bounded by the Hambletonian line, and who can see nothing in Maud S, Jay Eye See, Manzanita, or Axtel, but the Hambletonian part of it, sneer at the Blue Bulls, as they sneered, not so very long ago, at the Clays and Pilots, and on the same grounds—"want of breeding." Although Blue Bull has more 2:30 performers than any horse that ever lived, except, possibly, George Wilkes, whose opportunity, in the quality of the mares he served, and in the development of his produce, was a hundred to one in his favor.

Blue Bull's sons are getting trotters, and his daughters are producing trotters. He has more daughters that have produced 2:30 performers than his great rival—George Wilkes. His progeny are "training on" and "breeding on," and yet, we are told, they have "no breeding" and are not 'fashionable," Neither were the Pilots fashionable, nor the Clays, but without them we should have had no Maud S., Jay Eye See, Nutwood, George Wilkes, Stamboul, or AXTEL. Fashions change, and those who would be in the fashion or would breed extreme speed, must not ignore Blue Bull blood—the best pacing blood to breed trotters from that the world has yet produced, as the number of his 2:30 performers abundantly proves.

Had I the presumption to attempt to define a "well-bred trotter," I should say he is not necessarily a Hambletonian, a Mambrino, a Bashaw, a Clay, or a Blue Bull, but that he is from the "elect lines" of a strain that has produced the largest percentage of fast trotters for the number bred and trained.

According to this definition, and I think it will be conceded to be a correct one, a horse tracing to the great Blue Bull, equally with one tracing to the great George Wilkes through producing sons, or producing daughters, and from speed producers on the other side, whether the other side is Clay, Pilot, Hambletonian or something else, would be the "best bred trotter in the world," and ought to go as fast—well, as fast as ROY WILKES, who combines the blood of the two "best bred" families (according to this definition)—Blue Bull and George Wilkes, and who has two "best records" as he should have from his breeding.

Don't let me be understood as making an assault upon the Hambletonian family—a family that I am no more willing to dispense with in breeding the trotter than their blindest admirers, but I would award them no more than their just weight in the making of that composite animal—the American trotter.

If the Hambletonian family were to-day wiped from the face of the earth, it would be a great calamity, and retard the fullest possible development of the trotting horse for years, but would not, in my opinion, prevent the ultimate development of as great speed, and in every way as desirable an animal as if we still had the benefit of that desirable cross.

It has been the practice to mate the best mares of other strains with Hambletonian sires and give all the credit of the produce to the male. It is this injustice to other blood, and this self-deception that I would combat.

It will not be long until the breeding public will fully appreciate the value of pacing blood in the female to cross with Hambletonian sires, but will probably be longer before they will understand and profit by the fact that a cross of Hambletonian mares with pacing sires will produce equally good results, but it being one of the facts of physiological law, it will be understood and acted upon in time. The laws of heredity will not yield to any man's prejudice or interest.

A STANDARD of merit for the trotting horse, based upon tested speed, or the power to produce speed at the trot or pace, and the immediate progeny of such performers and producers, would be a good thing for the horse interest. The present standard is better than none, but it is mainly a Hambletonian "trust" "calculated for the Eastern meridian," where ninety-nine breeders in a hundred are interested in that family of horses, and its object is more to shut out competition than to elevate the breeding interest, or hasten the coming of the two-minute trotter.

S. A. Brown & Co., of Kalamazoo, Michigan, who put more winners in the 2:30 list in 1887 than any breeding farm in America, says: "A very large percentage of trotters, if trained all their lives, could not trot in three minutes," and yet these scions of Hambletonian aristocracy have standard rank, while the brilliant YOLO MAID, with her unequalled three-year-old record of 2:14, being a pacer, is left out in the cold, and this too, notwithstanding the notorious fact that many a Hambletonian whose owner is proud of his standard rank, would not be there but for the quickening power of a cross of this same pacing blood that shuts out the Maid. "Consistency, thou art a jewel." "Give the pacer his dues," and if you have a Hambletonian that can't trot, give him a cross of this quickening blood, and a chance for speed and fame in his progeny. M. W. HICKS.

Australia for the English Derby.

Four colts were shipped from Melbourne, June 21st., intended for the English Derby of next year, by the steamer Orizoba, entered by Hon. James White, of Victoria Colony. The Derby was won for the first time by a foreign bred horse in 1865—the French Gladiataur bearing off the precious prize. Lorillard's Iroquis stands yet as the only American winner of the blue ribbon. Should one of these Australian colts prove the victor, English breeders will have the satisfaction of cogitating upon the better performance of home blood transported, to return and prove its superiority through breeding in a distant clime and favored soil. California will yet breed the winner of the great original Derby, with an American jockey up.

Maltese Villa Stable.

A faithful and trustworthy young man, Johny Wall, who has been in the employ of R. Porter Ashe, proprietor of the Maltese Villa srables, for several years, arrived at Sacramento on Monday morning with a contingent of nine thoroughbreds, and he has them domiciled at Mr. Shear's cottage stable, at the entrance to the Agricultural Park. There are seven yearlings, one three-year-old and Mozart, better known as "Old Mose." The yearlings are all well broken and look the picture of health, and with the care their trusty trainer takes of them, I am more than satisfied that their affable owner will have quite a number to enter as soon as the stakes are open, for their appearance are of the yearling developing kind. I here give the names and breeding of the nine as they appeared a few days ago to your correspondent: First on the list is the old veteran and pet of the stable, Mozart, by Flood, dam Moselle. Next comes Ryland, a very fine looking three-year-old by Shannon, dam Goula; Mr. Ashe purchased this colt at Palo Alto Stock Farm at the same time he bought Flood Tide. As the colt was troubled with rheumatism he was not trained last season, and I am satisfied it was good judgment not to do so, for I have never seen such improvement in a colt as there is in him from last year. His trainer thinks he is all right now, and fancies it will be a hard game for many of the three-year-olds to beat him. I hope Johnny is right for his own and the owner's sake, for a few more such men as R. Porter Ashe would be a great benefit to the turf on the Pacific Coast. Now comes the babies or yearlings, first the brown colt, King Alta, by that good race horse Alta, dam Cousin Peggy. He is a very fine proportioned colt, only a trifle undersized, which shows early development.

Then came a chestnut colt Judge Terry, by Alta, dam Pet. If there is anything in appearance he is sure to be as game as his sire, and have the staying qualities of his namesake.

Number 3 is Sir Rae, a bay colt by Alta, dam Constellation, a well developed youngster; and if nothing happens, is sure to make a name for himself.

Number 4 is Romaeta, a brown filly by Woodlands, dam Dizzy Blonde, and she looks as if she would be a very speedy filly when called on.

We now come to Anteora, a black filly by Alta, dam Theitis, which for beauty and finish it is hard to find her equal in any of our largest breeding establishments.

Number 6 is a chestnut filly named Bonnie by Alta, dam Lillie Ashe. This is a filly of very rare proportions, and when the flag falls will be in the front ranks, if in condition at the time.

Number 7 is Zingrella, a chestnut filly by Ed Corrigan, dam Minuet. This filly takes considerably after her sire and I think with age will be a very fine looking mare. She ought to have what constitutes a good race horse, namely speed and endurance, and as her dam and sire had both qualities there is no reason why a good looking daughter should be deficient. I wish success to the trainer of the stable, and all the luck imaginable. LOOKOUT.

THE GUN.

The periodical established a year ago as "Wildwoods Magazine" was changed in title a month ago, being known as "Recreation." Since the last change the whole plant has been purchased by Turf, Field and Farm, and now becomes a part of that paper. The editor of Recreation, Mr. F. E. Pond, will take place as a corresponding editor of T. F. and F., and will add much to the strength of the staff of that journal. Whether Mr. Charles Hallock will assist in the new venture is not stated.

A prominent member of the Alameda County Sportsmen's Club won a big box of candy at Stockton in October last, and the poor little chap has not yet received his taffy—an oversight which Mr. Austin B. Sperry might set straight. It would not be safe to permit Frank Lane to attend to the matter he is fond of candy himself. If the box is addressed "Kellogg, 416 Montgomery Street, San Francisco," it will go all right.

An enthusiastic and very good trap shot of Riverside was led into error the other day. He thought he had a "walking match" at blue rock targets well in hand, but failed to get the under—A—K—Holt and rolled up a nice score of twenty large eggs.

Harvey McMurchy is knocking about Syracuse looking for snakes, it is presumed. We should be pleased to know whether it was a snake or a crooked limb that attempted to bite McMurchy in Louisiana last fall. So many versions of that thrilling incident have come to hand that it is becoming a matter of paramount importance to know whether Mc. bit the earth, or the stick bit the snake, or who.

The Blue Rock Club will "shoot up" back scores at Shell Point this afternoon. Mr. J. C. Kimble, a crack trap-shot from the East has joined the Club. Shell Point is reached via South Pacific Coast Narrow Gauge Railway.

A valued sportsman of Seattle sends these kindly words:—

"Many sportsmen are coming to this country, and in a very short time we think that this Territory, Oregon and California, with surrounding country," will contain some of the finest sportsmen in existence.

The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has a very bright future, and Mr. Perry and myself and others think it will stand at the head. Anything in our power to further its interests will be done by us.

Mr. Perry, who stood at his engine, 'No. 1, Seattle Fire Department,' during all the recent great fire, fought the flames as they never were fought before, lost all his property, furniture and valuable sportsman's library, together with all his beloved dogs. No man had greater love for his four-footed friends than our friend Silalicum."

[Our sympathy goes out towards the esteemed fellow sportsman, and we suggest that each of the many who have read "Silalicum's" delightful musings at once assist in re-establishing his library. We lead off by sending Professor Goode's "American Fishes" to Mr. W. A. Perry, Seattle, W. T.—FIELD ED.]

"Mr. Robertson and myself are good friends, and have shot together many times. I will enquire about his Gordon-English setter and try and see her at work afield, and will let you know."

A notable incident of the Bakersfield fire was the bravery shown by two sportsmen, Messrs. W. E. Houghton and E. O'Donnell. The supply of water for the town comes from a tank placed on a high wooden tower, which repeatedly took fire, and the town would soon have been left absolutely without protection if the gentlemen had not climbed half a dozen times to the top of the tower and drenched the sides and roof with water. The act merits the highest commendation.

Dr. I. W. Hays, Jr., of Grass Valley, spent last week in San Francisco, in attendance upon the meeting of the State Dental Society. He reports indications for the coming quail season in his vicinity favorable. The Grass Valley Sportsmen's Club recently brought from Oregon four dozen Mongolian Pheasant eggs, which were hatched by barnyard fowls, eighteen young pheasants resulting. The youngsters immediately developed a tendency to wander which, gave the clucking brooders much anxiety. The old hens endured the erratic ways of their mongol foster young ones for two or three days and then deliberately killed off the young pheasants only three surviving. The survivors have been placed in a proper enclosure and are being cared for assiduously. Doctor Hays has made a study of the habits and habitat of Mongolian pheasants, and concludes that the foothill region of California is much like the portions of China in which they are abundant. The reports which come from Oregon about the pheasants are so conflicting as to make it difficult to reach a conclusion about their desirability. Some say that they breed so fast in Southern Oregon as to make it impossible to keep the stock down, and that they are so destructive to grain and seed crops as to be nuisances. Other claim that by preference the birds use in the wilder parts where nobody lives and feed only on wild grass seeds and insects. We should be glad to learn from readers in Oregon what they think about pheasants.

An item of great interest to anglers and sportsmen may be gleaned from the advertising columns this week, where that energetic and popular Boniface, Mr. Robert T. Polk, famous as an old-time sportsman, announces that he has opened a resort for the guild in San Pedro Valley, San Mateo County, near Colma. Mr. Polk has remodeled that splendidly preserved old adobe mansion, built by Senor Don Sanchez many years ago, in the baronial days of the Spanish settlers. The house has entertained a world of men since then grown famous. General Grant passed many days there in his early days in California. General Sherman has shot over the hills about the valley and enjoyed the rare hospitality of its lordly owner. John B. Felton, William H. Patterson, Hall McAllister and the other legal giants of a few years by-gone were fond of gathering about the huge old dining table and spending long nights in such relaxation as they fancied. For forty years a constant stream of distinguished visitors has passed to and from San Pedro. The valley affords the best quail and cotton tail shooting in the State, and there is a well stocked brook running through the property, which forms two large lakes just at the ocean beach. Salmon trout in great numbers pass into the lakes from the sea and afford fine sport. In the winter the finest of duck shooting is to be had and many English snipe. For mere beauty the valley has no equal. As a place for a suburban resort, whether for sportsmen or those who desire only rest in delightful surroundings, Hotel San Pedro has not an equal on the coast. Large, airy rooms, every convenience, first-rate table supplied with crisp fresh vegetables, game and fish taken right at hand, and last, though not least, being easily reached either by driving from San Francisco or by train to Colma and thence by the hotel conveyance to the hotel, a drive of eight miles over a good road within sight and hearing of the sea. Mr. Polk thoroughly understands good living, and gives his personal attention to the entertainment of his guests. No nicer or more pleasant way to spend the hours from Saturday afternoon to Monday morning can be imagined than to drop down to Hotel San Pedro, kill a few cotton tails or doves, catch two or three dozen clean, lively trout or a sack of sea trout, green cod, rock cod or surf perch; take two or three plunges into the clean surf, dine on freshly caught fish, game of rare quality, vegetables just taken from the ground, cream ad libitum, Maryland biscuits and fried chicken, and then sleep, lulled by the deep intonations of the eternally breaking sea. The perplexities of business life weigh less heavily after such little spells of recreation.

Inter-Club Match Again.

With reference to the mooted match between teams from the various clubs of the coast. Mr. Henry A. Bassford, of Vacaville, writes, under date of July 14th, 1889, as follows:

Yours received. I will see Friend Buckingham to-morrow, and see when it will be convenient for him to get off, and then I will write you. We are pretty busy now, and have not shot a Blue Rock this season. We do all our shooting late in the summer and early fall. We will enter a team in live bird shoot at San Jose in October for the trophy. There will be five or six from here to shoot for the Selby medal.

H. A. BASSFORD.

Breeders and Sportsmen.

WRITTEN FOR THE BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

There is a great deal of the practical naturalist and lover of the best in nature in the make-up of the genuine sportsman. He studies man and the brute creation, the beasts of the field, the birds of the air, the fishes of the sea, and every animate genus and species. He makes particular study of every kind that delight mankind in the chase and quest, and that serve the uses and gratification of the horseman family, whether for profit, for companionship, for hunting, or for whatever other purpose. The horse and the dog naturally attract his attention, as the one and the other are essential to his pleasures and sport. The horse assures the greater profit, and the dog is the best type of affection, fidelity, courage and intelligence for the fond companionship which has none of the alloy often found in human nature. These are the hunters, the most valuable accessories to the sportsman, and therefore the companionship is inseparable, as the spirit is congenial. In this respect the important matter of breeding suggests itself to the sportsman as an indispensable qualification. He seeks to learn the breeding that will yield him the best results to satisfy his desires in line with his purpose. This must come from superior blood, the best that can be obtained or developed agreeably to the requirement for the sports of the turf, whether in running or trotting, for the sports of the field, in hunting, or for the pleasures of the road and the drive. Observation, tentative trials, experience and study, to the best results, at length establish a line and found a system which can be safely adhered to in the important points of speed and endurance, and in these are comprehended all which describes the thorough horse for either sport or pleasure.

The natures and qualities of horses differ as materially as do the natures and qualities of the human kind. Since the commingling of different races, of different nations and tribes, much has been learned of the results of the intermingling of all these in regard to progeny and otherwise. It is now generally learned which of the races produce the better lines, and which are detrimental in the peopling of the world; from which no issue comes, as there is none from the mule. But the present century and our own country has illustrated that there are peoples of different nationalities with whom the crossing is the betterment of certain leading traits, quite as the crossing of different lines of horses begets improvement in certain valuable qualities. Through similar process the thoroughbred horses of England and America, which are now the fleetest in the world and superior to all others in form and bone, in spirit and in sinew, have been bred. The evolution of the perfect trotter is progressing from similar tentative process, from which will yet eventuate the trotter that will trot the mile in two minutes; and the indications are that this development of the trotting-horse will be accomplished in California, as in this State already are produced the superior horses of the turf in quality and performance. The breeders and sportsmen of the State are foremost to this great accomplishment.

In the study, care and treatment of dogs for sporting the true sportsman devotes due attention to each species better qualified for the different and particular kind of sport—field or fen, woods or plain. He learns the nature and qualities of every species, their adaptability for every kind of game, and ascertains the best lines from which to breed. These are the essentials of the good sportsman. He studies also to perfect himself in the natures, habits, and habitats of the different kinds of game—of the forest and the heather, of feather and wing, and of fin and scales. He knows the seasons and the haunts of the antlered tribes; of the wild fowl and of the game birds he delights in hunting; and of every species of fine food fish which swims. In this study he becomes much of a naturalist, and all the better for the expansion of good nature and ennobling instruction incident to the enlightening and pleasing theme. He becomes an expert in the arts of general sporting and in the mechanics peculiar to the art. He is versed in regard to the best equipment for every branch of sporting—as to the gun and rifle, the powder and cartridge and shot; as to rod and line, fly and bait; and as to personal accoutrement for each order of sporting—in details and particulars. He reads for information upon every invention and improvement with reference to the broad subject, and maintains mastery of it from pride and through careful observance of whatever is the better method to adopt.

In every field of entertaining literature the genuine sportsman takes pleasure, and is conversant with the history and manner of sporting in every age; is enabled to note the great advancement which marks the methods of this period beyond those of past generations, mainly through the excellence of the modern inventions as to means and processes—in firearms, tackle and equipment. Sporting cultivates manly qualities—courage, nerve, self-reliance and presence of mind in moments of sudden peril. The hunters of wild beats learn therein the best lessons of soldiering, and become accustomed to that degree of judgment, prompt action and coolness in the face of danger, which makes the shrewd and intrepid warrior. In every manner of true sporting there is learned skill, dexterity and the better mastery of the temper. The sport affords recreation and contributes to health. The body is inured to the exercise which strengthens and toughens, and the mind is disciplined to activity with wholesome vigor. There is no training in life comparable to that obtained in the broad field of sporting; and it is the synonym of the true sportsman that he is a good man and estimable citizen. It improves and refines. It developes the better qualities and adorns the noble attributes of enlightened mankind. It prompts to adventure, exploration and the more thorough knowledge of countries and tribes. And it all the time caters to the enjoyments, comforts and finer appetites of mankind, while it causes beneficial improvement in the dumb intelligent animals most useful and most faithful to man, to perform his service, to add to his pleasures, to delight his pride and be of profit to him in different ways. In California, all over this coast, as there is a wider range of sporting, and it is more abundant than in any country, there are more true sporting men in the ratio of population, who take part in the pleasures of the field and the waters than in any other; and the breeders of the land are leading in the sports of the turf. It is all in the line of progress, in the spirit of excelsior.

John Leathorn's Coon.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—In John Leathorn's farm-yard, one moonlight night, dark and shadowy forms were seen skulking around wood piles, sneaking in back windows, emerging from nowhere in particular, but everywhere in general. Weird and ghostly indeed are their actions. Now a couple of ghouls are discerned leading a gaunt animal which one might suppose to be anything but a dog. Soon another batch of apparent body snatchers, midnight assassins, or anything else you might call them, skulk with muffled and shambling gait, accompanied by an uncouth and nightmare-causing brute. They seem to be congregating back of the big wood pile, and the moon's pale rays flash back a glitter from gun barrel and axe blade, while a whispered consultation, accompanied by ghoulish and unearthly laughter, is heard.

Great Scott! what is this? A Fenian raid, or burglary, conclave of fire bugs, or rebellion?

Gentle reader, if you will follow me into the great barn where these midnight prowlers have disappeared, the mystery will be unravelled. But hark? Do you hear that soul-harrowing howl, as if a lost demon was being carried to the bowels of the earth?

Don't mind such little things as that, but hurry along.

Grouped under a single flickering lantern a great crowd of men and boys are whispering together. A kick is administered to one of the hounds (for such they are). After an unusually prolonged and drawn-out howl (from the hound), which has alarmed the household, you behold John Leathorn himself and wife, the first named carefully keeping behind his worthy spouse, as required and became the head of the house, who had to carry the light.

The assembled knights would fain have disappeared, but, alas, it is too late. The enemy are upon them. The doughty farmer now discovering his own boys amongst the host, hastens to the front to uphold the reputation of his race for bravery, but is violently jerked backward by the good wife, who brandishes her broom vigorously at the ghouls, and soon proves that she has a tongue which she knows very well was not intended to remain idle.

"Ye guid for naethings, idle na'er-do-wells, what on airth do ye mean by raisin' sich a blather in a decent person's yaird this time o' night? Gin an account o' yoursels, or I'll larrup ye every one, big and worthless as ye air."

The braves assembled having each tried to get behind his neighbor, at last succeeded in shoving the "guid wife's" eldest Robert, to the front as spokesman, he being duly appointed as a committee of one, the others having modestly but firmly refused to serve.

Robert meekly approaches his mother) and after ducking several vicious cracks at his worthless skull by his good parents' broom handle, which swipes if as well aimed as intended, would have been the innocent cause of adding several bumps to his already fully developed cranium.

"Mother, we gentlemen, are just about to go on a little coon hunt, as the coons have been eating all your corn up. We made up our minds they (the coons) had to be suppressed. To-night we intend to kill every coon in the country, and several in the next. So, dear mother, I hope you will wish us luck, and have a good supper ready by the time we get back.

This last was the straw which entirely deprived "dear mother" of speech. Her rage is great, her disgust supreme, but regained her (for the first time) lost gift of speech. She rallies to the charge.

"What on airth will come next. Such a lot of guid for narthings I niver did see. Big growed up men going on a leetle coon hunt; ye ought all to be in bed getting honest rest to be able to hoe your taters and sich like honest toil, by the sweat of your brows, nae your puir auld faether and mither's gray hairs can gae down with sorrer to their graives."

A merry twinkle is now observed in the guid man's eye. He was once a boy himself, and feels for the lads, and comes bravely to the rescue.

"Hou't mither, let the puir lads be; they work hard enough; we oughtn't to complain. A little air will dae them guid. Get into the house with you and get a fire, and get them some plum duff and sich lixins for them when they return. Get on with ye, boys, and next time keep a muzzle on your 'bird dogs' so they won't yowl so loud, and wake the ould ooman up."

What a cheer went up for the old man who had once been a boy himself, and who, in fact, if he could have got away with them himself without his spouse knowing, would have yelled as loud as any of them. All cause for secrecy being now removed, it is an eager and jolly crowd which issues from the old barn and skurries off towards the corn field alongside the woods, where the dogs Keiser, Nigger and Cooney, hounds, and Brandy and Rover, just dogs, are turned loose.

These dogs, though unknown to fame, and likewise of unknown pedigree, two of them at least had been in at the death of many and many a coon, the hound Cooney being covered with scars from many a hard-fought battle.

The boys scatter out; the dogs search diligently for some time. At last Cooney's bay is heard, and the rest of the pack of hounds and blood composed of sheep-dog, "bird-dog," hound, terrier, poodle, bull-dog, etc., soon join in, and is in full blast. Although the music was in five different octaves and varieties of bass, alto, soprano and tenor, still what music that was to our youthful breasts. How our blood tingled, and our eyes danced. Nothing on earth was too good for us at that particular moment. What did we care for tumbles over logs and fences, falling into downy beds of thistles and nettles, or bruised shins, or cracked heads, or torn clothes. Simply nothing.

My! what a chase that big coon did lead us, the old hound never leaving the trail for a second, and always keeping ahead of the balance of the "noble" pack!

We went through farm after farm, woods after woods, for about two hours, when more than one-half of the crowd of starters had fallen back; but at last the leaders yelled, "Treed! treed!" when we could hear the five different kinds of barks up a tree; and, getting beneath, we could see his coonship away up on a limb. One of the best climbers, Jonathan Mitchell, shinned up to the limb and dislodged our enemy, who fell amongst the bird-dogs and hounds, fighting tooth and toe-nail, the less valorous being driven off at once, yelling and howling, but old Nigger got him by the throat, and after a desperate struggle tossed him in the air. The excitement ran extremely high amongst the audience; never was such jumping and pulling seen before; what howling and yelling when that coon was dead! He was a small elephant. We got seven coons that night, but this one was twice as large as any of the others, and took three times as long to capture.

On counting noses after hostilities were declared over, we found five of the combatants had disappeared and three of the dogs had turned tail for home, while the rest were all bitten in more than one place, one dog having his ear terribly lacerated.

On our return to the farm-house we found lots of "plum duff and sich other fixin's," which soon disappeared in our youthful anatomies.

Many such nights did we spend in those by-gone days.

Did we really enjoy them more than we do later sports, or is the youthful mind more susceptible of keen enjoyment?

THE KENNEL.

Dog owners are requested to send for publication the earliest possible notices of whelps, sales, names claimed, presentations and deaths in their kennels, in all instances writing plainly names of sire and dam and of grandparents, colors, dates and breed.

Mr. J. C. Nattrass (Seattle) has sold to Mr. Eugene J. Roy (San Francisco) an Irish red setter dog, Shaun Rhue, whelped May 18th, 1889, by Nat. Glencho (Glencho—Maid)—Red Fanny (Smutt—Magg).

The sale of a red setter to Mr. Roy by Mr. Nattrass noted elsewhere, strengthens the Roy Kennel materially. He now owns good dogs from the two notable Red Setter Kennels of the Coast, those of Mr. Mattrass and Mr. Truman.

Readers will regret to learn that Mr. D. C. Bergundthal, of Indianapolis, is walking in the shadow of a great grief, his daughter, May, having died a short time ago. The young lady was of strong character and marked genius, particularly in a musical way, and her father, than whom no truer, more manly man lives, will suffer pangs more bitter than any mere bodily infliction.

"Thames Tattler," an English correspondent of Turf Field and Farm writes: I am pleased to see that Mr. William Graham's decisions at San Francisco were, on the whole, well received. I can give my word for it, there is not a sounder judge in England than Billy. He is cute to a fault on dogs, and when you do the gentleman from Belfast there is only one other, and he one from a reputed warmish quarter. Mr. Graham is acknowledged here on all hands as having had an excellent insight into the qualifications of dogs, in fact, he knows what a perfect animal should be as well as most men."

In Cynopolis, a town of ancient Egypt, instead of muzzling dogs they used to worship them with much pomp and ceremony. Anubis, the remarkable Egyptian dog deity, or "Genius" of Doggishness, had priests and temples devoted to his service; but the members of the particular Executive Committee of the London County Council which deals with animals and their diseases, as they affect the public health, evidently have never been to Cynopolis, and look upon Anubis as a mythological nuisance. The committee has called public attention to the fact, or the reputed fact, that in the first five months in the year twenty-two rabid dogs have been dispatched in the streets of London and they observe that this circumstance, if fully established, would show that there has been a "sudden increase" of dog madness in the metropolis.

In discussing the comparative merits of English and American bred greyhounds, Dr. Van Hummel, of Kansas City make this point: "In England for many years past the greater part of coursing has been done in the inclosed parks. Now the largest of these parks is 700 yards long by 400 wide. The hare is shot out at one end and at 80 yards the dogs are slipped. The hare is going like a flash, the dog knows it must be quick, fast work or none. It is now only a flash, turn or two, kill or escape. Thus these dogs have been bred for generations entirely for speed. The only dogs patronized in the stud are those that can lead to the hare. Horse breeding is getting to the same point not only in England, but in America. Where are your Lexingtons now, since the short dash races are in voge? No more four miles and repeat, but five-eights of a mile dash. No, for the English dogs we must breed a different rabbit. They don't want any of those three-mile fellows in the high altitude of this western country.

Pointer Club of America.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—At the regular meeting of the Pointer Club of America, held July 1st, in the rooms of the American Kennel Club, 44 Broadway, New York, the following well-known gentlemen were elected members: Dr. J. A. Hartmann, Latrobe, Pa.; Col. C. H. Odell, Gen. T. N. Logan, Mr. Thomas H. Terry, New York; A. C. Waddell, Kansas City, Mo.; W. B. Meares, Jr., Hillsboro, N. C.; H. B. Owen, Richmond, Va.; Worthington Hoyt, Cleveland, Ohio.

After deliberate consideration and much discussion, the Stonehenge standard for pointers, was declared to be good enough for adoption by the club, and it was so ordered. (President Wise offered to supply a $7 50 copy to any one who applies in time.) Motion made by Mr. Anthony, seconded by Mr. Heath and carried as above.

Dr Rowe has been requested to furnish written terms under which competition shall be invited for the cup (value $100) donated to the club by the doctor last February.

The terms will appear in print in an early issue of the sporting papers.

President Wise appointed Messrs. F. R. Hitchcock, J. L. Anthony, and G. Muss Arnolt a sub-committee to prepare plans for the distribution of such prizes as may be offered by and through the Pointer Club for the coming season. A Produce Stake was discussed, intended for puppies whelped after a fixed date, value $100 to $200 cash, also several other prizes for bench and field merit. The prospects are very flattering for a liberal prize list under the auspices of the club.

The members will be invited to vote upon the selection of six gentlemen to be recommended by the club to bench show committees as proper persons to judge pointers at shows. It is intended to have an avowed "pointer man" judge pointers, if the members so elect. Blanks will be prepared and forwarded by the Secretary.

Many other matters of importance to the pointer were discussed and after a very successful meeting it was adjourned until Aug. 20th at the same place, when reports of different committees will be received.

The report of the treasurer was read and accepted, showing the club to be in a prosperous condition financially with the annual dues for 1889, now payable, for which a notice will be sent.

Membership is increasing rapidly and a cordial invitation is extended to all lovers of the pointer to become enrolled before the busy season opens.

GEO. W. LARUE, Sec. and Treas.

To Field Trial Men.

The recent destruction of Bakersfield by fire has undoubtedly given rise to speculation among the members of the Pacific Coast Field Trial Club as to whether they could find any accommodations in January. To meet any such queries, and to give assurance to any doubting ones, we addressed the President of the Knights of the Trigger, Hon D. M. Pyle, and also Mr. W. E. Houghton, asking them about prospects. Mr. Pyle replies as follows:

"BAKERSFIELD, July 13, 1889.

"We are burned out, but not a bit disheartened or discouraged. Not a house of any kind left on thirteen blocks, and not a business house in Bakersfield. Leonard's stable did not burn, and the brewery did not burn.

"The leading question naturally is, What will we do for the trials? I know of no way but to fix up some large house near the grounds to be hunted, provide cooks, and board ourselves. The town will be rebuilt, but perhaps not enough to accommodate all, We, the Knights, will have a talk over the matter some day soon and see what the prospect is. Our property was insured for $500, I think. I think birds will be abundant this year. D. M. PYLE."

From Mr. Houghton comes the following characteristic note, bristling with aggressive energy:—

BAKERSFIELD, June 16, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—The citizens of Bakersfield appreciate the thoughtful notice of our recent disaster which appeared in your last issue. We are self sustaining, but such considerate words and such expressions of confidence do us lots of good and help to nerve those who have lost heavily up to more vigorous attempts to rehabilitate themselves. The BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN has done very much for Bakersfield, and its kindliness is highly estimated. Everything is confusion yet, but a more cheerful lot of people than our residents never lived. Talk about energy. It is simply wonderful what has been accomplished in one week. Business is as lively to-day as it was before the fire. Everything in the business part of the town will be rebuilt in brick. No one is discouraged. While we will not be ready for town accommodations for field trials in January, it occurs to me that we might have a good "camp out." It would be something novel and more fun. What do you think of it?

W. E. HOUGHTON.

Mr. Pyle and Mr. Houghton seem to concur in thinking it advisable for the field trialers to "camp out" in some convenient house near the trial grounds.

For two years Mr Joe Bassford has wished to live in the large house on Section 17, one of the sections reserved for trial uses. His idea is to secure two or three good cooks, a waiter or two, an ample supply of groceries, dry and wet, and have meats furnished daily. The house is large enough to accommodate forty or fifty men. Good water is at hand. Plenty of stabling is adjacent. The scheme impresses us favorably, and we shall be pleased to have the opinions of those who will attend the trials about it. If a majority or many think well of the plan, the Secretary will arrange the details.

Death.

Mr. E. W. Briggs has lost by death a black and white pointer bitch by Climax—Roberta.

Mr. Geo. T. Allender recently annexed himself to a better half, and has removed to a fine place near Watsonville with his training kennel. His dogs are reported to be well and doing nicely in good handling.

Word recently came about the Don—Sall pointer sent to Japan by Mr. Wm. Schrieber. The dog has developed into a fine looking animal of rarely good full quality and is in use on woodcock. It is much admired by the circle of dignitaries in whose ownership it is. The Japanese seem gifted with natural aptitude in training all sorts of animals, and if they go in for sport it is not unlikely that their dogs will be given unusually good breaking.

Are Dogs Loafers?

"Every dog is either a born gentleman or a confirmed loafer," said a Long Island man who keeps a dozen or more canine pets and studies their habits with an interest that never flags. "There is not one of them that will work if he can avoid it. The only difference between the well-bred and genteel dog and the loafer in this respect is shown in the manner in which they support their idleness. The dog whose birth and connections entitle him to live without soiling his paws by labor knows his social position very well, and is not at all ashamed of the aimless life he leads. On the contrary, if, as occasionally happens, he is forced to perform some light task, his whole nature is lowered, and he goes about his uncongenial occupation in a half-hearted, perfunctory way, and evinces by his drooping ears and depressed tail that he keenly feels his degradation, and does not know what he had done to deserve it. He considers that his intelligent companionship, his unswerving fidelity and his sleepless vigilance in protecting his master's property when the heavier senses of humanity are steeped in slumber, should exempt him from vulgar toil, and be accepted as sufficient return for his board and lodging. As his owner usually agrees with him, the dog is not often asked to sacrifice what he regards as his birthright.

"The dog of loafing tendencies yields not a whit to his aristocratic brother in his detestation for toil, but he can not carry off his idleness with the same air of easy independence. He seems to think that his owners expect him to work for his living and he moves about in the family circle with an apologetic bearing; but there his subservience ends. Try to train him to the light but debasing treadmill employment of turning the wheel that works the mechanism by which the cream is made into butter, and you will be surprised to find how he will learn to distinguish churning day from the other six, and be conspicious by his absence while the dairy maid is doing his work.

"A dog's abhorrence of labor, hard or easy, can not be attributed to laziness, for he is not at all lazy. All animated nature shows no more active creature than he. Arouse him from his sleep in the coldest winter night, and call upon him to accompany you on any mission, and he will be delighted with the confidence you place in him and shrink from no discomfort or danger, It is clear to me that his hatred for toil is due to his innate gentility, and only when he is false to his natural instinct, and feels ashamed of his lifelong idleness, does he look and act like a loafer. It is not easy to teach a good dog tricks. He will not take kindly to them, for they are too much like work to accord with his tastes. Curs sometimes make good tricksters, but how often have you seen a Newfoundland or mastiff stand upon his ear or waltz on his hind legs.

"Well-bred dogs are like Indians. They are at all times ready and willing to hunt until they drop, or fight until they die; but the motto by which they seem to be guided is, 'Death before Drudgery.'"

Types of Men and Animals.

WRITTEN FOR THE BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN.

In animate nature there are types as distinctive in shape as to feature and resemblance as any in the vegetable kingdom are in form and coloring and odor. It did not require the study and theories of the early philosophers and scholastics to elucidate this; for they were much cramped in the opportunity. The school boy of the period knows more about the lion, the tiger, the camelopard and elephant, of the rhinoceros and hippopotamus, of the bear, leopard and hyena, of all the terrible wild beasts of the field and jungles of Asia and of Africa; of the Arctic and the Torrid zones, of the wildernesses of the entire American continent—north and south, and of the infinite globe, in short; knows much more than the trinity of greatest ancients—Socrates, Plato and Aristotle—ever divined of wild brute creation. None of their age of the world had more conception of the grizzly, which the Native Sons of the Golden West know all about, than the hosts of Israel led by Moses and Aaron, had of the cataracts of the Ganges, or of North American Indians. Accordingly those earliest inhabitants, the real original ancients we read of in profane history—not therefore "old cusses"—never discussed the theory of types in men and beasts, as so many are doing these days, whether for good or bad, or in spirit of self-contemplation and egotism, or in that of carping criticism of a rival, with ill-natured remark on everything an inch high and hour old.

There was some perception in the subject, however, in the age of Aristotle, for that pre-eminent philosopher and the founder of learning that has blossomed to ultimate good, to forecast the idea that in men and animals there are kindred types, leaving it to the experience and investigation of future ages to determine whether the prototypes were beasts or human, and which or whom were the natural consequences. He seemed to adopt Plato's bipeds, and either clad the male species in hair and bristles, and decorated the female in glossy soft fur or gorgeous feathers, or left all as he found them, to their tails and brutishness. Aristotle merely adverted to brutes and remotely hinted at what has blossomed into Darwin's ideal development of man—choose as one will from among the Simiadæ, the Cebidæ, the Lemuridæ, the Cynocephalous or the ferocious Troglodytes—monkeys, apes, chimpanzees, baboons and gorillas—and in man as he is, in savage and civilized life there are apparent examples of each of these, in face, features and natures. So it may be said that Aristotle struck a good lead for future philosophers to follow in. Until Cicero, it appears, no one of prominence got on the tail of Aristotle. In his boundless ambition to perfect himself in every language and all the learning that was in his way, the William M. Evarts, of the Rome of his time, while on his protracted visit to Athens and other seats of learning in Greece, picked up just enough of Aristotle's theory of types of men and animals to give acrid zest to his strong accusation against Piso. The elder Pliny, the Buffon of his period, was the big gun among naturalists, but there is no record that he ever caught on to Aristotle's idea, as Cicero apparently did. So, from Cicero down, through all the ages, bright and dark and very much mixed, until the equally bloody ages which first discovered gunpowder, and soon after discovered America, dawned to expand the knowledge of mankind about geography and wild beats, of savages and the wealth of new continents; until then not one dreamed of these in the philosophy of any of the Horatii of all the Old World.

It was Le Cat and Parnethy, in the sixteenth century, who aroused attention to the similarity in types of mankind and brute creation. But it was up-hill work. They had few disciples; none that were enthusiastic on the subject. As a matter of fact, men had little to learn by copying from brutes in that age, and the Netherlanders—who put Nanning Kopperzoon to the torture, lasting through weeks, until exhausted he gave away, as Motley narrates the event, had won the champion belt of blood and cruelty from the Duke of Alva, in invention of atrocities, and as good as proved the apt answer of the little girl to her teacher, that "a dumb beast is a brute, but man is a perfect brute," the learned and unhappy Swiss Zimmerman resuscitated the idea and formulated a theory thereupon. After him came Lavater, the dear friend of Goethe to impart to it intelligent comprehension. Lavater's doctrine embraced physiognomy. He paralleled the features of men and of animals, drafted them, placed them in juxtaposition, compared them, contrasted them, brought out the strong points of each, and showed the weaker peculiarities. He portrayed the resemblances and the differences; he treated of and discussed them He dealt with the natures of men and dumb brutes, to the end that in instances the praise, if any was due, was to the brute without speech. In so far his theory was too manifestly correct to become popular. It could be explained, quite as employed counsel attempt to make it appear that De Quincy was right in classing murder as a fine art, or as dynamiters celebrate the elevation of the host by blowing up the premises. But the dumb brutes were dumb, and only the blatant brutes could make the worse appear the better cause. Lavater's death came before he could establish his theory as a science, as he aimed to do. It was of the faces of types that he wrote—often an unclean subject, and his was a clean soul. His dumb brutes were silent in their affectionate gratitude; from the others came

A few days ago the report came that Robert Bonner had offered $65,000 for Axtell, the great three-year-old trotting stallion, owned by Mr. Williams of Iowa, who declined the offer. Since then the statement has appeared that Robert Steele, of Philadelphia, raised the offer to $75,000, which was likewise refused, and now it is stated that Frederick Barry of Chicago, has increased the offer to $80,000, but this was also refused by Mr. Williams. Instances like this sufficiently answer the question, "Does it pay to breed trotters?" The easy road to millions is smoothly paved from the breeding farm which produces a score of horses of the kind, and intelligent high breeding will command the market.

Goodwin's Official Stake Entries.

We are under obligations to the publishers, Messrs. Goodwin Bros., for a copy of the Official Stake Entries for 1889, 1890, and 1891 of the stakes of the Monmouth Park, Jerome Park, the Coney Island, New York, Brooklyn and St. Louis Jockey Clubs, and Saratoga and Nashville Clubs, with a complete index, dates of declaration, closing of stakes, scale of weights, dates of meetings, list of yearlings, and other important matters. The volume is one that is a necessary adjunct to a racing stable. It is bound in half calf and can be obtained by addressing the publishers at 241 Broadway, New York.

British Yacht Racing.

Since the destination of Lord Dunraven to contest in American waters with American yachts for the America cup, through the action of the Royal Yacht Club, who control in the matter, less interest is taken in the performances of the Valkyrie in sailing against other British yachts in British waters, by people on this side of the Atlantic, but it is somewhat interesting to note that Lord Dunraven's costly craft could stand no chance with the crack American yachts, the Puritan and the Mayflower, leaving out of the reckoning altogether the peerless Volunteer, which so easily outsailed the Thistle two years ago. It happens that, notwithstanding the situation, Lord Dunraven is still desirous to bring over his yacht and try in friendly contest with the New York Yacht Club. He will receive hearty welcome and fair play. But his defeat can be safely predicted. Lately the Valkyrie has been beaten by the Irex and the Yarana, at home, and these defeats signify that the second and third rate American yachts would prove a match for her. It is mainly in the build, in which America holds supremacy of the world—as she has held it since the America gained it in British waters in 1851, and will maintain it. The superior skill of American sailing masters and crews is also to be considered. The America cup is absolutely American property—to have and to hold forever.

Death of Dr. C. C. Mason.

It is with great sorrow that we have to announce the demise of Carnot Courtland Mason, M. D., President of the Chico Fair Association, which occured on Monday night last. There are very few who have visited the annual fairs at Chico for the past twelve years but what were acquainted with the gentleman, his earnest work for the Association commending him to those who were brought into business relations with the society. His was not only a local reputation, for in the Masonic fraternity he was known throughout the length and breadth of the State, and at the last annual meeting of the Grand Commandery he was elected Right Grand Commander, in addition to which he was also the Deputy Grand High Priest of the Grand Chapter Royal Arch Masons. Dr. Mason has always affiliated with the Republican party, of which he was an honored member, and for many years was the Butte County representative on the State Central Committee. Of a genial disposition, he endeared himself to all with whom he came in contact, and there are many in all classes of life that will miss his cheery smile.

Maori and Ten Broeck's Time.

It is to be regretted that the timing of Maori in the one-mile race at Chicago, July 12th, was not accurate, and that so much difference of opinion was expressed in relation to it by others who held timing watches and are considered careful and practised timers. The official timers made it 1:39 4-5, or one-fifth of a second above Ten Broeck's 1:39¾—which has stood since 1877 the fastest mile ever run, officially declared, at Louisville—Ten Broeck then five years old, and carrying 110 pounds. In the case of Maori, other timers on the track made the time vary from 1:39½ down as low as 1:39 1-5—the electric timing-clock making it 1:39¼. The difference is important, as it involves the maintenance of the record to the credit of Ten Broeck, and if the different timers were inaccurate, takes it from Maori, who was entitled to it. Yet the record must stand as proclaimed, and if it is in Maori to lower it, the performance has still to be made. It is a great thing for Maori as it is, but the glory of having beaten the time of Ten Broeck is too dearly coveted by any turfman to uncomplainingly submit to the inexorable ruling. It is stated that the race was run under the scale of weights which Ten Broeck carried, and $1,000 extra was added in the event his record was lowered. The extra sum was a material consideration, although to the owners of Maori it was regarded as of less consequence than the great triumph of beating Ten Broeck's time would have been. The occurrence demonstrates the importance of absolute accuracy in the timing watches and the infallability of those who hold them. In these days of record-breaking and great performances it is essential that care be taken to assure against the slightest fraction of error, by comparison and test beforehand, both as relates to the watches and the timers. One-fifth of a second is almost indefinable to even an acute sense, but in racing it may determine a good deal of money and much fame to the racer.

State Fair Premium List.

The Premium List of the State Fair for this year—the thirty-sixth annual fair of the State Agricultural Society—is excellent in its arrangement with the view to the encouragement of the many and varied industries of California. None are neglected; all are embraced and receive notice and the measure of help for which annual fairs are intended.

The sum of $50,000 is appropriated for premiums, and besides are gold medals, the awards to the more meritorious exhibitions, which enlist a pride not measured by money; special premiums for articles not enumerated in the general list, and a special gold medal for the excelling display in the pavilion.

The fair book broadly circulated by the officers of the society make notification that no entry for exhibition in any of the departments will be received from any who are not members, either life or annual, and this is a wise and essential rule. The inconsiderable payment of five dollars makes the annual member; life members are enrolled upon payment of fifty dollars. When it is appreciated that the payment of five dollars entitles the person to a temporary membership, during which he is allowed to enter for exhibition whatever is appropriate for competition, with the opportunity of the handsome and valuable medals of gold, of suitable medals of silver, the coin premiums from $3 to $100, and the diplomas—any of which are, in degree, testimonials of superiority or surpassing excellence—the fee of membership will be accounted reasonable, and none will refrain from paying it in return for the greater benefits, the award and the personal satisfaction which inures.

Fairs cannot subsist without substance, and Agricultural Fairs are the most beneficial and most gratifying, pleasurable and compensating to the people. Money is the substance which is imperatively needed. It must come from the willing among the people, by contribution either voluntary and gratuitous or by regulated means. The State, as agent and dispenser for the people, appropriates a stated amount for annual expenditure, and the people in their individual capacity, through the appointed officers of the State Fair and the several county fairs, take care of all else to the making these annual fairs successful, with the aid and good services of the community. As President Green, of the State Society, remarks in the printed premium list for this year: "The success of the coming fair depends largely upon the manner in which the public patronize it. Bear in mind that it takes money paid in to enable the Board to pay out premiums."

The president carefully states the rules and regulations which govern the fair in the exhibition of articles and awards. Persons who contemplate participation in these will do well to observe these rules and regulations. "No entry will be received from any not a member; application for space must be made to the secretary one month before the opening of the fair, and exhibitors must attend to the entering and registry of the articles for exhibition, with the entry clerk of the particular department, by September 9th, or, if for the park, by September 12th; no animal or article can compete in more than one class, or for more than one premium, unless exception is made in the schedule; all exhibitors are cautioned to personally attend to the matter of entry and of allotted place in the fair for their exhibition with the superintendent of the proper department."

Good attention has been devoted by the managers to the live stock premium list—horses, cattle, sheep and swine, asses and goats, of the various breeds. In horses it will make fine competition—by thoroughbreds, standard trotters, roadsters, coach and carriage horses, fancy teams, draft horses, horses of all work, and saddle horses. The premiums are, all through, incentive to competitorship, and will bring exhibitors from every part of the State. The year itself is one of enlarged and better encouragement.

The sales of California bred horses in the East, in the great New York market, now chief in the whole country, for pedigrees and performers as well as for prices, during the present year, have more assured breeders in California of the large profit there is in the pursuit. This is to the proof that California is the most favorable State for breeding superior horses.

Climate and soil are alike congenial to the best production—for speed, for endurance, and for that entirety of form, bone, sinew, vital organism and feet, which assures the complete racer, the highest type of trotter, and the soundest for every purpose.

The Directors of the State Fair could have done no better work of preparation for the coming event than that which they have done in the arrangement of the premiums for all kinds of live stock. Already the indications are that the State Fair will have throughout the most numerous attendance ever witnessed—of our own State people, and of visitors from other Pacific States and the whole coast, embracing British Columbia and Mexico; from the countries of the orient and the islands of the Pacific; from the States eastward and the Canadian Dominion, and from the nations and empires of Europe; in brief, all the world and his wife will be at the State Fair in September.

To facilitate communication and accommodate exhibitors and visitors on this coast, the Southern Pacific Railroad Company have generously provided the means and conveniences of transportation. It is on a plan of expedition and reduced expense. Articles for exhibition will be forwarded from all points free of charge if only exhibited and not sold; and all fruit for exhibition will be absolutely free of charge to the exhibitor. The company make easy rates for excursion trains also, by which to enable the people to visit the fair. It is a broad and generous policy, and it will vastly aid to fill up the fair every day, to gratify the people, and redound to the good of the State. The company has done nobly.

Letter from "Ab" Stemler.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Yours of the 12th duly received, but I have been so busy getting things into shape since my return, that an answer has been neglected until now. I had a most pleasant trip, saw the Suburban and American Derby. The increased interest in racing is something wonderful. At Chicago, Brewster sent 21,000 single tickets out to the track, Derby Day thinking that would be sufficient. They gave out before 1 o'clock, and the officers were compelled to stand outside the gates and take the money which came in shovelfulls. It was estimated that 40,000 people viewed the Derby. Values in race horses show a remarkable gain in the past few years, an animal that would not bring $1500 a few years ago, can be sold for nearly as many thousand now. Racing has a great hold on the people, and the associations are getting wealthy, still at the same time will do everything to accommodate the horsemen. If you find you are outclassed in the big events, they will make up "overnight" races, adding $1000 to any kind of a race.

No purses are now given at Monmouth less than $1 000. These are "free" purses. The new organization at Westchester will give no free purse less than $2,000.

The great value of stakes run for, offers sufficient inducements to guarantee honest racing. The jockey's fees are getting so valuable as to warrant them in doing straight work; then again, the class of men that are getting into racing precludes the last shadow of doubt as to their motives. They are the class that run their horses for the noble sport there is in it, and not as a matter of strictly business, as in other walks of life. Then again, the vast benefit to be derived in the hereafter for breeding purposes is more potential than is money.

No, there is little or no jobbing of any kind at these big meetings. The patronage they receive insures this, as the public are not fooled very long in this business.

The "bookies" are not reaping a very rich harvest this year, as the betting public now make a study of the performences of starters, and are as able to judge as the smartest of "bookies" at Monmouth. These are from 60 to 75, and they make "Rome howl," I tell you.

Racing is a fascinating and growing sport, and when conducted properly is a most pleasant pastime. What a great place San Francisco would be for a race meeting if the proper funds and management were available?

I will close by giving you a list of horses in training.

When some one whispered to the colonel that he was a gelding the Kentucky gentleman was more than embarrassed.

CORRESPONDENCE.

The Roadster Again.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Permit me a little of your valuable space—not to use a column without any point, but first to ask Folio to come out of cover and show himself; next to ask him not to put expressions to me that I do not use. I said nothing about breeding dunghill to dunghill. Keep within the bounds of courtesy, and next to that "awful blunder" that the Board made in not making the restriction that Folio would make—I will not quote, as it is too scattering and long drawn out.

The Board doubtless thought that some breeder might endeavor to breed up by using a thoroughbred, another by a half thoroughberd, some one an Orloff, another a Cleveland Bay, and another the "Standard" horse, and they left the roadster class free to all of those and more, that they may enter the results in competition. The premium list is not to cramp breeders to one idea, but to stimulate various ones, and let success demonstrate the best. There are nine rules under which horses may be registered standard.

The Board does not restrict entries for premiums to those competent under one of those rules—breeders have been trying to breed roadster various ways. I do not think the science is fixed enough that the Board should by a restriction confine breeders of roadsters to one rule, or be barred from competition for the State's premiums.

The Standard class has as long a list of chances as any class in the world. They ought to be satisfied, and I believe all but a very few are. G. W. HANCOCK.

Pacific Coast Trotting Association.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Your letter and circulars of recent date, in reference to organization of a State Trotting Association, were received.

At a meeting of Directors of District No. 18, held since receipt of said circulars, I presented your letter and circulars to the Board. The proposition to form a State Trotting Association was favorably received.

My own opinion is strongly in favor of the organization you propose. It would admit of more systematic effort in connection with the whole subject of trotting, and of trotting horses, than is now possible.

The following citizens of Inyo County will be likely to take an interest in your proposed movement—viz., Robert O'Neal, Bishop; David Olds, Round Valley; I. H. Mulholland, Independence; W. S. Enos, Independence; Gustave Sanger and Ed. Crocker, Big Pine. Yours respectfully,

C. MULHOLLAND, Sec. Agricultural District, No. 18.
INDEPENDENCE, INYO COUNTY, CAL., July 8, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—I am in receipt of your circular on the subject of forming a Pacific Coast Trotting Association, and note that you ask for a personal opinion on the same. Personally, then, I will say that I do not take kindly to there being so many "parent" associations; one fountainhead and then several districts, if necessary, but all reporting to the one place would seem to me to be the proper thing. I regretted very much to see the formation of the "American Trotting Association" as against the National, and the formation of the "Pacific" would simply demonstrate that every community could set up for itself, ad libitum. Older and wiser heads will doubtless address you at length. Very truly, FRANCIS POPE.
HELENA, MONTANA, July 8, 1889.

EDITOR BREEDER AND SPORTSMAN:—Having been solicited to give my views upon the feasibility of a seperate Trotting Association for this coast, and the severance of our connection with both the American and the National, I beg leave to say that I am certainly in favor of such movement.

1st. The great distance that lies between us and the Eastern States renders a quick decision upon a mooted question impossible.

2nd. It is unreasonable to suppose that a body of men 3,000 miles away, with complaints by the score from every quarter of the United States, could or would arrive at the "true inwardness" of a complaint with the accuracy of a home Board.

3rd. We pay considerable tribute to the two Eastern Associations that in some respects are unnecessary and in others quite absurd. As an instance of this I may say that in the fee of $50 exacted by the Eastern Associations for changing the name of a horse is ridiculous. What reason can be urged for this stiff figure I am unable to imagine. A fee of five or ten dollars would answer the purpose quite as well, and would be enough. I am in favor of a home Association, and think that everything is favorable to such a change, and that nothing of consequence can be urged against it.

I am sincerely,

W. B. SANBORN,
Lessee Agricultural Park Track.

The Story of Axtell.

Four years ago Mr. C. W. Williams, of Chicago, but now of Independence, Iowa, had four mares which he wished to breed to first-class stallions so he put them on the cars and they were shipped to Kentucky. Arriving at Lexington the mares were sent to a livery stable and Mr. Williams began looking about him, for the very best stallions, standing in the neighborhood.

After looking them all over carefully he selected William L. owned by "George Wilkes" Simmons, as the proper mate for his mare Lou by Mambrino Boy. Another of the Mambrino Boy mares was sent to the embrace of Jay Bird, while a third one was conveyed to the harem of Onward. The result of all this careful calculating is three horse colts. As yet only two of them have had a chance to show what they can do, but the performances of the pair prove that the judgment displayed by Mr. Williams was of the best. Axtell, 2:15½, and that repeated twice within a few days, stamps the son of William L. as being a phenomenal colt. However a second of the produce need not be sneezed at, for Allerton by Jay Bird, has also shown to the world that he is endowed with great speed, for on the same day that Axtell broke the record, this one carried off the first money in a field of all aged horses, getting a record of 2:24¾. The Onward colt is still to hear from, but surely Mr. Williams must be satisfied with the honors already gained, for the fortunate possession of two such colts as the above is credit enough for any one person, unless he desires to own the earth. Mr. Williams, it may be stated, has placed a price on his horse, and he says no one can buy him less than $100,000.

Can any of our readers furnish the following information: How is Lady Burns bred? She is dam of Baby Mime 2:27, and supposed to be by Black Boy; he is by McCracken's Black Hawk.

Chico.

Is there any such thing as a "record" for a hose team "on this coast," running 100 yards, getting water, etc? They say here that No. 1 team, which ran on the 4th inst., lowered the coast record for the above named distance. I never heard of any such record. If you know anything about it, please let us know in your next issue.

Answer.—We do not know what the coast record is. Probably some of our readers can inform us what the fastest time is for the distance.

Subscriber.

The question respecting the breeding of "the Sawyer horse" has elicited the following from Mr. Tyler Beach of San Jose:

I notice in your issue of the 13th inst. an inquiry as to the breeding of a stallion known as the Sawyer horse. We knew him very well here, and know something of his breeding He was sired by Stockbridge chief; first dam, San Jose Belle; second dam by Red Bill, third dam unknown here. San Jose Belle by Easton's David Hill.

And also the following:

"Your correspondent W. P., in issue of July 13th, wishes to know pedigree of Sawyer horse. If it was the one I knew, he was called Sawyer's Hambletonian, and was by Whipple's Hambletonian, and his dam was Old Diana by Vermont Hambletonian. He was bred by Stephen Whipple at San Mateo, and was sold to Mr. Leander Sawyer, who resided near San Mateo. Mr. Sawyer owned another stallion, but I think this Hambletonian is the one inquired after. HENRY VOORMAN,

Nothing Like Strictness.

At Ascot, England, in the Fernhill Stakes, the stewards called upon Rickaby for an explanation of his riding of Paloma, upon hearing which they exonerated him from any dishonest intentions, but cautioned him against pulling up his horse so rapidly. The stewards also cautioned Mr. Hammond, the owner, against tying a jockey down with orders not to be second or third; and further drew the attention of all handicappers to the race.

"Record Day," a new institution that will be inaugurated in Boston, Mass., next fall, will be a day set apart for the owners of stallions, brood-mares and colts who desire to start their horses against "time" for the purpose of obtaining a fast or standard record. The affair will be under the management of the editor of the Spirit of the Hub, Boston, and will be held at one of the tracks of that city.

the discordant utterances of vicious malevolence and menacing ejaculation, but to the blush of his theory.

Following Lavater have come others, different in the exact pseudo-science in detail, yet similar in ultimate bearings. From physiognomy has proceeded craniology, or phrenology, as it is now termed. It treats of heads rather than faces. The delineating and distinguishing types exist, describe and make known all there is in the theory. Gall and Spurzheim promulgated the later idea; to Coombs it owes its universal spread and introduction. Fowler and Wells and numerous followers have since, within the last half century, pervaded the world with it. But what good comes of it? After all, the best that can be done with either physiognomy or phrenology is to entertain audiences and tickle individuals with the praises of their features and bumps, of their virtues and their powers, of their shining qualities and remarkable prowess, and all that. The costly charts are written out; the subject goes away a fresh flushed biped. The "professor" has given him a new grand diploma, wonderful in its descriptions and altogether amazing. But it is similar to a spell-mark; no one will regard it as of any value. It tells of brilliant intellect, great force of character, extraordinary nerve, captivating presence, manly qualities, charming conversation, etc., etc. As a fact, the puffed-up is of the type of Tittlebat Titmouse, or of the little fyse that annoys all, everlastingly barking and showing its teeth, but quick to run and hide at the sight of one of Lindo's catchers-up of vagabond canines.

There is, however, a sound basis of doctrine or belief in this matter of types of men and animals, cognate and similar. There are the types leonine and elephantine, of tiger and jackal, grizzly and coyote, wolf and skunk, bull-dog and chipmunk, mastiff and hare, greyhound and weasel, terrier and turn-spit, blood-hound, poodle and pug. These types are found in men and in women. Human nature is fully marked with them. It requires neither the study of physiognomy to point out the types and symbols, nor the feeling of bumps to find the semblance. The skilled observer is a better authority than the professional "professor," who is oftentimes a fraud.

To estimate the individual according to the animal of which his face is the type, will generally be found correct, if not unerring. Infirmity or accident may cause erroneous estimate, but rarely will it otherwise fail. The marks and points are as trustworthy in animals. Some men are gifted in this order of observation, discrimination and judgment. They are the sagacious among men, the keenest and skilled of the turf, the expert in hunting dogs, good judges of animal natures and qualities.

This faculty is not a science, it is natural endowment. It can be cultivated and improved by application, but it cannot be thoroughly taught or imparted, and only with those naturally gifted does it develop to much effect. It enables the possessor of the faculty fairly and with considerable accuracy to estimate the nature of the person, or of an animal—especially of the two most intelligent of domesticated qualities, and of which men make companions, as it were—the horse and the dog. In this respect the gift is valuable, but it is not a science, and cannot be learned by art of teaching. Professors who profess to teach it are humbugs. As well essay to teach the dumb to speak and the deaf to hear.

Distemper at Shows and How to Prevent It.

Sir Everett Millais, R. A., famous as a painter and also distinguished as an all around sportsman of rare ability, has given considerable thought to the causation of and prophylactics against that peculiarly malignant distemper which too often runs riot through the puppy classes at dog shows. In his opinion there is probably not a single exhibitor or breeder who has not made acquaintance with the disease either by personal loss after showing in a class provided for puppies, or having shown has brought the disease back to his kennels. He thus yearly pays the heavy penalty for having ventured to exhibit once, owing to the fact that the kennels have become infected, and try as he may he cannot rid of it. We cannot shut our eyes to the plain, unvarnished truth, that the annual death-rate in puppies is enormous, and increases instead of diminishing. That year by year we lose the best of our young stock, and that the very shows which have as their basis the improvements of our breeds, whilst doing what was originally intended, on the other hand pick off our best and decimate for the time the breeder's kennels of its young stock.

Mr. Millais believes that the time has arrived when exhaustive consideration should be given to the cause or causes of distemper since upon those questions depends the action as to precautions and safe guards against the disease.

Unhappily upon this point an enormous amount of unreasoning belief is brought to bear. Were it better understood by the general run of the public who exhibit at our annual shows, we should hear less of distemper, and long ere this steps would have been taken to guard against its unwelcome intrusion. But as it is not in the power of the masses to obtain this knowledge, and it must therefore be secured and put into form to reach popular comprehension by specialists, either through analogies from observations upon human subjects, or through special studies upon distempered dogs in infirmaries. It has now become practically impossible to exhibit puppies at any of the large shows without getting the disease and taking it home to the kennels. A bitter experience has taught so much to exhibitors, that puppy classes have come to be looked upon with disfavor and are miserably supported. Distemper, Mr. Millais affirms, "is nothing less than one of those diseases which come under the class known as zymotic, and without for the moment entering into the pathological side of the question, can affirm from my own knowledge of the subject, which any competent veterinary surgeon will bear witness to, that distemper, as we call it, is due to a peculiar poison, which having once found entrance into the system of the dog, causes by its action a specific fever."

He is undoubtedly correct in his hypothesis, although the specific germ which gives rise to the trouble has not as yet been segregated. If the fever of distemper could run its natural course, it would not produce the extraordinarily high death rate which arises from it. Unhappily distemper brings in its train a series of complications, some one of which death generally follows. Spontaneous generation of the specific virus of distemper in the living body is impossible and for that reason all so-called nostrums professing to insure immunity from the disease are worthless for the purpose for which they are sold, although some of them do palliate the severity of the trouble when it has developed.

The authoritative professional dictum as to non-spontaniety should be generally accepted and should remove at once and for all time the common belief that bad feeding, fear or excitement can give rise to distemper, although it is well to keep in mind, that all of them may predispose to the reception and cultivation of the virus.

Distemper can only result from a living animal being brought into the presence of the disease, for the virus spoken of is nothing less than a living micro-organism, either of an animal or a vegetable nature. Its seed is sown by diseased animals, and reaped in those in which it has found a soil suitable for its cultivation. So exhausting does this first crop appear to the ground on which it is reared, that very seldom do we find a second, and it is for this reason, that we rarely meet with a second attack of distemper after the first.

Distemper stands in the same category as measles, small pox and like diseases.

If you expose a puppy suffering from this disease or recovering, you cause an outbreak at once in those for the time being living and breathing in the same atmosphere. Why is this so? The living seeds of the disease are given forth by the suffering animal—they float in the air—they are speedily inhaled again by the previously healthy, in whose air passages, &c., the germs find a suitable field for their reprodutiion, and this they do at such an incredibly rapid rate that we soon have from the original germs inhaled blossoming-plants, more puppies down with distemper, and fresh victims in the future.

Nor is exposure to contact with a dog which is suffering from distemper absolutely necessary, to infect other animals.

Experience shows that the germs can be brought thither by an old dog; emanating from an infected kennel, it may be carried in the hound-glove, in the dog-basket, by man himself on his own person and contact with fencing and kennels used by diseased animals. In fact, the disease may be imported by any living or dead object that has come in contact with it, excepting those which are deadly to the living germ.

Still another cause for the enormous spread of distemper at recent shows may possibly be found in the practice which has recently arisen of having the dogs benched on portable benches, which, with feeding vessels, etc., are taken down and removed for use in other shows, some benching being thus continually in use There is no doubt that thorough disinfection of the portable benches would destroy all germs of disease, but nothing less than the most thorough application of germicides should be enforced. That benches and feeding dishes can carry contagious matter has been demonstrated by Mr Millais, who inserted spiculae of wood in the nostrils of distempered puppies, and then placed the splinters in a shed, such as would ordinarily be used for the storing of benching when not in use. Some of the pieces of wood were left untouched; some were merely wiped, and some were thoroughly disinfected. It was impossible to communicate distemper from the disinfected splinters. A month after the splinters were placed in the shed distemper was produced by contact with those which had been merely wiped, and two months after, the disease resulted when the unwiped splinters were placed near puppies.

The experiment is conclusive, and should insure the utmost care on the part of bench show clubs to have the benching immediately free from the spunings of dogs previously shown upon it.

The question of inoculation for distemper is one which should be given prominence. If, as Mr. Millais and others believe, the germ can be cultivated artificially, there seems ground for the belief that by inoculating puppies while in health the disease can be produced under such conditions as to insure its control, and that the proposed system will operate to prevent a second attack there can be little doubt.

It is practically impossible to formulate any rule which can operate to exclude all diseased dogs. Even when exhibitors are perfectly honorable the puppies which they exhibit and which show, even to keen professional eyes, no evidence of disease, may nevertheless carry with them the virus. Perhaps a sufficient rule would be to exclude puppies from shows. If such a rule is not made, the good sense of exhibitors will undoubted soon operate to make them withhold entries of all young dogs of the least worth.

ROD.

Contrary to expectation, the fishing along Marin County shore on Sunday last was very poor.

Reports say that the largest catch in the vicinity of Tiburon did not weigh over five pounds.

It is expected that the weather will modify during the next few days and that good fishing may be expected in the near future.

Stanley Post, the veteran fisherman, has just returned from a trip to Mendocino County, and reports excellent trout fishing in nearly all the creeks up there.

A party of athletes belonging to the C. A. A. C. intend going to Tiburon to-morrow, and the one catching the largest number of fish will receive a prize.

The Flight of Flying Fish.

The Biological Society, of Washington, has devoted much study to the habits of the flying fish, and especially as to their manner of flight, but without satisfactory determination. The following testimony from a voyager who seems to have had an unusual opportunity for investigation, is lucid and convincing, and therefore valuable in settling the question under examination. The writer says: "An excellent opportunity of observing how flying fish fly was afforded me during a six days' calm lately when crossing the Bay of Bengal. I watched day by day some hundreds rise under the bows of the ship. The water surface was a glassy calm. As each fish rose it spread its wings at once, apparently beating the surface with them two or three strokes before they steadied out. I say apparently, for it was not a definite beat so much as a struggle to rise. The tail which, of course, under water was in rapid motion to escape from the ship, now gave ten or a dozen rapid beats, which could be counted by the ripples on the still surface, and the fish was off in aerial flight.

As each fish lost the impetus of the first rise which generally happened at about forty yards, the binocular showed us the anal fins, which had till now been fully extended, drooping to feel the water. As soon as the surface was felt the tail was introduced and five or six smart stokes, also indicated by ripples, brought the impetus up again and carried the fish about another thirty yards, when another droop sent it on again, and so forth, some of the older fish traveling in this way 400 to 500 yards. The younger fish frequently fell awkwardly in this attempt to regain impetus. When waves are running it requires a clever fish to gain impetus by a few judicious strokes on the crest of a wave, and many a fish tumbles over in the attempt.

I once saw a fish rise close to the ship's quarter, and it flew parallel with the ship, pursued below by a dolphin or bonita. The latter followed every sway of the flying fish, keep almost under it. At the first dip of the tail the pursuer made a dart forward, but missed it and again dogged its prey by keeping just under it. On the second dip the tail went into the pursuer's mouth, and there was an end of the flyer. It always struck me that it seemed a strain on the fish to keep the wings extended.

CATTLE.

As a practical issue for cattle growers a further decrease in cattle supplies seems to be desirable. Every cattle owner should appoint himself a committee of one to devise ways and means to reduce the available supplies. He should consider his own herd with a view to cutting it down in quantity and increasing it in quality. If he does not, if we all do not, who can tell the length of time required by nature's laws to do this very thing?

A reasonable reduction in numbers coupled with careful selection, is a good policy for each individual cattle raiser to pursue on his own account. The idea is to relieve the market just as soon as possible and to prevent an accumulation around the gates of the markets. When a man spays a heifer he does a good thing, when he sells a calf to a butcher he does better, when he reserves his steers and sells his cows to the canners he does as well as he can for to-day and holds the best stock for the future. With a large herd there are ways to decrease production without much present loss, and with a small stock it is much easier. The general rule in time of prosperity is to raise the young stock and sell the old, to-day the programme should be reversed. Let every stockman appoint himself a committee of one to decrease cattle production on his own estate, and he will find means to benefit himself and the industry at large.

The Loco Weed.

The loco, or crazy weed, is supposed to make horses and cattle crazy. We recently had a letter from a correspondent who said his horse was crazy from eating loco weed. Prof. L. E. Seyre, of the Kansas university, says of the weed: "So fully have I been impressed with the non-poisonous properties of the drug, that I have tried the effect of concentrated solutions of it upon myself. Commencing at first cautiously with a dose of fifteen minims every three hours. I have increased it from a tablespoonful to two tablespoonfuls (corresponding to one once of the drug). This dose, although repeated, at short intervals, produced not even the slightest effect upon the nerves, upon the pupil of the eye, and not much other than a stimulating effect upon the stomach and circulation. Similar experiments with the solution of the supposed crude alkaloid as prepared by Dr. Otts were made. A tablespoon of this solution gave not the least evidence of narcotism, although several times repeated. I do not but forward these results as showing conclusively that this weed is not poisonous to horses and cattle. The subject needs further study and close inspection, and is one the state of Kansas can well afford to spend money upon to secure the same."

Developing Heifers.

Few among even experienced farmers realize the importance of the treatment which a heifer with her first calf receives during the first few months of her milk production, says a bulletin of the American Devon Cattle Club. The influence of this period of milking on her after career is important, and should be carefully noted by every breeder of general purpose animals. The usual method with men who keep common grade stock for dairy purposes is to turn the young heifer loose in the herd with a bull running at large, so that she very soon becomes pregnant. With the breeder of blood cattle this procedure is only modified by the fact that the bull is often kept in an enclosure. The desire to secure a rapid increase of progeny induces the owner to let the young cow take bull very soon after dropping her calf. The effects of this treatment will be manifest after a moment's reflection. Before the processes of lactation have been fully developed a second process is introduced into the system of the heifer, and that second process is adverse to the production of milk. The energies of the cow are turned to the growing of the young calf which she is now carrying in its first stages. How intense this new direction of the vital forces is, let any one learn from the lesson of the like process in the human subject. In further confirmation, let every farmer recall the rapidity with which his cows fail in milk after the process of gestation has well set in.

One great secret of the development of a heifer for the dairy consists in putting off the return of progeny for a period of not less than four months and better for six months after the birth of first calf. This leaves all the energies of the cow free to spend themselves in milk production When a heifer first comes to her milk, the milk glands which constitute the udder are in an undeveloped condition. With these, as with all other organs, growth is stimulated by use. Everything should be done now to secure an abundant and prolonged flow of milk. If the udder should be congested and hard, it is better to let the calf suck the cow for a period sufficient to secure a perfectly healthy condition at this point. During this period the mother should have stimulating food. If the udder is well from the start she should have nothing more stimulating than wheat bran in moderate quantity. We have seen valuable heifers permanently deprived of part of the udder by failure to observe the necessity of securing perfect freedom from inflammation, and from traces of hardness before beginning to feed grain.

While the calf sucks the cow, care must be taken to draw away every drop of milk not taken by the calf, and as soon us the udder is in perfect order, let the calf be weaned or removed to another mother. It will be fortunate for the future of the heifer if she has dropped her young just before grass time. This is the chief argument for arranging matters so that cows come in during April and May. The flush grass of the early season is just the food for our purpose. With this give a good dash of wheat bran, and after a while, a mixture of wheat bran, corn meal, and gluten or linseed oil meal, using judgment based on careful observation of the milk increase by daily weighing. Oats may be substituted for corn meal. A good mixture is in the proportion of two pounds corn meal or oats, two gluten or linseed oil meal, four of wheat bran. The feed may rise from four pounds to eight per day, according to apparent need. Be sure your heifer has abundant good grass and clear water. Watch her closely, spare no pains, for this is a critical period. Delay the test of your heifers for butter from week to week, as long as the weight of milk continues to increase. When it seems to have reached its maximum, spread out your milk well in shallow pans, at a temperature as near as possible to sixty degrees and see how much butter you can make in a week.* We know of a heifer with her first calf, a three year old, that has been milking about six weeks, and is now giving under this treatment, thirty-five pounds of milk per day and seems not to have reached her limit. Another heifer illustrates the result of early pregnancy. She had dropped her calf and had been brought to giving twenty-five pounds of milk per day, with promise of much greater yield, when she was accidentally served by a bull before the herdsman noticed that she was in heat. Her milk began to drop immediately and no effort has sufficed to bring back her flow. This case was aggravated by an inflamed condition of the udder and loss of appetite for the period, which made a temporary reduction of feed necessary. But though the cow is now in perfect condition no efforts secure a return of the milk. She is making a calf and that ends her development for this year. Another year will be begun under the disadvantage of this precedent, but with care it may not be too late to secure gratifying results. In any case, we do not believe this cow will do what she would have done but for her mishap. In general the practice of having dairy cows served soon after dropping their calves is a bad one. It tends to establish the habit of a short milking period, as well as diminished flow. Once in a full year should be considered often enough for a milker to bear a calf and for younger cows once in from fourteen to sixteen months. Older cows that may be considered fully developed and of established habit, cows eight or ten years of age, may, if their calves are of great value, be put to rapid breeding; and if any cows are to be used for sucking calves these should be selected. For the rest, calves may suck cows that are about to be dried, provided the milkman makes sure that their udders are thoroughly emptied.
